In conclusion, it remains only to point to measures that might yet be adopted to stay the progress of Russia, to avert her absorption of the northern provinces of Asia Minor, and to prevent the dismemberment of Persia and Afghanistan. A peaceable solution of the Eastern Question seems still to be within the bounds of possibility. England's Protectorate over Asia Minor should be no longer a dead-letter; reforms in Armenia and other provinces should be insisted upon, the exactions and oppressions of local officials repressed, and public works inaugurated, which, while developing the resources of the country, would give employment to the people, and lead to the amelioration of their condition. Such works as the Euphrates Valley Railway, the Jordan and Dead Sea Canal, the colonisation of Jews in Syria, are some among the useful schemes for which capital would be found in this country, if only the encouragement and support of the British Government could be secured for their promotion. By such peaceful measures a moral influence would be exercised for the good of the people, that would secure their good-will and remove all excuse for the further advance of Russia in Asia Minor. As regards Persia and Afghanistan, the time has arrived when Russia should be called upon to assist in establishing a modus vivendi for Russia in Asia, Persia, Afghanistan, and British India. At a conference between the four Powers, let the limits of Persian and Afghan territory be definitively fixed, and the frontiers of Russia in Asia and of British India be clearly defined. Then let the territories of Persia and Afghanistan be declared a neutral zone, barred alike to Russia and to the British Government of India, Persia and Afghanistan at the same time accepting the frontiers assigned them; any future encroachment on the part of either Power to be resisted by the joint and combined action of the other three parties to the engagement. Let there be combined action also in regard to the construction of any railway from the frontier of Russia, or of British India, through Persia and Afghanistan. Looking at the aggressive policy of Russia in Asia, and at the antecedents of Persia and Afghanistan, such a peaceable solution of the question, as here proposed, may seem Utopian and impracticable; but in no other way does a peaceable solution appear possible. Russia is narrowing the limits of territory that separate her frontiers from those of British India, and she may soon reach what has been termed the Gate of India,—Herat; the danger of her proximity is imminent, and if peaceable measures cannot be adopted to check her further progress, there can only be an appeal to the arbitrament of war. But a rupture with Russia would be a great calamity that would severely strain the resources of England and of British India, and would materially retard the progress of the latter country. It would necessitate Naval operations on a very extensive scale in the Baltic and Black Seas; the employment of the largest army England could despatch to the shores of Asia Minor (when our troops would meet a disciplined foe far different to the rabble force lately encountered in Egypt); the employment of naval and perhaps of land forces along the shores of the Persian Gulf, to enforce the neutrality of Persia, and the massing of troops on a larger scale than ever yet attempted along the frontier of British India. By peaceful means, if possible, or by the alternative of force if necessary, the further advance of Russia towards India must be stayed: the peace and security of our Eastern Empire demand it. England is a mother of nations, and her true policy may be expressed in the one word "Empire," not in the greedy sense of further annexation, but in the exercise of a supreme influence for the good and welfare of the countries in connection with her; that is, in the maintenance of her Colonies and dependencies, in the development of their power, and the extension of their commerce, for in their strength and prosperity lies much of the greatness of the mother country. But, unfortunately, in the heat of political strife, so rampant in this country, imperial questions are either overlooked or subordinated to party interests. Well may every Englishman echo the words of Professor Goldwin Smith,—"Would that our statesmen might think of the future of the Empire, and not of their own position at the next election!"

THE HIGHLAND BONNET.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—It requires a very hard knock at the knocker of the War Office to make any one answer one. When the answer comes in reply to questions asked, the reply, to my mind, is far from satisfactory. Now, let us look into the famous report quoted triumphantly by the Secretary of State for War; he says that two distinguished officers signed the paper recommending the abolition of the feather bonnet. Maybe that two officers did sign, but under what circumstances, Sir? How can the Scottish people accede to this so-called settling the bonnet question? Only two Scotch officers out of the number, a committee composed of some ten officers or so, signed, as far as I know. We complain, and justly, that the voices and the unwilling hands that signed the paper do not represent the opinion on the subject in the ranks, or of Highland or Scottish officers. We would humbly submit that a committee be appointed in all fairness to get at the opinions and experience of a large number of officers who are in favour of the retention and against the abolition of the bonnet. It is notorious that a large majority of Scottish officers are in favour of the retention of this head-dress. Now, how can the Secretary of State triumphantly point to these unwilling signers' signatures, when I have been told by one at least, how unwelcome are such changes. These changes are made under pressure, and we object to pressure strongly.—I am, &c.,

14 Beaufort Gardens, Feb. 21. ARCHIBALD CAMPBELL.

P.S.—Lord Morley has stated that the officers' feather-bonnet costs £15. In answer, I say that at a tailor's it costs £13; but—and here comes the point—all officers have it in their power to buy a bonnet well set-up at a cost of from £6 to £8. This can be done by buying the feathers at Aden, and getting the bonnets set-up by regimental tailors. There are other errors in his lordship's speech. The statement he made which evoked "Hear, hear," from their Lordships, that the feather bonnet was a constant source or cause of stoppages from soldiers to keep it up or in repair, is only a greater argument in favour of the supply of these bonnets being in the hands of the regiments. They will readily supply the bonnets. When supplied thus regimentally, the bonnet only costs the soldier 2s. 6d. for setting-up at the end of 10 years; then it lasts him for the rest of his term, 21 years in all. We all sympathise with calls on the purses of officers, but it so happens the feather-bonnet cannot be called a heavy item, if supplied, as it should be, regimentally. The constant changes in gold lace and endless "whigmaleries," to use a Scotch word, have entailed far heavier expense than any we Scots propose in the retention of the bonnet.

SIR,—Permit me to reply to the irascible but not judicial letter of Lord Archibald Campbell in your issue of the 16th inst. I do not at present feel at all "demolished;" nor do I feel that a clerical error, a mere slip of the pen, renders me "inaccurate." I do not know what Lord Archibald Campbell's object may be—apparently, merely to play the porcupine, or the Scotch thistle—but my own was simply to aid searchers after truth, to the best of my poor power, to ascertain what was the original bonnet of our Scotch Highland regiments. Lord Archibald Campbell has not disputed nor controverted one scrap of the facts adduced by me. He has simply seized hold of a verbal inaccuracy, and thus endeavoured to shunt the discussion off the main line altogether. As I have already stated in my letter to the Standard, referred to by Lord Archibald Campbell, Francis Grose (our most reliable military antiquarian of the eighteenth century) gives careful illustrations of the uniforms of the several grades in the 42nd Highlanders in 1786, and he had himself seen the regiment as early as 1746, or within seven years of its first raising. The bonnet in those illustrations is for all ranks a flat bonnet, with the upper part projecting over the band, in fact, the ordinary Scotch flat bonnet; the officer alone is distinguished by a straight single plume, like an eagle's feather. Allow me to add to this information that in Fullerton's "Scottish Highlands" is a copy of a portrait specially painted for Lord John Murray, in the 42nd in 1745, and Colonel of the regiment. This painting represents Private Farquhar Shaw, of the 42nd, in uniform. The uniform corresponds in every particular with that in Grose's illustrations, excepting that Private Shaw has also a single upright feather, while Grose's private men have no feather. In the case of all the bonnet has a bow-cockade on the left front. Anderson, in his valuable publication of Drummond's "Highland Arms," mentions an engraving of a Highlander on a powder-flask, dated 1654, in "a flat bonnet with a feather." In the "Military Journal" of 1801, Highland soldiers are represented in a bonnet almost the same as the modern one, except that the feathers are shorter. To further elucidate the matter, I would refer those who have more leisure than myself to two other sources of decisive information. There is in the British Museum (and I think that there used to be a copy in the Prince Consort's library at Aldershot) a series of coloured engravings of the uniforms of the Army, published in 1742. There used also to be at Windsor Castle some excellent paintings of the various uniforms of some five or ten years later. Surely reference to such indisputable authorities as those I have specified ought to set at rest the point at issue, without going back to Pontius Pilate's Guards or Noah's Scotch Marines. My private opinion is strongly in favour of the retention of any national dress, as highly conducive to esprit de corps. The only question with which I have attempted to deal is what that national dress was, in the case of the earlier Highland regiments.—I am, &c.,

Woolwich, Feb. 18. CLIFFORD WALTON.

Obituary.

Admiral Sir Thomas Sabine Pasley, K.C.B., of the Craig, Dumfriesshire, died on Feb. 13 at Moorhill, Shedfield, Hants, aged 80. The gallant Admiral was the only son of Major John Sabine, of the Grenadier Guards, by his marriage with Maria, elder daughter of Admiral Sir Thomas Pasley, K.C.B., and was born in Dec., 1804. He succeeded his maternal grandfather as second baronet under a special remainder in 1808, and assumed by Royal permission in the following year, in pursuance of the will of his grandfather, the surname and arms of Pasley. Sir Thomas Pasley entered the Navy in Aug., 1817, and passed for midshipman in Dec., 1818. He was promoted to lieut. in March, 1824, and com. in Sept., 1828. He became a capt. in 1831, and served with distinction in the Black Sea during the Crimean War, after which he was appointed Superintendent of Devonport Dockyard, and subsequently, till March, 1869, held the post of Naval Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth. He attained the rank of rear-admiral in 1856, was promoted to vice-admiral in 1863, and an admiral in 1866. He was nominated a Knight Commander of the Order of the Bath (Military Division) in 1873. Sir Thomas, who was a magistrate for Westmoreland and Hampshire, married, in 1826, Jane Matilda Lilley, eldest daughter of the late Rev. Montague John Wynyard, but was left a widower in 1869. He had a family of seven sons and four daughters. His eldest son, Thomas Malcolm Sabine, capt., R.N., died in 1870, having married Emma Louisa, daughter of the late Mr. John Losh, of Trinidad, and left with other issue a son and heir, Thomas Edward Sabine, born in 1863, who now succeeds his grandfather as third baronet. The funeral took place in Shedfield Churchyard, near Botley, on Feb. 18. Besides the sons and daughters of the deceased, there was a large assembly of relatives and friends; among the former were Gen. Sir George Malcolm, K.C.B., William Elphinstone Malcolm, Esq., Col. R. Bingham, Lieut.-Gen. Henry Wynyard, and H. Jenkyns, Esq., C.B. Admiral Sir Geoffrey Phipps Hornby, K.C.B., Admiral the Hon. Francis Egerton, Admiral Phillimore, and Capts. P. H. Colomb, C. J. Rowley, and Charles Talbot-Ponsonby, R.N., acted as pall-bearers, the pall being the Union Jack. Admiral Lord Alcester, G.C.B., and J. Carpenter Garnier, Esq., M.P., were unavoidably absent.

Admiral Charles Ramsay Drinkwater-Bethune, C.B., of Balfour, Fifeshire, died on Thursday morning, at his residence in Queensberry Place, South Kensington. He was the second but eldest surviving son of the late Col. John Drinkwater, C.B., F.S.A., of Thorncroft, Surrey, some time Comptroller of Army Accounts, by marriage with Eleanor, daughter of Mr. C. Congalton, of Congalton, Midlothian, and was born in 1802. He entered the Navy at an early age, became captain in 1830, and served with distinction in China, taking part in the capture of Canton in 1841, and being mentioned in despatches. He had directed the survey of the entrances and channels of the Yang-tse-Kiang, thus facilitating the ascent of the river, and directly leading to a favourable termination of the war. For this service he was nominated a Companion of the Order of the Bath (Military Division). He was promoted to the rank of rear-admiral in 1855, and became vice-admiral in 1862, and admiral in 1866, and was placed on the Retired List in 1870. The gallant admiral, who was a magistrate and deputy-lieutenant for the county of Fife, assumed the name of Bethune in 1837, on his mother inheriting the estates of her brother, Mr. Gilbert Congalton-Bethune. He was a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society and of the Royal Astronomical Society. He married, in 1846, Frances Cecilia, only child of Mr. H. E. Stables, of Clapham.

Vice-Admiral Henry Carr Glyn, C.B., C.S.I., died on Saturday last, at the family residence in Eaton Place, from an attack of peritonitis. On Saturday evening, Feb. 9, he dined with some friends at the Marlborough Club in cheerful spirits. The following day he was taken ill, and the symptoms continued to increase in intensity till Friday, when his condition excited the gravest anxiety. The late Admiral Glyn was the fourth son of George Carr, first Lord Wolverton, and his wife Marianne, daughter of the late Mr. Pascoe Grenfell, of Taplow, Bucks, and was born April 17, 1829. He entered the Navy as a volunteer of the 1st class on board her Majesty's ship America in 1844, in which he served on the Pacific station. After this he served on the East Indies and China station, during which time he was engaged in the suppression of piracy on the China coast, and was under the command of Com. Edmond Lyons, of her Majesty's ship Pirate. It happened that on one occasion during his service in those waters he came prominently under the notice of the authorities for his gallant conduct in boarding a pirate junk. Com. Lyons' brig, during an engagement, happened to sheer off from the pirate junk which had been boarded, and young Henry Glyn with his commander and about a dozen men were left on board the junk to fight the crew and take the ship, in which enterprise they were, after some hard fighting, successful. During the early days of the Crimean War, the late Admiral was sent with Admiral Dundas, Prince Leiningen, and about 30 seamen to the Danube, and after many engagements with the enemy his conduct and that of the Prince were brought to the notice of the authorities, with the result of their being rewarded by the Sultan with the only gold medals which were given to officers of their rank. After this he served during the remainder of the campaign in the Naval Brigade, and having been promoted he returned to England. Shortly after the conclusion of the Crimean War, he was sent to the West Coast of Africa in command of H.M.S. Hecate, from which station, in consequence of illness derived from climatic causes, he was invalided home. He subsequently commanded H.M.S. Coquette in the Mediterranean, and during the New Zealand War of 1860 H.M.S. Miranda, whence he was promoted to post captain. Afterwards he commanded H.M.S. Doris on the North African station, and also the Warrior, ironclad, in the Channel Squadron. It will be remembered that as a captain he was entrusted with the command of H.M.S. Serapis when she conveyed the Prince of Wales to India, and for the tact and judgment which he showed on that occasion he was rewarded with the Order of the Star of India. Subsequent to this, he held the post of second-in-command of the Channel Squadron, and afterwards the senior command. Admiral Glyn, both as a young officer and subsequently in posts of command, was always very popular in the service. His loss will be much felt, not only by his comrades, but also by the many friends he had made in other spheres of life. He was a Naval aide-de-camp to the Queen from 1873 till he became rear-admiral in Sept. 1877, and had been a vice-admiral since June, 1882. He was nominated a Companion of the Order of the Bath in 1875, and a Companion of the Order of the Star of India in 1876. The late admiral married, Sept. 23, 1858, Rose, eldest daughter of the late Rev. Denis Mahony, of Dromore Castle, county Kerry. She died in July, 1870, leaving two sons and two daughters. A funeral service was celebrated on Wednesday at the Parish Church, Kensington, for the deceased officer. Among those who attended were H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, H.R.H. the Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne) and the Marquis of Lorne, H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge, the Marquis of Hamilton, Lord Dorchester, Lord Charles Beresford, Lord Carrington, Hon. A. Yorke, Lord Colville of Culross, Major-Gen. Reilly, Col. Farquharson, Mr. P. Currie, Mr. Francis Knollys, Sir Algernon Borthwick, Admiral Sir Leopold M'Clintock, Admiral Sir William Mends, Sir Thomas Brassey, M.P., Capt. Tryon, R.N., C.B., Col. Sturt, Mr. Cockerell, Mr. A. Montgomery, Col. A. Ellis, Col. Bateson, and Mr. Jervoise Smith. At the hour mentioned the Hon. and Rev. E. Carr Glyn, vicar of Kensington, and brother of Admiral Carr Glyn, the Rev. Canon Duckworth, the Hon. and Rev. Francis Pelham, and the Rev. T. Teignmouth Shore, went to the entrance of the churchyard to meet the coffin, which had been brought from the family residence in Eaton Place on a funeral car, the coffin being covered with the Union Jack and white ensign. The coffin was borne into the church by eight bluejackets from the Royal Naval Barracks, Sheerness, and was followed by Mr. Henry R. and Mr. Frederick Carr Glyn (sons), Lord Wolverton, Hon. Pascoe Carr Glyn, and Hon. Sydney Carr Glyn, M.P. (brothers), H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, Admiral Lord Alcester, Captain Mahoney, and Col. Stanley Clarke. The coffin was placed on a Gothic bier, which was nearly hidden by the numerous floral wreaths, crosses, &c., chiefly composed of white flowers, sent as tributes of affection and regard. The outer coffin was of polished oak with brass mountings, the plate on the lid bearing the following inscription:—"Vice-Admiral the Hon. Henry Carr Glyn, C.B., C.S.I. Born April 17, 1829. Died February 16, 1884." Vice-Admiral Glyn was buried on Thursday at Starbridge, Dorsetshire.

Major-Gen. P. Anstruther, C.B., died on Monday at Pitcorthie, near Fife. The deceased was the eldest surviving son of the late Sir Alexander Anstruther, of Thirdpart. He was born in the year 1807. He was educated at Westminster School and at the Royal Military College, Addiscombe. He entered the Hon. East India Company's service in 1823, and retired as Major-Gen. in 1858, having served with distinction in 1841 in China, where he was taken prisoner and suffered six months' captivity. He was afterwards engaged under Lord Gough at the battles of Chillianwallah and Goozerat in 1849, and under Sir Harry Smith in the Kaffir war in 1851. He also took part in the Burmese expedition of 1853.

Capt. William Ruston, retired qrmr. of the Royal Marines, died at Plymouth at an advanced age on the 15th inst. Capt. Ruston was serjt.-major of the Plymouth Division, and received one of the first commissions as qrmr. of the Portsmouth Division given from the ranks of the corps in June, 1846, retiring with the rank of capt. in Aug. 1857.

Capt. Kennedy, R.N., commanding the Lord Warden, in response to the toast of "The Navy," made the following humorous speech at the Royal Scottish Academy's dinner last week:—"Certain alarmists are always crying out about the state of this branch of the service. They say we have no ships, no men, and no guns. Well, no doubt it would be all the better if we had more ships and more men, but still we manage to struggle on, and when the time came for action the Navy was always up to its duty. It was not for him to blow the trumpet of the Navy; but they had only to look at the newspapers to see what they could do, nobly supported as they were by a gallant corps but seldom mentioned—the Marines. It always struck him that the Marines were rather neglected. They were not sailors, and the Army would not own them; but as a matter of fact, they were the finest soldiers the country had got. They had a higher standard than any regiment; the only people who could compare with them in physique were the Naval Reserve of Shetland, who averaged 5 ft. 8½ in. He was on a tour of inspection the other day, and he endeavoured to get some Scottish fisher-boys for the Navy, for they had not got many Scotchmen in the Navy, more was the pity. He went down to Shetland to talk to them on the subject, but instead of flocking to the standard, they scuttled into the country, and said the press-gang was coming round amongst them. He was assured the other day that the Army and the Navy were both seriously deteriorated, for it was said a soldier had been walking down Princes' Street with an umbrella over his head, and a sailor was following close behind him with a pair of spectacles. Could they fancy a more humiliating sight? The only conclusion he could come to was that the soldier must have had his sweetheart somewhere handy, and probably the sailor was looking out for one. It had always been a regret to him that the Navy was not sufficiently known in Scotland, and it would be much better for all if the Naval uniform were more familiar. On his round of the Coastguard he was recently taken for General Booth. On another occasion he was taken for 'No. 1,' and that, he thought, rather rough upon him. But the climax was reached at Inverness, when a tourist patted him on the back, and asked him to see his luggage into the compartment. Well, notwithstanding the lamentable condition in which some had pictured the Navy, he hoped they should be to the fore when the time came."

The Army.

2nd Dragoon Guards (Queen's Bays). Lieut.-Col. B. Edmonds, captain on the Retired List, died at Penrith on the 16th inst., aged 58 years. The deceased served with the regiment in the Mutiny Campaign of 1857-59, including the siege and capture of Lucknow, the Oude Campaign, and Trans-Gogra affair at Bungoan. He obtained his commission, April 27, 1860; became Lieut., March 21, 1865; Capt., April 1, 1870; Major, Feb. 2, 1878; and Lieut.-Col., July 1, 1881.

6th Dragoon Guards. Lieut. Des Vœux has arrived home from India in H.M.S. Euphrates.

1st Royal Dragoons. Capt. Amyatt-Burney is about to exchange into the 52nd Light Infantry with Capt. Gough.

8th Hussars. Capt. Wood has applied for leave to England.

10th Hussars. The head-quarters and service troops arrived at Suakim on the 19th inst., 350 strong, under Lieut.-Col. Wood. The regiment has landed and been mounted, and is said to look "fit and serviceable."

12th Lancers. Lieut. Churchill, officiating adjutant, had a serious fall from his horse at the Bangalore Camp of Exercise. He was picked up insensible, and has since been suffering from concussion of the brain.

14th Hussars. Capt. Wynter has arrived home from India in H.M.S. Euphrates.

18th Hussars. Major Gould is about to join the Pay Department, on probation.

19th Hussars. A paper-chase was arranged and carried out on Saturday, the 9th inst., by the members of the serjeants' mess of this regiment. Invitations were issued to the serjeants' messes of all the corps stationed in or near Cairo. The meet, at which about 120 were present, including Col. Webster, Col. Barrow, and other officers of the regiment, took place at the "cross-roads" at Abbassiyeh. The chase commenced punctually at 3 p.m., the two "hares" having been given fifteen minutes' start. During the early part of the run the "hounds" kept well together, but after a short time they gradually began to disperse over the country, much to the surprise and apparent amusement of the natives. The running was kept up with great spirit and enthusiasm, until at last one hare was captured and then the other, about 4.30 p.m. The guests were invited to tea in the mess in Abbassiyeh Barracks, and about 140 sat down to a well-earned repast. To conclude the day's amusement, a "free-and-easy" was determined upon, and accordingly 180 availed themselves of the opportunity to pass the evening in this pleasant manner, representatives of every corps serving in Egypt being present. Under the chairmanship of Mr. Lima, the regimental serjt.-major, a thoroughly enjoyable evening was spent, and at 12, midnight, the party broke up, mutual healths having been drunk, and the many expressions of good wishes responded to in the usual manner. Great credit is due to the regimental serjt.-major and the committee for their admirable arrangements, by which everything turned out most satisfactorily from first to last.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

Col. B. L. Gordon, C.B., has proceeded from Dalhousie to Rangoon for duty.

Capt. C. H. Rickards has proceeded from Fort William to Rawul Pindee, and joined No. 2 (Mountain) Baty. 1st Brigade, Scottish Division.

Major R. H. W. Plunkett, Capts. T. E. Rowan, M. Beresford, and C. W. Kellie, and Lieuts. J. P. Vereker, W. L. H. Paget, E. M. Perceval, W. J. Rogers, and H. W. Addington, have arrived home from India in H.M.S. Euphrates.

Lieut. J. A. Labalmondière, R.A., has been appointed Acting Aide-de-Camp on the personal Staff of H.E. Sir James Fergusson, Governor of Bombay.

The following appointments have been made in India:—Major J. Keith, Deputy-Assist.-Adjt.-Gen., R.A., to officiate as Deputy-Adjt.-Gen., R.A., vice Col. T. E. Hughes, appointed Inspector-General of Ordnance (dated Jan. 1, 1884); Capt. R. H. S. Baker, R.H.A., to officiate as Deputy-Assist.-Adjt.-Gen., R.A., vice Major Keith (dated Jan. 1, 1884).

Lieut. E. A. Marrett, attached to No. 3 Field Baty. Hyderabad Contingent, has been appointed to the 4th Infantry Hyderabad Contingent, as a probationer for the S.C.

The following appointments and transfers of officers have been ordered, viz.:—Majors E. H. Murray, to L Baty. A Brig., vice Major Chaldecott, resigned his appointment in the R.H.A.; C. W. Long, to the Riding Establishment, vice the Hon. A. Stewart, retired; Capt. J. Leach, to M Baty. B Brig., vice Domville, promoted; Brevet Major H. F. Cowan, to H. Baty. A Brig., vice L. H. Browne, promoted; Lieut. G. H. M'Laughlin, to H Baty. A Brig., vice A. Bell-Irving, promoted; Major P. F. M. Baddeley, from No. 9 Baty. 1st Brig. Western Division, to Depôt, Scottish Division; Capts. W. W. M. Seymour, to the Depôt, Lancashire Division, and D. M. Waterfield, from Depôt, Lancashire Division, to No. 9 Baty. 1st Brig. Western Division.

2nd Queen's (Royal West Surrey Regiment). The order for the transfer of Major Trench, Deputy-Assist.-Qrmr.-Gen., from the Lahore Division to the Gwalior District of the Bengal Army, has been cancelled.

9th Norfolk Regiment. Capt. Allcard, 2nd Batn., has arrived home from India in H.M.S. Euphrates.

10th Lincolnshire Regiment. Lieut.-Col. Stockwell, 2nd Batn., is named for the command of the Landour Convalescent Depôt. Lieut. Rawlinson, 2nd Batn., has been appointed an extra aide-de-camp on the personal staff of the Lieut.-Governor of Bengal.

11th Devonshire Regiment. Lieut. Jackson, 2nd Batn., has arrived home from India in H.M.S. Euphrates.

12th Suffolk Regiment. Capt. Deane, 1st Batn., is ordered home from India, to join the depôt at Bury St. Edmunds.

14th West Yorkshire Regiment. Lieut. Barchard, 2nd Batn., has arrived home from India in H.M.S. Euphrates.

18th Royal Irish Regiment. The 2nd Batn. is still in readiness at Aldershot to embark at short notice for the Mediterranean.

26th Cameronians (Scottish Rifles). Capt. Low has arrived home from India in H.M.S. Euphrates, to join on promotion from the 90th Foot.

30th East Lancashire Regiment. Lieut.-Col. Campbell vacates the command of the Landour Convalescent Depôt this month. Major Cook has been granted leave from India to England for 12 months, on urgent private affairs. Lieut. Finch has arrived home from India in H.M.S. Euphrates.

31st East Surrey Regiment. The head-quarters and service companies are still in readiness at Aldershot to embark for service in the Mediterranean.

34th Border Regiment. Major Malcolm and Lieut. Nash have arrived home from India in H.M.S. Euphrates.

35th West Riding Regiment. Capt. Curran has been granted leave from India to England for eight months, on urgent private affairs. Lieut. Price has resigned his probationary appointment for the Indian S.C.

38th Staffordshire Regiment. The head-quarters and service companies embarked at Malta, on Tuesday, en route to Alexandria.

39th Dorsetshire Regiment. Major Wynen has arrived home from India in H.M.S. Euphrates, to rejoin from Staff employ.

41st Welsh Regiment. Major J. H. Gordon, son of Surg.-Gen. H. G. Gordon, M.D., died at St. Andrews, N.B., on the 17th inst. The deceased entered the Army Oct. 9, 1869; became Lieut., May 31, 1871; Capt., July 4, 1879; and Major, May 23, 1882.

42nd Black Watch (Royal Highlanders). The regiment—strength, 750—left Cairo on Saturday, en route to Tokar. French journalists have been studying the names of British regiments. The result is that the Débats announces that the "Black Watch" is La Garde Noire, and consists of negroes who have been removed from Cairo against their will. This is the suggested cause of the recent insubordination in the Egyptian army. But the Débats is kind enough to doubt it, "since the negro soldiers were far from living in harmony with the rest of the garrison, and especially with the inhabitants of Cairo." This wonderful familiarity with our affairs in Egypt naturally entitles the opinion of foreign journalists to greater respect in this country than that of her Majesty's Ministers.

44th Essex Regiment. The head-quarters and service companies embarked at Gibraltar, on Thursday, for conveyance to Malta.

ROYAL MARINES.

An Order in Council of Feb. 2, 1884, revising the regulations for discharge by purchase from the Royal Marine Corps, has been promulgated, to apply only to those men who enlist from that date, all others to remain under the previous rules laid down in Art. 1,140 of the Queen's Regulations and Admiralty Instructions of 1879. The following is the revised scale, viz.:—

	R.M.A.	R.M.L.I.
Under three months' service	£10	£10
Over three months and under 12 years	25	20

No allowance is to be made for good-conduct badges, and the £1 re-engagement fee is to be refunded by a purchaser on his discharge. This is a much more simple arrangement than the complicated scale which will be still in force for those who enlisted prior to the date named, there being no less than thirty heads of payments in the old system, as compared with four in the new, and the latter also gives men the advantage of a free discharge one year earlier than they could have claimed under the previous provisions.

Major H. Everett, retired, R.M.A., and Major W. H. V. Tom, Plymouth Division, R.M.L.I., retired, are to be allowed to assume the honorary rank of lieut.-cols., dating from Jan. 26.

Major Wells, Plymouth Division, R.M.L.I., is under orders to proceed to the depôt, Walmer, in the place of Capt. Nepean, previously detailed.

Major Rose embarked in the Poonah, on the 10th inst., in command of the battalion for Suakim.

The following officers have been ordered to proceed to the depôt, Walmer, for duty:—Capts. Pyne and Newington, and Lieut. Parish, from the Portsmouth Division.

Capt. Hamilton has proceeded to Cambridge, to relieve Capt. Hobart, in charge of the recruiting station.

There has been a slight outbreak of scarlet fever at the Royal Marine Depôt, Walmer. One officer (Lieut. Wylde) and about 15 men are in hospital with it now.

The under-mentioned gentlemen, having been appointed lieuts. in the R.M.L.I., have been posted to the divisions notified against their names:—Mr. J. C. Keown, Chatham; Mr. L. F. J. C. R. Cavendish, Portsmouth; Mr. E. Yorke-Daniel, Portsmouth; Mr. A. M. Connolly, Plymouth.

Royal Monmouthshire Engineers. The hon. coloneley is vacant by the death of Col. H. H. Clifford, which occurred at St. Ronan's, Torquay, on the 12th inst., at the age of 78 years.

"A Tory" writes:—"It is to be hoped that a question will soon be asked in Parliament as to the state of recruiting for the Militia. I strongly suspect that some startling disclosures would be made as to the result of the regulation issued last autumn respecting the 'Queen's Shilling' now given on enlistment, and that the return of recruits up to this date would hardly compare favourably with that of last year. I trust that some one will take this matter up before it is too late to recruit the Militia up to strength for this year's training, for if things are allowed to go on as they are, the Militia battalions will soon be as weak as the skeletons of the Line. I know of one or two regiments which have never had any difficulty in getting recruits under the old system, but who, under the new, will most probably be 150 under strength on the day of assembly this year."

THE VOLUNTEERS.

The following District Order has been issued to officers commanding Volunteer Corps in the Home District by Col. the Hon. P. Methuen, C.B., A.A.G.:—"The Lieutenant-General wishes the officers commanding Volunteer regiments in his district to forward to this office by March 1 the number of officers and men wishing to take part in a marching column on the Friday and Saturday preceding Easter Monday. This marching column will only take place in the event of a Volunteer Review being authorised to be held at Portsmouth on Easter Monday. The arrangements will be similar to those made for the march in 1882. So soon as instructions have been received that an Easter Monday Review is to be held, further and more definite orders will be issued. The list of officers should be nominal, and in the case of field-officers should show the date of their promotion. The above orders, as regards the returns called for, are applicable to the corps proceeding to Chatham, Dover, and Aldershot, who are desirous to form part of marching columns."

A memorandum, just issued from the Home District Office, Horse Guards, states that the "Lieutenant-General commanding the Home District understands it is the wish of a large number of officers commanding Volunteer corps in the district to hold a meeting to take into consideration the organisation, equipment, and other questions in connection with the Volunteer Force." It is announced that a meeting for this purpose will be held shortly at the Levée Rooms, Horse Guards, Whitehall, when officers commanding corps are requested to attend.

NOTES FROM ALDERSHOT.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

Outpost duty on a minor scale and route-marching are still being proceeded with here. Strong detachments of recruits from the depôts having recently joined the various battalions, the hammering of the raw material goes on unceasingly on all the regimental parade-grounds, in order that as many trained soldiers as possible may be available by April 1 next.

Of the twelve non-commissioned officers required as drill-instructors for the Egyptian troops under Sirdar Wood's command, but three have been selected from those who volunteered in the Aldershot Division, viz., Serjeants Stewart, 85th, and Barratt and Coppleston, 3rd Battalion, Rifle Brigade.

A most successful concert was given in the Officers' Club on Monday last by the members of the Officers' Music Society, for the benefit of the Female Hospital, the funds of which valuable institution are very low at present. There was a large attendance of officers and ladies, and Lieutenant-Colonel Cleather, Inspector of Gymnasia, the promoter of the concert, has been enabled to hand over a handsome sum to the treasurer of the hospital.

A second series of lectures on military subjects has been announced in Divisional Orders. The first of the series will be delivered on Monday next, in the Prince Consort's Library, by Major T. E. A. Clayton, R.A., Professor of Fortification and Artillery at the Staff College, on "The Functions and Efficiency of Field Artillery." These lectures have been confined to artillery subjects since their commencement in November last, and, as evidence of the little interest taken in them by the officers of the Division, less than a dozen of all branches attended the lecture on "Gun Ammunition" on the 11th inst.

In accordance with instructions received on the subject, a board, consisting of Lieutenant-General Sir F. FitzWygram and two field officers of cavalry, assembled at the Staff College, Camberley, yesterday, to inspect the riding of the officers who joined the Staff College on the 1st inst. The proceedings of the board were forwarded direct to the Director-General of Military Education.

Surgeon H. C. Gordon has proceeded to the West Coast of Africa, and Surgeon W. H. Briggs to Egypt, for duty.

Lieutenant Elrington, R.E., has been ordered to Clifton, Bristol, for duty in connection with the Ordnance Survey.

The following is a list of successful candidates for the Indian Medical Service at the recent examination:—1. J. H. T. Walsh, 2,564 marks; 2. H. Hendley, 2,110; 3. H. E. Banatvala, 2,102; 4. G. H. Fink, 2,071; 5. W. G. P. Alpin, 2,040.

We are informed that there are three Old Derbeians in the football "eleven" of the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, viz., Messrs. A. F. Bacon, H. C. Bernard, and E. B. Farquharson, all of whom played in last year's Derby School eleven. In the match Sandhurst v. Old Harrovians, Feb. 16, the former won by three goals to nil,—a feat which is an ample proof of their strength. We may add that Mr. Cyril H. Roe, gentleman cadet, of Woolwich, and another Derbeian, has been acting as captain of the football team of the Royal Military Academy.

The Government have at last decided upon taking active steps with a view to defending the principal ports in the United Kingdom from the dangers of foreign invasion or bombardment. Very recently a meeting of her Majesty's Ministers took place at the War Office to consider the question raised by the reports of Lord Carnarvon's Commission and Lord Morley's Committee, and it is reported that the Government have determined to ask Parliament for a vote of nearly £2,000,000 for this purpose.

Army & Navy Gazette.
LONDON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 1884.

SLAVERY has been re-established openly, by public proclamation, throughout a territory larger than Germany, France, and Spain, put together, by a General of the British Army, acting on behalf of the British Government. The traffic in slaves has also been sanctioned in the Soudan. But this is not all. By one stroke of the pen, General Gordon, on behalf of the British Government, has recast into bondage every man, woman, and child who was once a slave, but has for years past been free, or who would have been free in 1889, had the treaty made by this country been enforced. This is clear from the text of the proclamation, which runs thus:—"I am desirous to restore your happiness and tranquillity. I know you are very grieved at the prohibition of the slave traffic, which by convention is forbidden under heavy penalties. I have decided to permit the same, and have ordered the town criers to give publicity to this decision, so that nobody can prevent you. Every one having domestic servants may consider them his property, and may dispose of them." And yet England maintains a Squadron on the East Coast of Africa to put down the slave trade! What we desire to know is, whether all the blood and treasure which has been spent so freely by this country to suppress slavery and the slave trade in every quarter of the globe is now "to be written off" the Ministerial ledger as "a dead loss;" and, if so, are Naval officers and men to continue risking their lives on behalf of "Liberty" and "Freedom," to no purpose? It was only the other day that poor Charley Brownrigg lost his life, when so gallantly doing his duty in the cause of freedom. But now this vile traffic in human flesh and blood has been legalised under the British flag, for is not General Gordon in the service of the Queen of England, and not in that of the Khedive of Egypt? At least, such was the Ministerial statement made last week in the House of Commons, the Government maintaining that even General Gordon's acceptance of the Governor-Generalship of the Soudan did not cause him to enter the service of the Khedive. Hence, General Gordon is under the British flag, and under that flag slavery has been proclaimed to be a legal institution. By what right, therefore, will the officers and men under the command of Rear-Admiral Sir William Hewett now interfere with the dhows carrying slaves for the markets of the Soudan? Has not the British Government, through General Gordon, publicly authorised these markets to be held? How, then, we ask, are British Naval officers to interfere? And if legal now, why not so in the past? Have not the owners of the dhows and slaves which have been captured in the past, have not the owners of West India plantations which have been ruined in the past, a good case for compensation now against the Government? True, the reinstitution of slavery in the Soudan is said, in extenuation of its having been authorised by Government, to be only a temporary measure. Admitting that to be the case, we ask again, are Naval officers to risk their lives while that temporary measure is in force? If not, orders to that effect should at once be sent to every Naval officer on the East and West Coasts of Africa. But, if the suppression of the slave trade is to continue,—that is to say, if England is to continue to hold her once proud position among the nations of the world, orders must at once be sent to General Gordon to withdraw his proclamation, and instead thereof, to prohibit the noxious traffic in every part of the Soudan. It is not at all likely, however, that either of these steps will be taken by the Government. The Ministry have determined to support General Gordon's policy, "slavery and all." The reason for their so doing is, that they hope by this means to delude the Soudanese into allowing the Egyptian garrisons to retire peaceably out of the country. Then England would be saved the cost of a military expedition to relieve them, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer may, perhaps, be able to make both ends meet, if not actually showing a surplus of revenue over expenditure. But this is an un-English policy. It is not straightforward. It has taken the country, nay, the whole world, by surprise. The news that General Gordon has issued a proclamation at Khartoum announcing that no restriction would be placed in future on the traffic in slaves throughout the Soudan, was received everywhere with consternation and incredulity. The Paris correspondent of the Morning Post telegraphed on Monday as follows:—"If this should turn out true, and M. Jules Ferry still proposes interfering in the Soudan, this is the moment, for nothing would arouse French enthusiasm more than a declaration by the Government to the effect that if England's representative in the Soudan proclaims the liberty of dealing in slaves, France will send her ships and her men to the Red Sea to enforce the treaty to which England, as well as Sardinia, placed her signature." Are we prepared for a great war in defence of the slave trade, after having striven for half a century to suppress it? To excuse General Gordon's act on the plea of expediency will hardly satisfy the civilised nations of Europe. To affirm that "no one is more sincere and thorough in his detestation of the trade than General Gordon; but no one is more ready to recognise facts and turn them to practical account, utterly regardless of purely sentimental considerations," is to admit that General Gordon, and through him, England, is deceiving the Soudanese, "to save expense," and, at the same time, offending the civilised nations of the world, in such manner as to give them just cause for quarrelling with this country, and for forcing its Government either to fight in support of its double-faced policy, or to retract, and eat humble-pie. Looking at this new departure from all sides, we can only say that we consider it, per se, the gravest mistake, not to use a harsher term, any Government could be guilty of. It places the Navy in a false position wherever the traffic in slaves exists, and forces us once more to ask whether the blood so freely and nobly shed during the past half-century by Naval officers and men is to be forgotten, and whether the treasure disbursed in putting down the Slave Trade is to be regarded as misspent? No excuse, however perfect, will palliate the fact that slavery, in any shape or form, domestic or otherwise, has been proclaimed to be legal, with the consent of the British Government, by a representative of England's Queen.

We understand that the India Council, startled by the unexpected intelligence of the Russian annexation of Merv, has had under consideration our position on the Indian frontier, and that the occupation of Kandahar, if not also of Herat, has been seriously discussed. The conclusion arrived at is that to occupy Herat would be an undertaking of so startling a nature as to be undesirable at the present juncture. Her Majesty's Government have, however, readily admitted the dangers which would result from a policy of complete inaction, and have communicated with Lord Ripon as to the steps he considers it expedient to take with a view to the reinforcement of the garrisons bordering on the North-West Frontier and the occupation of Kandahar. Orders, we believe, will therefore be issued for the movement of a strong body of troops for the protection of British interests in the event of unforeseen contingencies arising to necessitate immediate and decisive action.

H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief will hold a Levée at 1 o'clock on Tuesday next, at the Horse Guards, Whitehall, the number being limited to 150. Applications to attend should be addressed to the Military Secretary.

The Military Secretary will not hold a Levée on Tuesday, the 26th inst.

We understand that a feeling prevails among the Military authorities at the War Office that the days of regimental messes are numbered, owing to the expense they throw upon the modern subaltern on joining. Most of these officers are said to be gentlemen not possessed of private means. The substitute for the regimental will, it is said, most probably be a garrison mess. In such places as Aldershot, Shorncliffe, Colchester, Portsmouth, &c., where large bodies of troops are quartered, it is considered probable that several "consolidated" messes will be established, the desire being to save the regimental officer expense. This question was recently discussed in detail with an officer holding a high position at the Horse Guards, when the following facts were elicited. The regimental esprit de corps is regarded as a thing of the past, short service effectually preventing officers from keeping their men together for any lengthened period. But short service is looked upon as a necessity, the men, however, being allowed the option of enlisting for the longer term. Still, there being men who would never dream of enlisting right off for twelve years, and who would never enlist at all were it not for the opportunity given them by short service of passing into the Reserve after three years with the colours, short service must be maintained. Then, again, officers are now promoted by selection, and are sent from one regiment to another. They may at any moment be transferred from the battalion they joined on entering the service. These facts combined tend to make the old regimental feeling gradually pass away, and, in its place, officers begin to grumble at the expense of the mess system. In the Navy, each mess is supplied with plate by the Admiralty, and at the expiration of the ship's commission, which averages from three to four years, that plate is returned into store. Something of the same sort will, it is contended, have in time to be done for the Army. The question of what is to be done with the existing regimental plate will, most probably, be left to the officers to settle among themselves, but it will probably be transferred to the garrison messes. These reforms are not in immediate contemplation, but are regarded in the light of coming events, which have cast their shadows before them.

We hear that a feeling of the greatest uneasiness exists among Naval and Military officers in regard to the absolute security of their pensions, the idea prevailing that it is very possible that the Pension List will not be allowed to continue to exist and increase at its present rate much longer by a Radical Government, owing to the endeavours made by the present Ministry to curtail in every possible manner the non-effective votes of the Navy and of the Army. Hence the cause of so large a number of men commuting their pensions.

The Garrison Instructors from the principal Military stations in the United Kingdom have attended at Aldershot during the month, for the purpose of studying the construction of the new war model, and observing the mode of playing the game, so that a uniform system may be adopted at all home stations.

Lord John Manners was wrong to blame the Government as he did in his speech last Monday, in the House of Commons, for not having detached a force from Aden to Suakim. The troops at Aden are the 1st Battalion, York and Lancaster Regiment, the 4th Bombay Rifles, a camel battery (7-pr. guns), a garrison battery, and a small squadron of native cavalry. It would be dangerous to weaken this force, even as a temporary measure. Since the Egyptian war, the Arab tribes round Aden have been very unsettled, and are now showing signs of increased restlessness. Quite recently, General Blair sent a survey party into the territory of a neighbouring and hitherto friendly chief. The party was surrounded and fired on by Arab tribesmen, and with difficulty extricated itself without a serious collision. The despatch of a punitive expedition into the interior has for some time been contemplated by the Political Resident at Aden, and cannot be much longer postponed. The Settlement is secure on the land side from any Arab attack, but it is always in the power of the tribes to molest the convoys, which come in from the interior, and upon which the garrison and population depend for their daily supplies.

The modified experimental rifle (pattern 1883), which has undergone further modification, as a result of the experiments carried out at Aldershot last year, will be again tried during the approaching musketry season. The objection raised against this weapon, as being too complicated, has been, as far as possible, obviated in the present pattern. It is understood that the new rifle will be tried by various corps on its next issue, and not as last year, by one corps only. The rifle is sighted up to 2,000 yards.

Lieutenant St. Aubyn, Grenadier Guards, aide-de-camp to Major-General Earle, has gone to Suakim, on the Staff of Sir Redvers Buller. Lieutenant Rhodes, 1st Dragoons, who recently took up an appointment as part organiser of the Egyptian Constabulary, has gone to the front, as aide-de-camp to Brigadier Stewart.

When our daily papers reach Egypt, the officers of our Army of Occupation must sometimes be strangely puzzled with what they see in print under the head of "Military News." Here is the latest from the Daily News:—"General Davies accompanies General Graham, in case Sir Redvers Buller should not arrive in time,—a wise precaution. General Davies was one of the volunteers the Grenadier Guards gave to Lord Chelmsford's Army in Zululand, where he proved himself a capable soldier." The writer is confounding Major-General John Davis, the officer who is in Egypt, with Colonel H. F. Davies, commanding the 1st Battalion, Grenadier Guards. In another column we are reminded that the battalion of the Royal Irish Fusiliers which has just landed at Suakim is well known by reason of its recent services in South Africa! Verily, a little knowledge is a dangerous thing.

Major-General J. Davis and Brigadier-General H. Stewart, C.B., A.D.C., both at present commanding brigades in Egypt, were serving in India together fifteen years ago, the former being then in command of the 37th Regiment, with Colonel Stewart, a thin subaltern of five years' standing, as his adjutant! The rapid advancement of the latter has been something wonderful in these days of so-called slow promotion.

We regret to hear that Major-General Frederick Marshall, C.M.G., late of the 1st Life Guards, was badly hurt whilst hunting with the Chiddingford Hounds, near Godalming, on Monday. His horse put his foot in a hole in a ploughed field and fell, and in his struggle to rise he trod upon the General's face and kicked him severely in the chest. General Marshall was, as soon as possible, conveyed to Broadwater, in Mr. Godman's carriage, and by latest accounts was recovering. Those who were present at Sandown on Wednesday also witnessed what was feared to be a very serious accident to Captain Lee-Barber, 3rd Dragoon Guards. Captain Lee-Barber was riding his commanding officer's (Colonel Murray's) horse, Beaufort, in the Selling Steeplechase, when the animal fell at the ditch, his rider being thrown heavily. He recovered, however, before the end of the day's racing, and has since rejoined his regiment.

In accordance with instructions received from the Horse Guards, the whole of the Infantry battalions now at Aldershot will be immediately put through a short course of field-works, by direction of the Commanding Royal Engineer at the station. A course of practical instruction, under Engineer supervision, will, in future, be substituted at all stations for the desultory shelter-trenching, &c., hitherto carried out during the six weeks' experimental "military training" scramble. Further modifications of G.O. 50 of 1883, on this subject, may shortly be looked for.

We believe it is the intention to shortly clothe one of the Infantry battalions at Aldershot with the new khaki uniform recently approved by the Commander-in-Chief, and submitted to her Majesty at Osborne last month. Many points connected with the new clothing cannot be settled until experiments on a large scale are carried out.

The Jumna arrived at Suakim the same day; the Serapis left Bombay on Feb. 17, homeward bound; the Tourmaline was stationed at Madagascar; the Dragon was at Bombay, about to proceed to Persian Gulf; the Philomel in Persian Gulf; the Dryad was to proceed from Zanzibar to Bombay on Feb. 12; the Osprey was to return to Zanzibar, after towing Harrier and Undine clear of the Mozambique Channel,—should have arrived by this time; the Briton was ordered from Bombay to the Red Sea; the Ranger, Sphinx, Decoy, and Coquette were in the Red Sea with the flag.

Express, Lieut.-Com. V. Knox, was docked at Keyham Yard on Saturday for final examination.

Flirt. Com. R. W. Craigie has been appointed to supersede Com. Hammick in the command of this gun-vessel, recently returned from the West Coast of Africa, and now refitting. She will pay off on the 29th inst., and be immediately recommissioned at Devonport.

Helicon, Lieut. and Com. Winslow, left Suez on Feb. 21, but did not proceed beyond Port Said, having been ordered to remain there until further orders.

Invincible, Capt. Molyneux, C.B., was at Alexandria on Feb. 18, when Vice-Admiral the Lord John Hay shifted his flag to this ship from the Temeraire.

Minotaur. Capt. Fellowes, flagship of Vice-Admiral H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, was at Cagliari on day, when a court-martial assembled on board, under the presidency of Capt. Fellowes, for the trial of Charles Bishop, ordinary seaman, of the Northumberland, on charges of insubordination and theft. He pleaded guilty to all the charges, and was sentenced to two years' imprisonment with hard labour, and to be dismissed the service with disgrace.

Myrmidon, Com. Carpenter, arrived on Feb. 18 at Devonport from Sheerness, en route to Suakim. She left the Sound on Wednesday for the East Indies station, calling at Gibraltar and Malta.

Nelson, Comdre. Erskine. was at Hobart Town, Tasmania, on Feb. 18.

Neptune, Capt. Maxwell, was at Cagliari on Feb. 5, when a court-martial assembled on board, Capt. Maxwell presiding, for the trial of Frederick Dance, ordinary seaman, on two or three charges of insubordination on board the Northumberland. He pleaded guilty, and was sentenced to two years' imprisonment, with hard labour. Dance joined the Northumberland last December, and since then he has spent nearly all his time either in the cells or under charge of the sentries, and has been the cause of several young ordinary seamen getting into serious trouble by inciting them to acts of insubordination.

Serapis, Capt. Douglas, left Bombay on Feb. 17 for England.

Swinger, Lieut. and Com. Marx, arrived at Freemantle, Western Australia, on Feb. 19.

Temeraire, Capt. Nicholson, C.B., flying the flag of Vice-Admiral the Lord John Hay, arrived at Alexandria on Feb. 18, and left again for Port Said with the transport Northumberland. The Temeraire landed a division of seamen at Alexandria for garrison duty.

Tyne, Com. Basil Cochrane, which arrived at Sheerness on Saturday last from the Cape of Good Hope, has received orders to proceed to the Red Sea with reliefs and stores. She left on Monday afternoon for Chatham to make good defects.

Undine, Lieut. and Com. Cutfield, arrived at Freemantle, Australia, on Feb. 14.

Valorous, Capt. the Hon. R. Hare, arrived at Portsmouth on Sunday from Sheerness.

Wye, Staff Com. Miller, which was expected to leave Sheerness for Suakim on Feb. 29 with stores, was placed in the steam basin at Sheerness on Monday to complete her refit.

SIR WILLIAM HEWETT'S TELEGRAMS.

The Admiralty telegrams relating to affairs at Suakim which passed between the 5th and the 12th inst. have been printed as a Parliamentary paper. On the afternoon of the 5th inst., Sir W. Hewett telegraphed from Suakim to the Admiralty as follows:—"Egyptian force defeated, Tokar. Loss, 2,000. Baker Pasha and remainder of troops return to-day to Trinkitat. News by Ranger just returned. Only black recruits left here. Utterly unreliable. Intend landing men to take charge of town and allay panic." Numerous telegraphic messages were interchanged between Sir W. Hewett and Lord John Hay (at Malta) and the Admiralty, chiefly with respect to the immediate augmentation of the available force at Suakim, but it was not till the 9th inst. that the Government made any inquiry as to the garrisons at Tokar and Sinkat. On the 10th inst. Sir W. Hewett telegraphed that, according to the report of an Austrian Jew who had escaped from Osman Digna's camp, the rebels near Suakim numbered about 3,000, those round Tokar from 3,000 to 4,000, and those near Sinkat 3,000. He added that there was no news of the Tokar garrison. At length, on the 11th inst., Lord Northbrook inquired, apparently for the first time, whether there was any chance of relieving Sinkat and Tokar. His telegram was as follows:—"Now that you are in command of situation, please inform me if you are of opinion that there is any chance of relieving Sinkat and Tokar either by negotiation or arms. If by the latter, what force of Europeans do you consider to be necessary? We could send more bluejackets by Orontes. Jumna has on board a battalion, 10th Hussars without horses, and a battery of Royal Artillery, and might, perhaps, bring the Aden troop of Native Cavalry. Gen. Gordon arrived at Berber to-day. All well and confident. Answer to me as soon as possible, secret." The following day the news arrived from Admiral Hewett that Sinkat had fallen and its garrison perished, and the Admiralty immediately telegraphed back that steps had been taken to relieve Tokar, that a sufficient force would be at Suakim by the 19th or 20th, and that an effort was to be made "at any expense" to inform the garrison that they would be relieved by British troops before the end of the month. But Tokar has now fallen.

On Wednesday the Orontes and Jumna, escorted by the Carysfort, left Suakim for Ras Mahdi. The Orontes took down 500 Marines, the Jumna conveyed the 60th Rifles and the Royal Irish Fusiliers. Suakim will have for garrison during the absence of the expedition 150 Marines and 180 Bluejackets, with the 2,000 black troops not yet despatched to Egypt.

The Admiralty have received the following telegram from Sir William Hewett at Suakim, dated Feb. 21:—"Neera, with 250 Hussars and 270 horses, on shoal to southward of Cape Shab-Anber, to eastward of Suakim; is on shore up to her mid-ships; weather quite calm; ship making no water. Hecla and Prompt are standing by her, and Humber, now entering harbour, is proceeding to her assistance. Sphinx and Ranger proceed at daylight to-morrow; too late to-day. Retriever has brought in 120 of the Hussars."

SPECTACLES v. BLINDNESS.—Imperfectly adapted Spectacles are the cause of most cases of blindness and defective vision. Mr. H. Laurance, F.S.S., Oculist Optician, 1a Old Bond Street (late 39), has made the adaptation of spectacles his especial and sole study for upwards of thirty years. THE CHANNEL SQUADRON.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

Cagliari, Sardinia, Sunday, February 10.

The weather continues fine, but there is always a heavy dew at night, and on two or three mornings, at the beginning of the week, there was a thick fog, which, however, always cleared off as the sun began to make itself felt; it was so bad on Monday morning that the signals for the 8 o'clock evolution, and for general exercise aloft at 9.30, had to be made by fog horns. We exercised at "out-stream anchor and cable" on Wednesday, and unbent sails on Friday for a slight refit. All the ships are busy getting ready for the regatta; boat's crews of all sorts—officers, seamen, Marines, stokers, and bandsmen—are constantly away practising, and boats under sail trying their fancy rigs in preparation for the race for the Admiral's cup. A number of guns have been out in the snipe marsh every day, but no very large bags have been made, as the birds are very wild. The Duke went round with a party in the Forward to a place about 30 miles up the eastern coast of the island, in hopes of getting some big game; they left on Wednesday and returned on Friday evening. I hear that they had a very pleasant trip, but were not very successful as far as sport was concerned. On Friday evening the "Northumberlands" gave a very good Christy Minstrel performance, and yesterday the combined bands of the Squadron played on shore in the afternoon. Some of the men of "light and leading" here are getting up a fund wherewith to raise some fitting memorial of Mario, the great tenor, who was a native of Cagliari. Last night a concert was given at the Opera in aid of it. The Duke of Edinburgh, Admiral Wilson, and a number of officers of the Squadron were present, and it was a great success. The committee had taken a great deal of trouble, and were rewarded by having a crowded house. They had the road illuminated all the way up from the boat to the opera-house, and the approaches to the house very prettily decorated; they had also been so considerate as to have programmes printed in English. The orchestra played, among other pieces, the "Galatea" waltz. It was not down in the programme, and was intended as a surprise. At its conclusion, the applause was so enthusiastic that his Royal Highness had to rise and bow his acknowledgments. The rest of the programme consisted of songs and scenes from various operas, by the artists of the establishment, and performances by the orchestra and a strong military band; one piece, a grand hymn, entitled "The Opening of the Gothard," introducing "God Save the Queen" and the Italian National Hymn, which was performed by the orchestra and military band combined, was very fairly rendered, and was warmly applauded; the native part of the audience are, as a rule, very sparing in their applause and seem very hard to please, especially as regards the singing. The good old English custom of clapping heartily at the end of each piece does not prevail here at all. Several officers have got a week or ten days' leave, and have gone to visit Rome, which can be reached in a little over twenty-four hours from here. They will rejoin their ships at Terranova. The Achilles has not yet rejoined us; she is expected to-morrow. We leave on Tuesday morning for Terranova, where we are timed to arrive on Thursday, the 14th.

The members of the Royal Naval Club of 1765 dined together to commemorate the action of Sir John Jervis, off Cape St. Vincent, at Willis's Rooms, St. James's, on Tuesday evening. Admiral Charles F. Hillyar, C.B., presided, and there were present:—Rear-Admiral William Cox Chapman; Capts. Sir Lambton Loraine, Bart., Robert H. Thompson, Horatio Nelson, St. John Hornby, H. B. King, George W. Hand, R. Kinahan, H. E. Crozier, R. Duckworth King, P. Hart Dyke, and Albert B. Jenkings; Coms. W. Bailey, F. Echlin, G. L. Atkinson, W. M. Latham, W. L. Martin, W. M. Annesley, and Cecil W. Beaumont; and W. H. J. Kelly, R.N., secretary.

The Admiralty having presented her Majesty's ship Alert to the United States Government, who are organising an Arctic expedition in search of some missing ships, the authorities of Sheerness Dockyard have received instructions to supply her with masts, yards, and sails. The Alert has been taken alongside the camber this week to receive her fittings, and as soon as she has completed shipping them she will be towed to Blackwall, to be completed for sea. The Alert, as is well known, is especially constructed to withstand the rigour of an Arctic winter. She was employed in the last Arctic expedition under Sir George Nares. In addition to the Alert, above mentioned, the United States Government have purchased the steam whalers Thetis and Bear. Two officers of the United States flagship Lancaster, now in the Mediterranean, have been ordered to take them to New York, where they will be fitted. The Thetis, now at Dundee, is to be taken to New York by Lieut. Reamey, and the Bear will leave London in charge of Lieut.-Com. Goodrich, late executive officer of the Lancaster.

The Admiralty have ordered the Ruby and Wanderer to be brought forward for commission for foreign service.

Vice-Admiral Sir Leopold M'Clintock has been appointed Elder Brother of the Trinity House, in the room of the late Admiral Sir Richard Collinson.

Admiral Sir Houston Stewart has informed the captain of the Cambridge of his entire satisfaction at the manner in which the Naval arrangements were carried out at the Drake demonstration on Plymouth Hoe on Thursday. In the same communication Sir Houston thanks all the officers and men who took part in the proceedings.

Epps's Cocoa.—Grateful and Comforting.—"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.—Made simply with boiling water or milk. Sold only in packets, labelled—"James Epps and Co., Homœopathic Chemists, London."—Also makers of Epps's Chocolate Essence.

London Amusements.

"Peril" has appeared in various forms before the play-going public since M. Sardou's comedy of "Nos Intimes" was first brought out at the Vaudeville, Paris, in 1861. The revival at the Haymarket seems hardly likely to achieve the success attained by the last adaptation, produced at the Prince of Wales's Theatre, eight years ago.

At the Court Theatre on Monday, night, a very cold greeting was accorded a new three-act comedy called "Margery's Lovers," written by Mr. Brander Matthews, a well-known New York critic, possessing an extensive knowledge of the French stage, past and present. Other requirements would seem, however, needful to a dramatist, for with a weak story, few incidents, and unimpressive dialogue, Mr. Matthews could do little to interest a metropolitan audience. The only lively features of the performance were supplied by Mrs. John Wood as a vivacious American widow, and Mr. Charles Coote as a young traveller coming from New York. That a play of such an invertebrate nature can maintain a firm hold of the programme for any length of time is not to be anticipated.

To the Olympic has been transferred "Cast Adrift," a fairly-effective nautical drama, by Messrs. Palgrave and Gover, originally brought out at Bristol two years ago, and since successfully represented at Sadler's Wells and the Surrey. As now placed on the stage, the piece owes much to the picturesque scenery of Mr. Mark Barraud, an artist of remarkable ability. The drama is here much better played than hitherto, and Miss Alma Murray, Miss Laura Linden, Mr. Vincent, Mr. Philip Beck, and Mr. Rowland Buckstone figure conspicuously in the cast.

The reconstituted programme of Mr. and Mrs. German Reed's entertainment at St. George's Hall, Langham Place, is pleasantly abundant in all the charms of music and mirth. "A Moss Rose Rent" keeps its well-merited position, but supplemental attractions are now provided by Mr. Corney Grain's revised edition of his clever musical sketch, entitled "Spring's Delights," and a new second part, called "Double Events," showing the odd misunderstandings of a couple of swains who make love to the hostess and niece of a country hostelry known as the "Leather Bottle." Miss Fanny Holland, Miss Marion Wardroper, Mr. North Home, and Mr. Alfred Reed illustrate the farcical incidents of this diverting trifle with unflagging animation.

A new drama by Messrs. Jones and Herman, founded on a piece called "Nora; or, a Doll's House," written by the Norwegian dramatist, Henrick Ibsen, will be the earliest novelty brought forward by Mr. Edgar Bruce at the Prince's Theatre.

The Italian opera season at Covent Garden will commence on Tuesday, April 29. Madame Adelina Patti is expected to return from America and appear in the metropolis about a month later.

Mrs. Scott Williams, the widow of an officer, made a successful first appearance on Wednesday afternoon at a Gaiety matinée, playing with ease and animation Mrs. Cynic, in a new and original two-act comedietta by Mr. J. H. Johnstone, entitled "Young Couples."

"The Beggar Student," comic opera, in three acts, by Carl Millöcker, is in active preparation, and will be given at a series of matinées at the Royal Comedy Theatre, commencing about the middle of March. We hear that the part allotted to Miss Cameron is well suited to that lady's musical capabilities, and several important engagements have been made, so as to render the cast as complete as possible.

James Vickes, sick-berth steward, of the Duncan; William H. Short, chief boatman, of the Coastguard; T. H. Jago, William Tredree, and Francis W. Eddy, commissioned boatmen, of the Coastguard; George Oatley, gunners'-mate, of the Lord Warden; W. H. McIver, 2nd captain of the maintop, of the Northumberland; and Alfred Bridges, engine-room artificer, of the Carysfort, have been awarded the medal for long service and good conduct.

The Western Morning News is responsible for the following extraordinary charge against a naval officer:—"We have received a letter containing a recital of conduct on the part of a naval officer which, if true, ought to form the subject of an official enquiry. The statement is that on an evening two or three weeks ago, in very severe weather, an officer belonging to one of the ships of war stationed at Plymouth was rowed ashore by four sailor boys and told to await his return. The lads were without either shoes or stockings, and had nothing over their 'jerseys' but their short oilskin jackets, and in this condition they were kept in the boat throughout the whole night awaiting the return of their superior officer, who, however, did not come back. They suffered so severely from cold and exposure that they were sent to the 'sick bay,' and one of them is still under medical treatment, huge boils having made their appearance on his back. The officer, it is said, was 'sharply reprimanded' when he returned to his ship on the following morning, but most people will think that such a case is not met by a reprimand, however 'sharp' it may have been. We shall be willing to furnish the authorities with a clue to the offender."

HOW TO AVOID THE INJURIOUS EFFECTS OF STIMULANTS.—The present system of living—partaking of too rich foods, as pastry, saccharine and fatty substances, alcoholic drinks, and an insufficient amount of exercise—frequently deranges the liver. I would advise all bilious people, unless they are careful to keep the liver acting freely, to exercise great care in the use of alcoholic drinks, avoid sugar, and always dilute largely with water. Experience shows that porter, mild ales, port wine, dark sherries, sweet champagne, liqueurs, and brandies, are all very apt to disagree; while light white wines, and gin or old whisky largely diluted with soda water, will be found the least objectionable. Eno's Fruit Salt is peculiarly adapted for any constitutional weakness of the liver; it possesses the powers of reparation when digestion has been disturbed or lost, and places the invalid on the right track to health. A world of woes is avoided by those who keep and use Eno's Fruit Salt, therefore no family should ever be without it. CAUTION.—Legal Rights are protected in every Civilised Country. Examine each bottle, and see the Capsule is marked "Eno's Fruit Salt." Without it, you have been imposed on by worthless imitations. Sold by all Chemists, price 2s 9d and 4s 6d. Directions, in Sixteen Languages, how to Prevent Disease. Prepared only at Eno's Fruit Salt Works, Hatcham, London, S.E., by J. C. Eno's Patent.

JOHANN HOFF'S MALT EXTRACT

HAS THE GREATEST REPUTATION IN THE WORLD, AND IS THE ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE.

JOHANN HOFF, of Berlin, is the first Inventor of Malt Extract, which is universally acknowledged to be a most valuable dietetic beverage. It invigorates and restores the aged, the weak, the ailing.

Beware of SPURIOUS IMITATIONS.

JOHANN HOFF, of Berlin, possesses 59 Titled Decorations and Awards for his famous Malt Extract, which has been used by their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales. He is Purveyor to nearly all the Courts of Europe.

Beware of Bogus Medals, Decorations.

JOHANN HOFF, of Berlin, has the most numerous testimonials of any article ever produced in the world, and no other Hoff's Malt Extract is genuine unless it has the name "JOHANN" before the "HOFF," nor has there been any other sold in this Country until recently.

Beware of False Testimonials.

JOHANN HOFF, of Berlin: his success has induced many imitations; the public are therefore requested to see they get the genuine. No one is allowed to sell the genuine JOHANN HOFF'S MALT EXTRACT unless obtained from the Sole Consignees. A descriptive Circular, with Copies of Testimonials and Decorations from Emperors, Kings, Physicians, and Clergy, may be had post-free at the Depôt.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS.—Rheumatism and Gout.—These purifying and soothing remedies demand the earnest attention of all persons liable to gout, sciatica, or other painful affections of the muscles, nerves, or joints. The Ointment should be applied after the affected parts have been patiently fomented with warm water, when the unguent should be diligently rubbed upon the adjacent skin, unless the friction should cause pain. Holloway's Pills should be simultaneously taken to reduce inflammation and to purify the blood. This treatment abates the violence, and lessens the frequency of gout, rheumatism, and all spasmodic diseases, which spring from hereditary predisposition, or from any accidental weakness of constitution. This Ointment checks the local malady. The Pills restore the vital powers.

MILITARY EDUCATION, GERMANY.—Colonel BERDOE WILKINSON, late R.E., formerly in charge of the Ordnance Survey in Ireland, and Lieutenant-Colonel WILKINSON SHAW, M.A. (Staff College), late Garrison-Instructor at Aldershot, prepare Candidates for Sandhurst and Woolwich, and for Line Commissions through the Militia.

At the five Militia Competitions which have taken place since September 1, 1881, Colonel WILKINSON and Lieutenant-Colonel SHAW have secured for their Pupils THIRTY-EIGHT COMMISSIONS, although they have only Prepared and sent up a very Limited Number of Candidates. A list of successful Pupils, showing the high places taken by them, will be furnished on application.

At the Militia Literary Examinations held during the same period, a Number of Pupils have also passed; in this Competition the FIRST PLACE was taken in April last by Lieutenant Lord Skelmersdale, and the SECOND PLACE in the recent October Examination by the only candidate sent up, Lieutenant the Honourable Victor A. Pelham.

The results of the last WOOLWICH and SANDHURST EXAMINATIONS have also added to the general score, which now amounts to SEVENTY-SEVEN SUCCESSES, obtained by Pupils since September 1, 1881.

Address, DARMSTADT, GERMANY.

LIEUTENANTS of MILITIA desirous of competing for Line Commissions can be received by the Rev. WALTER BAKER, M.A., at Batcombe Rectory, Evercreech, Bath. They will be thoroughly prepared in all Military Subjects by two Officers who for several years past have been engaged with distinguished success in this special work.

Great individual attention is secured, both Instructors are resident and give their whole time, very few Pupils are taken, and steady work is insisted on. Since the introduction of the Military Competitive, out of Forty-four Lieutenants of Militia sent up, Twenty-seven have been successful, several taking high places in the list.

A Large Staff of Experienced Tutors, all resident, assist in preparing for the Qualifying Examinations, and for the Sandhurst and Woolwich Competitions.

References to parents of pupils successful at all Examinations, INCLUDING SANDHURST and MILITIA COMPETITIVE in 1882 and 1883. All sent up for the last Militia Qualifying Examination passed.

OROIDE GOLD JEWELLERY (REGD.)

"Recommends itself not alone to those of limited means, but to the wealthy, who, when frequenting large gatherings, whether at racecourses, theatres, public meetings, or even on that sacred thoroughfare, the king's highway, have known what it is to be robbed of their valuables."

OROIDE GOLD WATCHES,
Accurate timekeepers, 21s to 50s, safe and free per post (registered).

The "SERVICE" KEYLESS WATCH,
Open face, jewelled in eight holes, Two Guineas, post free.

"The watches of this patent are in no respect different from gold ones. The degree of finish, of course, regulates the price, but the cheapest class is capable of performing with accuracy for from fifteen to twenty-five years. As to strength and solidity, the Oroide cases are undoubtedly superior to those of gold watches. No other form of amalgam can rival Mr. Rowe's in the general essentials of a substitute for gold."

"Thousands of persons who, though not wishing to impose on their friends by a display of what is but a semblance of the real metal, have not been indisposed to find an equally good-looking metal, which, reproduced in a watch, a chain, or article of jewellery, would not be a costly thing to buy, nor a dear thing to lose." OROIDE GOLD SCARF PINS, 2s 6d to 5s, post free.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE.

COUGHS,
COLDS,
ASTHMA,
BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.

Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) discovered a remedy to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false.

Vice-Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was undoubtedly the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.—See the Times, July 13th, 1864.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the true Palliative in

IS THE GREAT SPECIFIC for CHOLERA, DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY.

The General Board of Health, London, report that it acts as a charm, one dose generally sufficient.

Dr. Gibbon, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states:—"Two doses completely cured me of Diarrhœa."

From SYMES and CO., Simla:

Dear Sir,—We congratulate you upon the wide-spread reputation this justly esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of Dr. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescriber and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES and Co., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, his Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a Liquid Medicine which assuages Pain of every kind, affords a calm, refreshing sleep without Headache, and invigorates the Nervous System when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

The immense sale of this remedy has given rise to many unscrupulous imitations. Of all Chemists, 1s 1½d, 2s 9d, and 4s 6d.

WHEN Lord Morley was appointed to the position he holds now at the War Office, there was some mild amazement felt by those who forgot that, according to the genius of the Constitution, the Naval and Military affairs of the Empire are administered by men who are not necessarily possessed of special knowledge, and who are from their rank or their political connections considered entitled to office. It generally happens that the Ministers who direct the affairs of the Navy and Army are not sailors or soldiers. His lordship, fortified by a strong desire to learn, approached his desk in a spirit of humility. He had the advantage of the services of an admirable Secretary, well versed in office work and full of tact and resources; so that, buckling to his work with energy, and giving up the powers of his mind, his intelligence, and his time, to the duties of the office he held just under the Secretary of State, he showed that those who objected to his want of experience and knowledge as fatal disqualifications were not justified in supposing he would be a failure. On the contrary, in the limited field in which he was labouring, Lord Morley soon displayed capacity for the mastery of details, and his short statements and answers to questions, and his defensive passes and ripostes, such as an official is obliged to deliver in reply to the thrusts of his opponents in Parliamentary duels, were for some time characterised by strict attention to precedent and courteous observance of established form. If there was nothing very original in his mode of debate or "responsion," he was, at least, exempt from the infirmities of temper and of taste which some of his predecessors had displayed in Parliament. But, unhappily, his success seems to have had of late, on one occasion at least, a mischievous effect upon his judgment. We do not allude to Lord Morley's rather exalted and excited encomiums on the unmixed blessings and benefits of Short Service, nor to the expression of his opinion—not, under the circumstances, quite free from arrogance—that Long Service was an utter and hopeless failure nor to the didactic manner he assumed in his addresses out of Parliament. We refer to the growing impatience of criticism, to the defiant attitude in meeting legitimate demands for information, and, above all, to the exhibition of the officialism pure and simple, and almost offensive, of which he gave a notable display this week. When Mr. Russell, in 1854, writing from Gallipoli, called attention to the maladministration which permitted the advance guard of the Army to disembark without medical necessaries, stores, &c., from Malta, a question on the subject was asked in the House of Peers, and the unhappy Duke of Newcastle, relying on the resources of "officialism," gave an indignant denial to the statements of the then anonymous correspondent of the Times. It never occurred to the Duke that he might have been misinformed. Possibly it never could occur to any official on such an occasion that he was not illuminated night and day by all the light which could be thrown on any topic in his department, or that outsiders were not in the very midst of the black night of ignorance. But unless a man were very stupid indeed, he might pause ere he committed himself, without full inquiry, to violent contradiction of statements made by a person on the scene of the transactions to which his statements applied. It ought to strike him that there was some ground for caution—nay, some necessity for investigation—ere he rushed out of his seat with his indignant denial. "Here," he might say to himself, "is some need of caution! A man who is on the spot says that there are no stores, bedding, or blankets, &c., for the troops. He writes that statement to his newspaper to which he is responsible, and he makes it to the public on which that newspaper depends for its circulation and well-being. If he states what is not true, he will be found out immediately. He will be discredited by his employers and by those among whom he lives. If I tell a falsehood of an official sort, there are no serious consequences on my position. If the Correspondent lies, he is ruined! Not only that. All the probabilities are that the correspondent, when he makes a precise charge, is primâ facie justified, for it would render his position much more agreeable, if he were to apply liberal bastings of eulogy to the authorities, than if he picked holes and pointed out defects. Therefore, I will perpend and investigate." Had the Duke of Newcastle acted on such reasonings at the beginning of the career of maladministration which ended in his retirement from political life, the overthrow of the Ministry of which he was a prominent member, and the sufferings which were glossed over in official announcements respecting the state of the weather in the Crimea, he might have been saved from the outburst of indignation which hurled him from office, when, what Lord John Russell described as "the pitiable, horrible, and heartrending condition" of the Army was revealed by non-official agency to the country. Let Lord Morley and his chiefs take heed how they neglect information because it is not official, and despise the statements and opinions of such men as Mr. Cameron, because they are "only newspaper correspondents." As Ministers were told in the House of Peers, on the occasion when Lord Morley was ill advised enough to utter his querulous complaint that the assertions of "newspaper correspondents" were held to be entitled to credence, when they did not tally with official assurances, there would be little or nothing known in this country of the proceedings on which public attention is fixed, but for these vilipended people who write to the papers. On the very special matter at issue on the night to which we refer, in the House of Lords, Lord Morley was clearly ignorant or mistaken, and the correspondent on the spot was right. There are no field-guns, properly so called, with Graham's force. The Naval Brigade have got two 9-pounders, the Camel Corps have some small mountain guns, but the correspondent of the Standard, who has seen more great battles and severe fighting, and has witnessed artillery practice in war on a more extended scale, than all the Head-quarters and War-Office Staff together, has repeated his statements respecting the supply of guns and the miserable inefficiency of the armament of Graham's artillery, and he will, we think, be credited, in spite of Lord Morley's "assurances." Whether Mr. Cameron be right, or not, in attributing to Lord Wolseley the order to dispense with field-guns, we cannot say, but we think that for such operations and such an enemy as Graham has to deal with, it is a thousand pities he has not a few old-fashioned smoothbores—howitzers, best of all—to give these gallant Arabs a taste of a "little domestic case" and canister at a few hundred yards, instead of those long-ranging popguns and their forty little shells with which Graham is provided. It is enough to break up the benches in the Peers with laughter to hear grave Ministers absolutely deprecating discussion on the conduct of the war and Graham's instructions, on the ground that Osman Digna and his Lieutenants would receive valuable information (by telegraph ?) from the reports of the debate! Very much the same sort of nonsense, but with far more reason for the caution, was to be heard at the time of the Crimean winter, when it was maintained in some quarters that it was far better to keep the real state of the Army hidden from the nation than to call for help and succour, because the Russians would learn from London what was taking place under their eyes outside Sebastopol. Whenever Mr. Kinglake—possibly at the end of the century—brings out his last volume, we shall very probably see him capering on that cheval de bataille; but if he refers to General von Kotzebue, who was chief of the Russian Staff, and who is still alive, he may be inclined to take off his spurs, for the General will assure him, as he did H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, that Prince Gortschakoff had the most perfect information of everything that went on in the Allied Camps, without waiting for the reports in the London newspapers.

THE introduction of steam did away with sailing-vessels. The adoption of armour caused wooden ships to disappear. The Ram and the Torpedo must revolutionise Naval tactics. But these views are not held by all Naval officers. Captain Colomb adheres to the belief in the effectiveness of broadside fire, and is supported by Admiral Boys. But Admiral Sir George Elliot, no mean authority in Naval matters, is of the contrary opinion. Admiral Elliot, in undertaking to prepare a paper on Naval matters, at the request of the Committee of the Royal United Service Institution, selected as his subject "The Ram,—the Prominent Feature of Future Naval Victories," because he considers that, although very able essays have been written on "The Gun, the Ram, and the Torpedo," the subject has not, in his opinion, been exhausted. On certain points which should dominate the construction of ships, the essayists felt a difficulty in giving their opinions. The inference drawn by Admiral Elliot from what has been left undefined, and from what has been elaborated in reference to fleet actions, is that writers have been constrained to regulate their theories by the types of armour-clads which exist. Hitherto, the greatest prominence has been given to gun by all nations. Hence, but little attention has been paid by Naval architects to fortifying the bows for ramming purposes, and, as a result, the question of end-on ramming or bow-to-bow attack has received but slight consideration, Naval officers recognising the fact that the modern armour-clad is hardly suitable. Thus modern Naval tactics aim at making two hostile fleets, when meeting end-on, pass through the opposing lines, so as to evade the ram, use the broadside guns and torpedoes, and then turn rapidly to repeat the manœuvre. The numerous diagrams and the Signal Book issued by the Admiralty tend to strengthen the opinion that future Naval combats will principally be decided by the gun and the torpedo; and this impression is strengthened, if not confirmed, in our service, by the inadequate strength and protection bestowed on the ram-bows of modern armour-clads. The French have dealt with this question of strength of bow more carefully than we have done. Their Naval authorities and Naval officers would, therefore, be more inclined to use their rams than ours would be with our present ships. And yet, given two ships of equal speed, power, and handiness, the end-on attack must prove the best in the long-run. The bows present the smallest target to the enemy, and at the same time afford the greatest protection against his shot. If attacked in this manner, the enemy has no time to think. He must decide at once either to meet the attack in the same manner, or to avoid it, and run. In the latter case, his stern is more vulnerable than are the bows of the ship chasing him, and she has, therefore, the best chance of using her bow guns with effect. When two ships are unequally matched, when one has greater speed than the other, the slower of the two can only save herself by attacking end-on. She then forces her adversary either to come to close quarters, or to expose his broadside in his endeavour to avoid her ram. Admiral Elliot believes that unless hostile fleets approach each other in very open order, fleet actions will from the first become a mêlée, and that bow-to-bow ramming will be the ruling feature of the fights, on the ground that as turning away from each other would expose their vulnerable sterns, they must perforce turn towards each other. "Funking," says Admiral Elliot, "will be of no avail, because the strongest-bowed ships will compel their opponents to meet them end-on, and these bow-to-bow encounters will be as skilfully fought as duels with the sword, each Captain watching his approaching foe as a cat does a mouse, and striving by skilful steering to bring his stem to strike at an angle of inclination towards his opponent's bow. Short ships with great steering-power will prove the most dangerous in this fencing for a weak spot, and a good nerve and a quick eye will be greatly needed. Those ships which escape from a bow-to-bow encounter will, whilst passing onwards, look out in every direction for a chance of ramming; and if the fleets are in anything like close order, I reckon that rams, and not guns, will decide the fight." It should not be forgotten, however, that the French ships tow a torpedo on each quarter, and that these engines of destruction will have to be considered, before an English ship goes into action with an opponent thus protected. It is evident that the French tactics would aim at forcing their enemy to pass under the stern of the ship thus protected, so as to enable the towed torpedo to come into contact with the bottom of the ship attempting this manœuvre, when the result would be her destruction. Thus, for example, a French and English ship steam down upon each other bow to bow. The French ship, being shorter and having greater speed than the English ship, swerves from her course. The English ship glides past, grazing the French ship's quarter, her way taking her right over the towing-ropes of both torpedoes, which are instantly hauled under her bottom, and explode on contact. How is such an accident to be avoided? The only remedy we can suggest is for our ships to go into action similarly protected,—that is to say, also towing torpedoes on each quarter. But this would necessitate a very open formation being adopted, similar in every respect to that of the enemy. These facts all tend to teach Naval designers a lesson which we hope they will take to heart. They point to the fallacy of building large, unwieldy ships, with weak bows, and to the necessity of constructing a larger number of smaller vessels, having great steering-power, although not so powerfully armed. Sir George Elliot puts this clearly when he says:—"Would not a fleet of sixteen of such fleet ships, of 8,000 tons displacement, be more than a match for twelve fleet ships of 12,000 tons displacement? I very much question whether an equal number of the smaller and handier vessels would not have the best of it in a fleet action. I know that I may be told that the Italians in such a case would, with their greater speed, separate and fight at long balls, thus avoiding the ram and torpedo attack, but I cannot perceive that any practical advantages would result from this mode of fighting, seeing that the smaller vessels, by turning their armour-plated bows to the enemy, would present a smaller target, and that shots reaching their aim would be deflected." The following paragraph in Admiral Elliot's lecture is well worth consideration, for it throws much light on this subject, and his words should be pondered over by all who have the welfare of the Navy at heart. Sir George Elliot says:—

> "In 1871, as members of the Committee on Designs for Ships-of-War, Admiral Ryder and I dissented from the opinion of our colleagues mainly on the question of central citadels and revolving turrets and unprotected ends, and we strongly urged their abandonment, and recommended the barbette towers, and a stout, submerged armour deck fore and aft to protect the vitals, with a cellular water-line protection and coffer-dam sides, and armour-plated bows and with powerful end-on fire; and I have seen no reason to vary those opinions, having always considered that the choice between an all-round, armour-plated, water-line belt, and a cellular water-line efficiently developed, was a question which the progress of artillery power must eventually decide in favour of the latter. Steel plating has protracted the life of the belt of armour, but if my theory of smaller fleet ships and more of them is a correct one, and if 18 in. of compound armour affords no protection against the direct impact of the 80-ton B.L. gun, the merits of a cellular water-line must soon be recognised, the most important feature of which is the submerged, stout, armour-plated deck protecting the vitals. The respective merits of a penetrable belt of armour round the water-line, and a raft body with coffer-dam sides built upon a submerged armour-plated deck, have never been discussed at this Institution, although I am aware that the Construction Department have considered the question. We have arrived at 20 in. of armour, and ships of 12,000 tons displacement. Is the 100-ton breech-loader the limit of the power of the gun which can be mounted? If we can mount two of such guns in a turret, why not one 200-pounder? I say nothing of improved gun-power which may be forthcoming. If my theory of a limited size of fleet ships is right, then the thickness of armour must also be limited, and being penetrable, the alternative of a cellular water-line will probably receive at last its due consideration."

We must reserve the remainder of Sir George Elliot's valuable paper for consideration on a future occasion.

THE spirit in which the Metropolitan Volunteer Commanding Officers have accepted the Memorandum of H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief with regard to the Easter outing of the corps they represent is highly creditable to them, and will do much still further to raise the Volunteer Force generally in the estimation not only of the Army, but also of the public. Some years ago we incurred the grave displeasure of many of the representative members of the Citizen Army, because we pleaded on behalf of the younger and—we use the expression in no spirit of disparagement towards the parents of the movement—more enthusiastic school of Volunteers, that they desired to do something more than engage in a picnic pageant. We were told then that we did not understand the Volunteers; nay, more, that our aim was to snuff out the martial enthusiasm of the nation, i.e., that we were jealous of the Volunteers, and were striving to bring about the destruction of the force. The Brighton Review was held to be a necessity; it was necessary, it was argued, because without it there would be wanting an incentive to induce men to enrol themselves in the Volunteer ranks. Volunteering, it was held, and with some amount of reason, entailed a considerable sacrifice of time and money, and men would not be forthcoming to fill the ranks, if the attractions of the annual gathering on the Brighton Downs were withdrawn. But we refused from the first to accept so unfavourable a verdict as expressing the views of the Volunteers at large, for it seemed to us unaccountable that men who would voluntarily undertake the work of soldiers would really resent any attempts that might be made on the part of those in authority over them to turn the time devoted by them to military exercises and instruction to practical value. The decision arrived at by the Metropolitan Commanding Officers has demonstrated that we were right in our estimate of the military spirit of the Volunteer Army. The Metropolitan Commanding Officers must certainly be given credit for knowing what the wants of the Volunteers are. They are charged with a great responsibility. Hitherto, they have been consulted from time to time by the military authorities on matters affecting the well-being of the force. It is only just to them to say that they have discharged the duties devolving upon them with commendable tact and discretion, and by no one, we believe, are the services they have rendered more thoroughly appreciated than by his Royal Highness the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief. His Royal Highness has been at all times a staunch friend of the Volunteer movement. It has been in a large measure due to his persistent advocacy of their claims, and his appreciation of the feelings which have prompted them in undertaking a patriotic duty, that the Volunteers occupy to-day the position they do. But the strides that have been made by the Volunteer Force, not in the Metropolitan district alone, but throughout the length and breadth of the country, rendered it imperative that something should be done to bring the Volunteers more into harmony with the views and ideas of those who represent military feeling. It was in furtherance of this object that the suggestion was thrown out that the time had arrived when the project of a Brighton Review should be seriously considered, and the question raised as to whether the Easter holidays could not be more advantageously utilised by the assembling of a number of smaller bodies of men at our principal garrisons. And the spirit in which the Duke of Cambridge's recommendation has been accepted may be taken as evidence that his Royal Highness has fairly gauged the martial tendencies of those who supply the bone and sinews of the force. There has been no compulsion in the matter,—and here we maintain the Horse Guards authorities have displayed wise discretion. The decision has simply been left to the better judgment of the Volunteers themselves. The Metropolitan Commanding Officers, sitting as a sort of representative assembly, were asked to advise. They did advise, and the conclusion they arrived at was one which fully justifies the action taken by the Duke of Cambridge. The Easter outing may be, indeed, there is every reason to suppose that it will be, shorn of some of its attractions. The points to be considered are, will it in its new and more realistic form tend to raise the tone of the Volunteer service; will it have the effect of rendering the review, from a Military stand-point, more instructive, and, above all, will it popularise Volunteering among the classes from which recruits are principally drawn? We are strongly of opinion that it will prove successful in all respects. Then, as we say, the Metropolitan Commanding Officers are to be commended for the good-sense they have shown. We can quite understand that at first they may have had some doubts as to the favour with which so sweeping a change would be regarded by those whose interests they were called upon to watch. They, nevertheless, acted wisely in deciding, as they did, to support one who has proved himself to be a good friend of the Volunteer movement, and who, whatever the ultimate effect may be of the new departure, was actuated, in recommending it, by an earnest desire to do that which he considered best calculated to promote the future interests of the Volunteer organisation. We can quite understand that this latest innovation will be viewed with alarm by those who still hold to the idea that Volunteer regiments should be little better than shooting clubs. Shooting is, of course, a most important part of a soldier's training, and it is essential that shooting should be encouraged in every way, in a force like the Volunteers. There are, however, other considerations to be taken into account, and since the Volunteers have themselves demanded that they should be treated more as soldiers and less as armed civilians than they have been, they cannot consistently object when those who are in authority over them come forward and offer them the benefit of their experience, in a way to enable them to obtain the objects they presumably have in view. The arrangements for the Easter gatherings of 1884 will mark an epoch in the history of the Volunteer Force; but we are sanguine as to the results. The Volunteers have long since shown, by the work they have done at Aldershot and elsewhere, that they have got past the infantine stages. They no longer desire only to "carry a gun" and wear a uniform. They have proved themselves worthy of better things, and seeing that every advance they have made has been made in face of strong opposition in certain quarters, so in the present instance those who regard the abandonment of the Brighton project with fear and trembling will live, we believe, to acknowledge that the Metropolitan Volunteer "Chiefs," in making up their minds to fall in with the views of the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, recognised the soundness of his Royal Highness's advice, and did what was best for the Volunteer Army.

THE Euphrates Court-martial clearly proves that the Admiralty should never have abolished the appointment of second navigating officer in the Indian troopships. The reason why their Lordships took this step was that, at the time, they found great difficulty, owing to the scarcity of Navigating Officers, in making these appointments, and there were, and still are, grave objections to Sub-Lieutenants being appointed for navigating duties under a Staff Commander or Navigating Lieutenant. The Euphrates carried five Lieutenants, one of them being an officer of very high attainments, but none of them accustomed to navigate a ship. These Executive officers had, consequently, to seek advice on every possible occasion from the Navigating-Lieutenant of the ship, notwithstanding that this officer was on the sick list, seriously ill, and scarcely able to crawl out of his cabin. Nevertheless, this officer, with praiseworthy zeal, insisted on returning to duty the moment the ship was in danger, against the remonstrances of the medical officers of the ship. He piloted the Euphrates into Gibraltar, and thence navigated her to Bombay, having to sit on deck to do his work, his illness preventing his standing. Such a state of things is not creditable to the Navy, though highly so to the individual officer concerned, and the sooner, therefore, that every officer of the Executive line in the Navy is forced to become an efficient navigator, the better will it be for the service. But to navigate a ship safely requires confidence in one's own ability to do the work. The knowledge which imparts that confidence can only be obtained by constant practice. Hence it would be necessary for the Admiralty to find means of enabling Midshipmen, Sub-Lieutenants, and Lieutenants to practise the art of navigation in a very different manner from that now in vogue. The question is one deserving further consideration, and pending its solution, it would not be a bad plan for every Executive officer to be ordered to take his turn at navigating his ship, under the supervision of the regular navigator. Thus each officer might, in his turn, be excused all other duty for the day, to enable him to devote his whole attention to learning how to navigate. When in foreign harbours, it would also be advisable to send out surveying parties. The data obtained in this manner should be carefully plotted, and the charts sent home to the Admiralty. Nothing tends more to make an officer proficient in the use of charts than the practical knowledge of how to make them, and the information obtained while about this work would, on many occasions, prove of great value to that new-born department of the Admiralty, of which so much was once said, but of whose performances so little has ever been heard,—the Intelligence Department.

IN the Gazette of January 29 there were 30 Lieutenants of Militia appointed to commissions in the Line, and in the Gazette of the 5th ult. a further batch of 120 Gentlemen Cadets from the Royal Military College were appointed, making in all a total of 150 first appointments to the Line during the last three or four weeks. This brings the number of extra commissions given since September last, over and above the original number which it was estimated would be required, up to the total of 80. But notwithstanding this already large increase in the number of first appointments, we find, on referring to the current Army List, that after allowing for the absorption of all these young officers into regiments, there remain some 40 or 50 vacancies in the subaltern ranks still unfilled. This state of affairs is, to our mind, serious in the extreme, implying as it does the complete break-down of the present system of obtaining officers for the Army. So great has been the demand for young officers during the last few months, that instead of the usual 30 commissions set apart each half-year for Militia candidates, no less than 90 commissions have now been given amongst those who competed at the examination for Militia candidates held in September last. And not only has the Militia been thus largely drawn upon to meet the demand, but amongst the 120 cadets gazetted to their regiments in the Gazette of February 5 are twenty cadets who have passed through their first term only at the Royal Military College, and this, as it happens, much the shorter of the two terms into which the course is divided. But these strenuous efforts to meet the difficulty show all the more plainly how completely the present system is breaking down. For, after all their devices to obtain the necessary number of officers have been exhausted, we see that a large number of unfilled vacancies still exist for which there are no candidates available; and this number is being largely augmented, week by week, as every fresh Gazette appears. The authorities cannot claim that this is a sudden flood of vacancies, which has come upon them without any warning. Before the reorganisation in July, 1881, a large number of vacancies had accumulated, but upon the reduction of the Establishment of Subalterns in all regiments throughout the Army, about 300 vacancies were absorbed. Nevertheless, the cadets who had passed out of Sandhurst at Midsummer, 1881, were all provided for within a month or two of the ordinary time. Since then, batch after batch of cadets have passed out at the usual periods, and have quickly been absorbed into waiting vacancies. The number of Militia candidates has been increased, especially with a view to providing for the great want of officers found to exist in the Cavalry regiments. Gradually the number of vacancies has gained upon the number of available candidates, until at last we find that for the present all the supplies have ceased, and there are some 50 vacancies remaining unfilled. In spite of the many indications of the crisis, which it was manifest would inevitably occur, no steps whatever have been taken towards providing an effectual remedy. Make-shift contrivances alone have been relied upon, and we must now wait to see what steps will next be taken to fill up the existing vacancies. We may declare at once that it is not the slightest use to wait until another batch of cadets have passed out of the College. They will most certainly be provided for by the current vacancies of the next six months. From experience of what has taken place before, it appears most probable that the course that will suggest itself in the present instance will be to again have recourse to the Militia; and if this is done, no doubt the required number will at once be forthcoming. But there is a very grave objection to this system of continually draining the Militia of its young officers on every emergency. It is well known that at the present time the Militia is very much below its proper establishment of officers. The number of new appointments is, unfortunately, hardly sufficient to replace the number of ordinary casualties occurring therein; and consequently the repeated calls upon the Militia for their young officers to fill up the vacancies in the Line have, during the last year or two, increased the deficiencies in the establishments of Militia officers to an alarming extent. It will probably be argued that the only way to attract young men to the Militia is to make it a means to entering the Line. Without stopping now to refer to the neglect which has made it necessary, in order to obtain officers for the Militia, to hold out a hope of ulterior advantage, we can say that it is not at all necessary to offer as many as ninety commissions in one half-year to candidates of this class, to insure that the present supply of Militia officers, so obtained, shall be maintained. That it is unnecessary to turn to the Militia whenever an increased number of officers is required, may be easily demonstrated by pointing to the number of candidates for admission to Sandhurst at every examination. The examination is becoming more severe every year, but yet there is no falling-off in the number of candidates, there being usually about 300 or 400 competitors for every 100 vacancies. Here is evidently to be found both the remedy for and the cause of the present unsatisfactory state of affairs. It being certain that the supply of candidates for commissions is practically illimitable, it follows that, in order to have a sufficient number of cadets for any emergency, it is only necessary to increase the amount of accommodation at Sandhurst, and admit a much larger number of Cadets at each entrance examination. This is, of course, perfectly well known at the War Office, and we presume, therefore, that, as this plan has not hitherto been adopted, the one great obstacle is that of cost. It is too expensive to increase the pay of the private soldier, and so obtain able-bodied, full-grown men; therefore, we have to put up with an Army of boys. It is too expensive to provide for an increased number of Cadets, and therefore we have to put up with unfilled vacancies in half the regiments of the Line. Efficiency, as ever, has still to make way for false economy. We can only protest, hoping that some day the light will come.

IN 1869, the "Royal Engineer Establishment" at Chatham was converted into the "School of Military Engineering," and was formally developed into a training institution for the whole Army in regard to Engineering duties. Since that time, small batches of officers and non-commissioned officers, selected in a miscellaneous manner from the various regiments serving at home, have, at intervals, proceeded to Chatham, to undergo "courses" of instruction in various engineering operations, chiefly in those connected with signalling and fieldworks. But the whole system of Chatham instruction quâ the Army generally has been, and still is, of a desultory, undecided nature. It has constituted one of the principal links in that vicious chain of opportunity whereby officers, under the specious guise of affecting to improve their individual professional knowledge, manage to leave their battalions and to shirk their proper regimental duties, in order to spend a happy interval of relaxation within an hour's distance of London. Every reflecting man must be convinced that whatever tends to sever officers from their men is bad for discipline, and injurious to the interests of the country. Again, a military school that only teaches, even in this promiscuous fashion, a few of the officers and non-commissioned officers of the Army, and has nothing to do with the rank and file, can hardly be said to fulfil its normal function. Probably a somewhat jealous spirit on the part of the Engineer authorities at Chatham has been to some extent at the root of the adoption of the existing system. Some time ago, several Infantry officers who had been going through a "course" at Chatham, some twelve years ago, wished, at its conclusion, to proceed with a higher "course" on the same subject. These officers had passed the signalling portion of the telegraphy school, and were desirous of learning the electrical branch. A veto was, however, at once put upon their aspirations. The Engineers thought that it was high time to check these ambitious ideas, and it is believed that the only result of this daring application was the envelopment of the naturally simple subject of electric telegraphy in a little more complication and mathematical formulation, in the hope of more effectually deterring future high-flying Linesmen. Now, it cannot be too vividly impressed upon the Engineers of an Army that they exist for the Army, and not the Army for them. They are merely subsidiary to an Army. They are not one of its arms. The silly notion that the Engineers are a fourth arm is at last exploded, and the sooner Engineers understand their proper place in the service, the better it will be for all parties. That place is a most essential and distinguished one, and it consists in directing the engineering operations of an army, but not in executing these operations. That is the sphere of the Army itself. Fighting, marching, and working (or engineering) are clearly the three great combatant actions that an army is usually called upon to perform. This rôle of direction would naturally in peace-time take the form of instruction, and the School of Engineering would be the central depôt, where the engineers themselves would not only receive their own training, but would also impart the necessary training to those who, in time of war, would have to execute the engineering works required, i.e., to the Army generally, and especially to the backbone of the Army, viz., the Infantry. We hold it to be a matter beyond dispute that an infantry man is as much concerned in engineering as is an engineer. In these days, for all practical purposes, the infantry is the Army. If the infantry be numerous, brave, hardy, intelligent, and well equipped, the cavalry and artillery may,—well, smoke their pipes. The connection between the infantry and the engineers is one of great solidity. Engineers are an essential branch of the directing agency of an army, i.e., of the staff. They should be few in numbers, but each one of them—whether officer, non-commissioned officer, or private—should be thoroughly well trained and disciplined, and should be capable of influencing, animating, and directing the work of the infantry. If, then, our premisses be sound, we arrive at the obvious conclusion that the infantry should be systematically instructed in all engineering operations at the School of Military Engineering. There is nothing mysterious or inherently difficult in any engineering works. Sapping, mining, bridging, roadmaking, telegraphing, demolishing, all are perfectly simple, and can be effectually performed by ordinary labourers. And we maintain that every infantry soldier should be thoroughly taught all these works, in addition to his all-important duties connected with discipline, and musketry, and marching. But besides the purely military engineering actions that we have enumerated, there is that most useful engineering accomplishment of knowing a trade. Now, the School at Chatham has ample facilities for teaching soldiers trades, such as those of carpenter, blacksmith, and mason; and a moderate knowledge of one or other of these trades could easily be imparted to a certain per-centage of the soldiers of every Line battalion. Let now the whole of Chatham garrison constitute the School of Military Engineering, and let this garrison be commanded by the Commandant of this School, with the temporary rank of Major-General. There are at Chatham barracks for three Line battalions, besides the Marine and Engineer barracks; and there are facilities for hutting additional troops. Let the first three regiments for foreign service be habitually stationed at Chatham for at least six months preceding their embarkation, in order that officers and men together may receive a complete practical education in engineering; and let the existing injurious method of detaching at odd times a few officers and non-commissioned officers from their regiments for this purpose be discontinued. Let the whole regiment learn engineering at the fountain-head, and abolish the obsolete and absurd custom of dubbing a few hairy men with the appellation of "pioneers," and of giving them each a nicely polished pick or shovel to carry on parade. Let also the Marines and Fortress Artillery send constantly one, two, or more complete companies to this School, for the same object. There is no reason why the musketry instruction of the men should be neglected whilst they are quartered at Chatham. On the contrary, the garrison rifle-range at Gravesend will be found to be most conveniently situated for interweaving the engineering and musketry instruction. Encourage the officers whilst at Chatham to attend—so far as their leisure will admit—every lecture on Engineering subjects, whether connected with electricity, fortification, surveying, drainage, photography, or any other branch of knowledge now taught at the School. If these suggestions were acted upon, the efficiency of our Infantry could not fail to be increased considerably, for be it remembered, in future campaigning engineering will be of far higher importance than ever it has been before.

Vice-Admiral H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh arrived at Palermo on February 28 with the Channel Squadron, which, according to our correspondent, will be at Gibraltar on March 10.

The so-called Naval Brigade at Trinkitat, under Commander Rolfe, consists of ten officers and 115 seamen, with three Gatling and three Gardner guns, which the correspondent of the Standard telegraphs, can be brought into action in ten seconds. It is gratifying to hear that, thanks to the exertions of officers and men, the stores for the expedition were all landed by Wednesday. It is said our seamen waded into the surf up to their necks to land soldiers dry-footed, but that is an evident exaggeration, as men cannot keep their legs and do work when neck deep.

The Admiralty notify that, having reconsidered the case of Captain A. B. Liardet, R.M.L.I., this officer will be promoted to the rank of Major on his turn arriving, contingent upon his passing the requisite examination for that rank within 12 months of his disembarkation from the Revenge.

Tidings of comfort and of joy for the Senior Assistant-Paymasters! There is actually a chance of one promotion for them this year, as in April next Mr. William Evans, Paymaster of the Penelope, having completed three years' service in that ship will, it is said, probably retire. As the seniors on the List are 15½ years in their present rank, they may indeed be congratulated, and we cannot understand (?) their complaint that "promotion cometh neither from the east nor from the west, nor more especially from the Admiralty, S.W."

The numerous friends of Admiral Sir Sydney Dacres will be sorry to hear he is seriously indisposed.

It is understood that on Captain George Tryon, C.B., attaining Flag rank, in April next, he will resign his present appointment as Secretary of the Admiralty.

The high reputation borne by Captain Cardale and his excellent service did not avail him in the moment of his trial. The charge against him, no doubt, was grave, and the special conditions of the duty in which the troopship was employed demanded excessive caution and vigilance, but if the members who composed the Court which sentenced Captain Cardale to dismissal from his ship were to have been placed, caeteris paribus, in a like position, we think it probable they each and all would have come to a similar judgment. One fact, however, to some extent justifies the severity of the sentence, and that is the speed at which the Euphrates was driven through the fog and dense mist, in a sea exposed to such currents and shifts as that at the Straits of Gibraltar. To keep up a speed of 10·2 knots under the circumstances—there being, as far as we know, no great necessity for the rush—appears strange; and it is fortunate and wonderful the Euphrates and her charge escaped with so little damage, when the vessel grounded.

Rear-Admiral Sir A. H. Hoskins, K.C.B., Superintendent of Naval Reserves, will this day inspect the London Brigade of Royal Naval Artillery Volunteers, Commander the Right Honourable Lord Ashley.

Commander Charles Campbell, of the Alexandra, who has been employed for some time compiling a new code of private signals for her Majesty's Fleet, returned to England from Malta last week, to present his report in person to the Admiralty, and will shortly return to rejoin his ship, now on passage to Alexandria, but detained at Famagusta, Cyprus, repairing her damaged steering gear.

The Admiralty have notified their decision that, whenever a battalion of Royal Marines shall be formed for service abroad, a Quartermaster from one of the Divisions will be included in the staff of such battalion.

Admiral Sir Astley Cooper Key will preside this day at the anniversary meeting of the Royal United Service Institution, at 1 o'clock, when the report of the referees on the Naval Prize Essay, Admirals Ryder and M'Clintock and Captain W. Arthur, C.B., will be read, and the gold medal presented to the writer of the best essay on the subject, "On an outbreak of war, what is the best organisation for distributing the personnel of the Navy and of the Reserves among the available war-vessels, and among a proportion of merchant vessels, as an auxiliary to the Navy."

The Admiralty have expressed to Rear-Admiral Sir W. Hewett, V.C., K.C.B., Commander-in-Chief on the East Indies station, their entire approval of his proceedings; and, at the same time, thanked him for his zeal and energy in the defence of Suakim, embarkation of troops, stores, &c., and conveyance of them to Trinkitat.

It is rumoured that Captain the Right Honourable Lord Charles Scott, C.B., is likely to be shortly appointed to the command of an ironclad.

The Admiralty have permitted Captain East, of the Comus, and Commander Thornton, of the Kingfisher, to accept gold medals from the President of the United States for services rendered to two United States ships in distress on the coast of Vancouver's Island in October, 1882.

Lieutenant-Colonel A. H. Ozzard, R.M.L.I., has been selected by the Admiralty to assume command of the battalion of Royal Marines which left England by the Poonah, for service in the Mediterranean. He left Charing Cross last night for Alexandria, viâ Brindisi.

Under the title of "A New Era for the Russian Fleet," the Deutsche Heeres Zeitung says the Russian Minister of Marine went to the Crimea to be present at the laying-down of some ironclads, after the type of the Inflexible, which will mark a new era for the Fleet in the Black Sea. In a few years Russia will have at Sebastopol a large commercial town, with two ship-yards, one belonging to the State, and the other to a company subsidised by the State. These yards will launch in 1886 four large ironclads. With these, six gunboats, and twelve torpedo boats, the Russians will be able to stop the entrance of the Black Sea.

Captain John Fellowes, of the Minotaur, will have completed two years' service in that ship early in April next, when it is understood Captain F. Britten, who served as Commander of the Sultan when commanded by his Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh, will be appointed in place of Captain Fellowes.

The special correspondent of the Standard, telegraphing from "on board the Euryalus," says:—"I must again remark that it is scandalous that ships-of-war on the Indian station are not fitted with the electric light. Had the vessels now here possessed this apparatus, an attack would be impossible. It is unfortunate that the French ships have not arrived. They would certainly have electric lights, for the French men-of-war are always well supplied with modern scientific apparatus, while the apathy of our own Naval authorities as to such matters is lamentable." Since then the Admiralty have awakened to the fact that the electric light might be useful at Suakim and Trinkitat, and are accordingly sending the apparatus out, piecemeal, of course, for is it possible that, with our present Naval administration and organisation, or, more properly speaking, want of both, there can be anything in store ready for an emergency? Of what use will the apparatus be when it gets out?

Captain and Brevet Major G. A. Heseltine, R.M.L.I., has been promoted to the rank of Major at the Plymouth Division, vice Major Hore, promoted, dated January 9.

The Navy generally will be pleased at the high tribute paid to them by the Special Correspondent of the Standard, in his telegrams as to the work done by the Blue-jackets of the Fleet in landing stores, &c.; as, also, his tribute to the Naval Brigade, under Commander Rolfe, which he designates as "a magnificent body of men."

Quartermaster J. Murphy, R.M.L.I., has been selected by the Admiralty to assume departmental charge of the battalion of Royal Marines at present stationed in the Ramleh Barracks, Alexandria. This is the first time, we believe, that these duties have been performed by a bonâ fide Quartermaster in connection with a battalion of Royal Marines whilst serving abroad, and we have to congratulate their Lordships, as well as the Royal Marine Office on having at last taken such a step as cannot be otherwise than beneficial, both to the public at large and the service generally. The duties of Quartermaster have always hitherto been performed, whilst a battalion of Royal Marines has been serving abroad, by a combatant officer, specially appointed for that duty; and although these duties have, on every occasion, been carried out in the most efficient manner, it has been the means of excluding a most deserving class of officer from reaping those rewards which fall to his more lucky brethren of the Army.

The "Horse Marine" is, it seems, an accomplished fact. He was seen in Egypt in the late war. Now he rides exulting in front of El Teb. Wherever he is, he will do his duty, but we hope he will keep his seat as well as he did when he rode from Vera Cruz to Mexico in 1861.

One of our Paris contemporaries says of the taking of Sontay:—"The enemy during those two warm days of December 16 and 17 offered a most tenacious resistance, which our heroic soldiers could overcome only by the most sustained and strenuous efforts, and at a considerable sacrifice of life. The action commenced on the 16th, by a strong demonstration against the north portion of Sontay—artillery engagement, with some companies thrown out as skirmishers, and forming a curtain. During the night which followed, our main body marched rapidly to the west of the place where the forts of Phu Sa are situated, and a desperate hand-to-hand engagement took place between the Turcos and the Marine Infantry on one side, and the Chinese and the Annamites on the other. The latter are said to have been perfectly well commanded, and it was not without the greatest difficulty that the French were able to carry the fort of Phu Sa, the surrounding villages, and a mosque contiguous to the forts, by assault. From that moment the game was over for the enemy, who had nothing left but to retire into the citadel on one side, and make their escape out of it on the other. The French entered the place on the morning of the 18th, with their bugles sounding." This analysis is chiefly interesting as foreshadowing the sort of resistance which the French are likely to meet at Bacninh.

The statement that Admiral Courbet considers the reinforcements sent to Tonquin insufficient has been again repeated. The Minister of War is preparing a new brigade, and the Minister of Marine is to despatch two battalions of marine fusiliers as promptly as possible. General Millot, who has taken over the command of the forces, is said to have 16,000 men at his disposal.

Why are Osman Digna's followers called "rebels" by the newspaper correspondents? They are in their own land, and are defending it against invasion by strangers, who declare they have nothing at all to do with the country. Osman Digna is the lieutenant of the Mahdi, whom General Gordon has invited to take up the government of the regions from which the Khedive of Egypt is taking away his forces—if he can—under our auspices.

In accordance with the instructions from the Horse Guards yesterday (Friday), the annual course of musketry for 1884-5 will not be commenced throughout the Army on March 1, as had been previously ordered. This instruction will not commence until the new Musketry Regulations have been issued.

It might be well for the House of Lords to appoint a Committee, to ascertain what is the truth as to the state of the Navy, and its strength as compared with that of the other navies of the world. During the last three years there have been so many conflicting statements asserting that the country is anxious to get at the truth of the matter. It is impossible to believe that Lord Henry Lennox, Sir Thomas Symonds, Sir George Elliot, and the Press have entered into a conspiracy to depreciate the Navy; and it is almost as difficult to believe that they are all mistaken. We sincerely trust that at an early day pressure will be brought to bear upon the Government, to induce it to appoint a Royal Commission, or to consent to a Select Committee of the Commons; but failing either of these, the House of Lords might take the matter in hand.

Among our present military requirements, we would include a grammar and a dictionary compiled by a committee of Army reformers. We might learn why they say "fractioned" instead of divided, "reservists" instead of reserve men, "indents" instead of requisitions, "normal" instead of ordinary or usual, and "abnormal" instead of exceptional or unusual.

"Then," says the Standard Correspondent, describing the retreat of Baker's cavalry at El Teb, "the Arabs were seen coming on at a run, stooping low, and hooting like savages." They had no arms but spears and swords. First, these footmen, brandishing lances and swords, drove before them a crowd of horsemen armed with sabres and breech-loaders. Next, they charged against squares, shaky, indeed, but formed of infantry, each man of whom had 70 rounds for his breech-loading rifle, and held on against Krupp guns and Gatlings. Now, surely these were brave men? It is easy to say they were "fanatics." We called the terrible swordsmen who broke through the Highland Brigade at Bareilly, and who charged the 7th Hussars and the guns outside Lucknow, "fanatics" or "gazees." We should have styled them "heroes" had they belonged to a Christian band, "full of hope, misnamed forlorn." The man who does not mind being killed in the attempt to kill his enemy may be nicknamed, but he cannot be despised.

Earl Percy will on Tuesday ask the Secretary of State for War how many of the Captains in the last examination for promotion in the Army failed to pass; whether it is a fact that in the 5th Northumberland Fusiliers five Captains out of seven who went up for examination failed to satisfy the examiners; whether the average service of the three senior Captains is over eighteen years, and whether two of them have distinguished war service; and whether he will consider the advisability of altering the character of the examination, or of making some allowance for senior officers who entered the service on a very much lower standard of examination, and have proved themselves valuable and capable in time of war.

Surgeon-Major Fulton has been appointed principal medical officer to the Victorian Defence Forces. Major Sargood has been in communication with the authorities of Melbourne University with the view of forming a cadet corps among the students. The new Council of Defence consists of the Colonel-Commandant, the senior officer of the naval forces, the senior officer of the Naval Reserve, the senior infantry officer, and the senior artillery officer of the metropolitan district.

The strength of the German Torpedo Corps, the head-quarters of which are at Kiel and Wilhelmshaven, is at present as follows :—Seven torpedo officers, five chief "torpedists," eight "torpedists," one chief engineer, one sub-engineer, one electrical engineer, and 18 mechanical torpedo sub-engineers. It is directly under the orders of the Torpedo Department of the Admiralty in Berlin, at the head of which is Count Schack. It has to carry out all experiments with inventions and improvements that come within its province, and only such torpedoes, apparatus, &c., are supplied to the Active Navy as have previously undergone a careful examination.

Sir Trevor Lawrence will on Monday ask the Secretary of State for War whether any steps are being taken to carry out the recommendations of Lord Morley's Committee, as to the closer union of the Army Medical Department with the Army Hospital Corps.

The Bombay Gazette points out that the difficulties in connection with finding a sufficient supply of officers for regimental duty under the Staff Corps system are very apparent from a study of the new Bombay Army List. The 12th Regiment N.I. is now in the Quetta district. Its head-quarters are at Pishin, and it has a detachment at Sharigh. It ought to have eight officers, namely, a commandant, a second-in-command, a wing-commander, an adjutant and quartermaster, and three wing-officers. Of these we see that the commandant and second-in-command are in England on medical certificate, and the wing-commander is acting as commandant. The senior wing-officer is acting as second-in-command, the second wing-officer is acting judge-advocate at Mhow, the adjutant is officiating as wing-commander, the next wing-officer is attached to the Commissariat Department, and the junior wing-officer is acting as adjutant. Then there are three young officers on probation, one of whom is doing the work of quartermaster. In fact, here is a regiment in which every officer present for duty is acting for somebody else. There is no margin left for sickness or any other casualties; and if any officer were declared unfit for duty, some one else would have to do his work in addition to his own duties. Can such a system be said to be satisfactory? The 2nd N.I. (Grenadiers), now at Quetta, is not much better off. Out of its complement of eight officers, the commandant and wing-commander are both at home on medical certificate, and the second-in-command is acting as commandant. The senior wing-officer is acting wing-commander, one of the wing-officers is absent on medical certificate, and there is one subaltern on probation; total officers present for duty, six. And this, be it remembered, in a regiment on frontier duty, which from its nature might easily and quickly develop into active service. It certainly would be difficult to imagine a more complicated and unsatisfactory arrangement.

Sir George Campbell will, in Committee of Supply on Army Supplementary Estimate, move to reduce the vote for expenditure due to military operations in Egypt by £109,050. What it is to be "a doctrinaire!"

A few months ago considerable uneasiness was felt in Germany, owing to the circumstance that large bodies of Russian cavalry were concentrated at various points along the German frontier. As the force thus drawn together was greatly in excess of that required for the suppression of smuggling, the German Ambassador at St. Petersburg remonstrated with the Russian authorities on the subject, with the result that the force in question has now been reduced to such an extent as to remove the apprehensions of the German Government.

Brief as has been the sojourn of the Duke of Connaught in India, it has been long enough to afford him an opportunity of displaying his nerve in the jungle. A recent issue of the Punjab Herald gives a lively and graphic description of a day's tiger-shooting, in which H.R.H. took a leading part.

The Lancers were abolished by M. Thiers when that would-be great military man was President of the Republic. France had just suffered considerably from the Prussian Light Cavalry, and the name of the Uhlans was in every mouth when the infallible M. Thiers pronounced the Lancers useless. There appears to be a strong feeling in France in favour of re-establishing the Lancers, and many old Lancer officers are said to have kept their shapskas in the hope and faith of a resurrection; no other country has done away with the lance. Curiously enough, the last time the Lancers appeared in the field was at Sedan, where the corps was originally raised in 1811, on the model of the Polish Lancers. At Waterloo, says a French writer, the Lancers were decimated, but all by themselves they destroyed a brigade of the English Guard and recaptured the colours which the infantry had lost. This is something quite new.

A few months before he died, General Skobeleff observed to an interviewer, "I do not understand military men in England writing in the Army and Navy Gazette, which I take in and read, of a Russian invasion of India. I should not like to be commander of such an expedition. The difficulties would be enormous." Nemirovitch-Dantchenko exultingly eulogises the "address" Skobeleff displayed in 1878 in extracting the English plans from Sir Henry Layard during the entertainments at the English Embassy at Constantinople. In quoting at the time Skobeleff's remarks, we threw doubts upon the value of his opinions. The annexation of Merv, apart from his later views of the invasion of India, confirm what we said. This annexation has brought up the whole Central-Asian question afresh. If Russian officers are beginning to formulate plans for the invasion of India, it is clearly the duty of English officers to study projects for repelling them. By the incorporation of the Merv region, Russia has extended her boundary, or is about to do so, to within 140 miles of Herat. Our own, at Quetta, is 514 miles from that great strategical point. It follows, therefore, that the Russians are about to take up a position which will enable them to carry Herat by a coup de main in five or six days, and possess then the same basis Ayoob Khan had when he descended upon our forces and defeated them at Maiwand three years ago. England is thus almost brought face to face with a Power whose interests in every part of Asia are inimical to our own. "Herat," wrote in 1875 Sir Charles MacGregor, "is easily accessible from Merv, for guns, cavalry, and infantry. How soon 5,000 men could be transferred from one place to the other I leave my readers to work out for themselves. All I contend is, that to do so would be a perfectly feasible, nay, an easy military operation." Krasnovodsk is opposite Baku, where a vast industrial centre is rising, owing to the development of the Apsheron petroleum deposits, the richest in the world. The Army of the Caucasus on a peace footing consists of 100,000 men, mostly gathered near Tiflis. From Tiflis to Baku the railway train can convey troops, at the slowest pace, in 20 hours. At Baku there are 25 piers for shipping oil, all accommodating several vessels apiece. On the Caspian are 50 steamers; 20 new ones are being added every year. There is thus transport for the largest army without touching the 700 steamers of the Volga. From Baku to Krasnovodsk is 16 hours' run, to Michaelovsk, the railway starting point, a few hours' journey in smaller steamers. From here to Kizil Arvat is 144 miles' railway run, which can be performed in six or seven hours. At this point the soldier leaves steam behind him and has the following distances to do on foot,—To Askabad, 161 miles; to Sarakhs, 331 miles; to Merv, 368 miles; and to Herat, 533 miles." The Russian soldier thus takes three days to get from the Caucasus base to the termination of steam communication; the English soldier more than three weeks from Portsmouth to Sibi. Before long the Russians will extend their railway to Sarakhs, or to within 200 miles of Herat, rendering their power of concentrating a force at that point still greater. Anyone who has followed the growth of events in the Transcaspian region must have been struck with the rapid development of Russia's power there. Skobeleff had scarcely any transport for his army in 1881; there are now 50 large steamers in the Caspian. The railway to Baku, shortening the distance from the Tiflis base from three weeks to twenty hours, was not opened, nor yet the railway to Kizil Arvat. In short, there has been a complete revolution in the Central Asian question since the evacuation of Candahar, and the impending occupation of Merv necessitates a fresh examination of it by military men. For the last three years no officer has attempted to deal with the question, and the subject has quite dropped at the United Service Institution. This is not what should be. A great Parliamentary debate on Central Asia is arranged to come off before Easter; we should like to see it preceded by an earnest and thoughtful discussion at Whitehall. Finally, as we have stated before, we do not like to see such an important subject left to be dealt with simply by political writers.

The universal condemnation of khaki as a dress for soldiers on all occasions in the hot weather in India has had its effect, and a General Order just issued says: —"In modification of the instructions contained in G.O. 62 of 1882, and in G.O. 20 of 1883, the Commander-in-Chief is pleased to direct that white clothing be resumed by staff officers and British troops, during the hot weather, as a parade dress. Khaki will continue to be worn at musketry, fatigues, &c., and for this purpose each man should be required to keep up two suits." About four months ago the Commander-in-Chief called for reports from officers commanding corps and batteries upon the subject of the khaki. The condemnation of it as the summer clothing for the British soldier in time of peace was all but unanimous; and it is, of course, on the strength of these reports that the Commander-in-Chief has decided to re-introduce white clothing. The change from khaki to white is to be carried out gradually. It seems as if khaki uniform were to be added to the Government's unrealised ideals. By the time Lord Ripon leaves India, the list will be rather a long one.

A report is circulating at Odessa that the Russian Government intends largely extending the fortifications at Sebastopol during the current year, in view of the rapidly growing Naval and commercial importance of the place. A direct line of steamers is to be established between Sebastopol and Batoum in the spring.

According to the latest Russian official report, the Army consists at the present moment of 28,074 officers and 836,145 rank and file. The troops are disposed as follows in the various circonscriptions :—St. Petersburg, 82,470; Finland, 13,445; Wilna, 104,366; Warsaw, 110,287; Kief, 56,684; Odessa, 63,433; Kharkoff, 63,146; Moscow, 84,525; the Caucasus, 99,854; Ormsk, 20,838; East Siberia, 17,058; and finally, Turkestan, 26,679.

The French Parliament is engaged in studying a proposition for the creation of a Colonial Army, recent events having proved the necessity of such a force. For the Tunis expedition it was found very difficult to get troops without a mobilisation, and it was the same thing with the Tonquin expedition. Neither affair was serious enough to warrant a mobilisation,—there would have been an outcry had one Army Corps been mobilised, and not the others,—and the effectives were so low that a hundred battalions had to be altogether disorganised in order to procure an insignificant force—insignificant as regards the immense number of men at the disposal of the Minister of War in case of a European emergency. The mobilisation is not like a Nasmyth hammer, capable of welding huge masses of iron and of cracking a nut. It is only of use for heavy work. Hence the idea of forming a Colonial Army, always ready to go anywhere and do anything, without disturbing the organisation of the home service. It is estimated that this force will cost a little over £1,000,000 a year, and it will be raised and maintained in Africa. The present plan is to increase the strength of several of the irregular corps which are stationary in Algeria. Most of the troops engaged in Tonquin have been drawn from that colony,—Turcos, Foreign Legion, &c. If we were to have such a force, say at Cyprus, it might prove a saving in the long run.

We notice from the last batch of Bombay Army Orders that Lieutenant Scallon, Adjutant, 23rd Bombay N.I., has been appointed an extra aide-de-camp to General Hardinge. In making this appointment, General Hardinge has done a graceful act, in recognising the merit of a young officer who has already won for himself a name as one of the most hard-working and best adjutants in the Bombay Army. Last year Lieutenant Scallon was offered an appointment in the Quartermaster-General's Department, which he declined, as he wished to remain with his regiment, which he has worked up to very near the top of the tree in the annual musketry return, and made one of the best known and most efficient on the Bombay side.

At the request of the Russian Intendance Department, General Gourko has ordered 11 officers at Warsaw to subsist for 27 days on conserves, receiving during that period the regular campaign allowance, and at the end to furnish a report on the various tinned foods composing the officers' diet. A fortnight ago an order was issued at Moscow for three regiments, two of infantry and one of cavalry, to undergo a similar trial for a month.

The command of the Sirhind Division of the Bombay Army was offered, we understand, to Lieutenant-General R. Hume, C.B., commanding the Lahore Division, but was declined.

Major-General T. Wright, C.B., Bengal Staff Corps, at present in the Australian Colonies, has accepted the offer of a divisional command in the Bengal Presidency, and will succeed to Lieutenant-General W. T. Hughes's vacancy. General Wright will have the good-fortune to be posted to the Sirhind Division, as Major-General Murray, now at Umballa, who would have succeeded to this vacancy, will, it is said, have to wait for the one which will be made at the end of the year by Lieutenant-General Cureton.

The 90th Regiment of French Infantry is probably the oldest regiment in the world. Its career can be traced from the Band of Picardy, formed during the last year of King Louis XI., in August, 1483, by Marshal d'Esguerdes, its first colonel. It served with distinction during the three centuries prior to the revolution of 1789. At this period of its history it ranked as the 2nd Regiment of the Line, and was dressed in white, with sky-blue facings and gold lace. On January 1, 1794, the 1st Battalion of Picardy became part of the 3rd Demi-Brigade of the reorganised Republican army; but in February, 1796, the 3rd Demi-Brigade was renumbered as the 8th. Demi-Brigades having been styled regiments on September 24, 1803, the old Picardy regiment became the 8th Regiment of the Line, and as such it served during the wars of the First Empire. The army being remodelled at the restoration of the Bourbons in 1814, the 8th kept their number, and received into its ranks four battalions of the disbanded 122nd Foot. After Waterloo, the staff and depôt of the 8th became (together with the 8th Light Infantry) the Legion of the East Pyrenees, resuming for a few years the traditional white coats of the Monarchy, but in 1820 the system of regimental legions proving inconvenient, numbers were re-established (would it were so in our own

Army!), and the East Pyrenees became the 15th Light Infantry, a number they retained until the Crimean War, when Napoleon III., abolishing light regiments, tacked them on to the Line, making the old Picardy the 90th Regiment of the Line, no doubt the oldest regiment in the world. The 90th bear on their colours "Valmy," "Austerlitz," "Isly," and "Magenta." The above details are extracted from General Sarane's interesting history of the French Infantry. The present 94th are lineally descended from the old historical Regiment of Navarre.

Mr. Tottenham will on Monday ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will state the principle on which a Staff officer living in one of the wooden huts of the Camps of Instruction at Aldershot, and elsewhere, is called upon to pay taxes for the quarters occupied by him, while a regimental officer living in the next hut is exempt from such liability; whether the occupation by Staff officers of quarters in camp is, in most cases, compulsory; and whether they are not, equally with regimental officers, liable to frequent and instant removal; and if, in such cases of removal, any refund is made of the amount paid by them in advance.

We have to report this week the death of three French officers who occupied prominent positions in the service of their country. First of all, General Schramm, by far away the oldest officer in France, then General de Wimpffen; and lastly, General Borel. General Schramm joined the French Army in those days when, as Béranger sang,—

> "Were not our children, as they went
> Jocund to join the warrior's tent,
> Soldiers at ten, heroes at twenty?"

Schramm was born on December 1, 1789; he entered the service in 1799, and in 1800 he was a sub-lieutenant. He was at Austerlitz in 1805, where he was decorated and promoted. In 1807 he was at the siege of Dantzic, and was wounded at Heilsburg. The story goes that as Schramm, who was then serving in the Imperial Guard, was lying on the ground, Napoleon passed, and asked him what he was crying for. Schramm replied that what grieved him was the idea of not having won his epaulettes. Upon this the Emperor, to soothe what he thought were poor Schramm's last moments, gave him a company. Schramm soon recovered, and the next year he was fighting against us in Spain. He did not, however, remain long in the Peninsula. Napoleon was obliged to turn his attention towards Austria, and Schramm joined the Grand Army in time to take part in the battles of Wagram and Essling. He afterwards returned for a short time to Spain, and then took part in that fearful Russian campaign, when,—

> "The Emperor Nap., he would set out
> On a summer excursion to Moscow."

After the retreat from Moscow, Schramm was promoted to the rank of Colonel. In 1813, Schramm highly distinguished himself at Lützen and other battles, and in September, 1813, being only 24 years of age, he was created Baron and Brigadier-General. At the end of the year he was taken prisoner, when Gouvion St. Cyr was obliged to surrender Dresden. In 1814, when Napoleon abdicated for the first time, Schramm returned to France, but he refused to serve the Bourbons. During the Hundred Days, he once more served the Emperor, commanded the troops in the Maine et Loire, but was not at Waterloo. After the second fall of Napoleon, Schramm, faithful to his old master, retired from the service, and quietly devoted his time to the study of military matters until Louis Philippe was called to the throne. He then emerged from his obscurity, and took part in the expedition to Belgium and the siege of Antwerp. General Schramm then served in Algeria, and on his return to France in 1847 he was created Count, and President of the Infantry Committee. When Louis Napoleon became President, General Schramm was appointed Minister of War; but he preferred resigning office, to signing an order for the arrest of General Changarnier. In 1852, General Schramm was made a Senator, and he remained a Senator until the fall of the Second Empire. He is said to have been much vexed at not having been able to take part in the Franco-German war; but when that broke out, he was 80 years of age. Since the war, the gallant old veteran resided at Courneuve, close to St. Denis; and three years ago the good people of Paris were much astonished to hear that the General had been robbed of about £40,000 in money, shares, &c. The robbers had entered the General's bed-room while he was asleep; had opened his desk, and had absconded, without beat of drum. It was not until two years later that the thieves were captured, and most of the stolen property recovered. What a stretch of service, from 1799 to 1884! General Borel served in the Crimea, Italy, Algeria, and during the Franco-German War; and he was afterwards War Minister for a short time, succeeding General du Barrail. General De Wimpffen was born at Laon in 1811, four years before the Emperor Napoleon wrote his famous twenty-ninth bulletin from that place, recounting the disaster of Waterloo. The young De Wimpffen was educated at St. Cyr. In 1840 we find him a captain of Turcos, in 1847 colonel of that corps, and after the Crimea, Brigadier-General. De Wimpffen then served in the Imperial Guard, and after the Italian campaign became General of Division. He afterwards returned to Algeria, where he commanded the province of Oran, and he was engaged in putting down a rebellion on the Morocco frontier when he was suddenly recalled to France, in consequence of the disasters which had overtaken the French arms at the opening of the campaign of 1870. General Comte Palikao, who was then War Minister, gave him the command of the Fifth Army Corps, and sent him to join MacMahon, with orders to assume the command, should anything happen to the Marshal. It was not until August 29 that the General left Paris, so he tumbled into the thick of the fight at Sedan, on September 1. In the course of the morning, MacMahon was wounded by a shell, and was obliged to retire from the field. Not aware of the order which General de Wimpffen had in his pocket, he handed over the command to General Ducrot, whose first act was to give directions for a retreat on Mezières. As General Wimpffen was strongly opposed to this movement, he produced his appointment and took over the command-in-chief, although, having only just joined the Army, he could not have had time to make himself master of the position. He immediately countermanded the orders given by General Ducrot, and conceived the idea of cutting his way through the Bavarians. He wrote to the Emperor asking him to place himself at the head of his troops, but receiving no answer, he ordered the attack to be made; the Bavarians were driven out of Balan, and fled. At this moment the General received a message from the Emperor, saying that he looked upon his proposal as useless, and recommending him to treat with the enemy. De Wimpffen refused at first, and it was not until General Lebrun arrived with positive orders, and the information that the white flag had been hoisted at Sedan, that he consented to negotiate. And thus the whole French Army laid down its arms and became the prey of the conqueror, and General de Wimpffen, who had been in command only a few hours, had to attach his signature to one of the most complete military disasters on record. General Ducrot, disguised as a peasant, managed to effect his escape and take part in the defence of Paris; but General de Wimpffen was led away captive to Stuttgart, where, as he afterwards related, he was much surprised to see small German boys not "creeping unwilling to school," but marching there and marching back. The committee of inquiry which sat after the conclusion of peace having expressed itself dissatisfied with the conduct of General de Wimpffen, that officer threw himself into the rank of the discontents, and began writing articles on military matters in a Radical newspaper.

The British Medical Journal, in a warm article on "The Indian Medical Service," says it was:—"Willing to hope that the respectful representations of the case of the medical officers, by the Parliamentary Bills Committee of the Association, to the Secretary of State for India, would have sufficed to bring about the desired redress. We are sorry to say that our reasonable hopes have not been realised. One thing only has been done; the India Office has withdrawn the deceptive document put into the hands of intending candidates for appointments which has given rise to so much discontent, for the very plain reason that it held out expectations which were not fulfilled. We are reluctantly," says our contemporary, "constrained to notice a rumour which has been, we are assured, widely circulated, at least in the Bengal Medical service, on high authority, to the effect that, if they give more trouble, Lord Kimberley is prepared, if necessary, to sanction the dismissal of the 70 or 80 junior members on the list. We cannot believe that Lord Kimberley would for a moment contemplate a high-handed measure like this. It is probable that this unofficial threat, if made at all, was issued in a moment of irritation from the lips of some local official, who has, without authority, used the Secretary of State's name."

On Tuesday last, the officers and students of the training-ship Marlborough gave an "at home" to a large number of guests. The string band of the R.M.L.I. performed during the evening. The two pieces, "Turn Him Out" and "Raising the Wind," were admirably performed, the characters being portrayed in a manner which reflected great credit on the performers. Not a single hitch occurred, whilst the scenery, which was entirely the work of two students, Messrs. T. Gwyer and C. G. Taylor, who devoted a deal of time and artistic ability in preparing the stage, &c., left little to be desired. Conspicuous over the stage were two sketches of the ship, one as she was when in commission, and one as she is in 1884. Mr. W. Onyon played a solo on the clarionet, and Mr. Sercombe sang a very good song ("Spinning"), which was vociferously encored. Mr. Larg also sang a solo with effect. The performance took place in the gymnasium, which was tastefully decorated with flags, &c. Refreshments were laid out in the messrooms and study. The accompanyists on the piano were Messrs. Wheeter and Parrott, whilst the general arrangements were carried out by the senior student, Mr. Morrish, and a committee. Altogether, the "at home" was a great success. Com. E. J. Wingfield appears to be very popular among the students. Admiral Sir Geoffrey Phipps Hornby, Commander-in-Chief, Lady and the Misses Hornby, Flag-Lieut. G. V. Hegan, Admiral F. A. Herbert and Mrs. Herbert, Capt. and Mrs. P. H. Colomb, Capt. Rowley, A.D.C., the captains and officers of the ships in harbour, the officers R.M.A. and R.M.L.I., and the officers of the dockyard, besides numerous residents of Portsmouth, were among the guests.

Mr. John Hayes, of 27 Leadenhall Street, has been awarded "a diploma of honour" for the application of the Fromentin Patent Automatic Boiler-feeder during the Exhibition to the boilers in the Electric Lighting Department

HISTORICAL ACCURACY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—In your issue of Feb. 23 I see another letter from Mr. Clifford Walton, the historian. We accept with great delight all that tends to strengthen our hands, and he is strongly in favour of retaining any national dress, or, let us hope, any part of a national dress. I hope, therefore, that we have this gentleman's signature, and that all sores will be healed that may have been made by my perfervid pen. Campbell of Islay, John Campbell, ransacked every book some years ago, civil and military records, and I know the result of these researches. He drew the picture of the Earl of Murray, and coloured this drawing in water-colours years ago at Taymouth. This is the picture I alluded to when I wrote to the Standard as to the ostrich feathers being worn in Charles I.'s days in Highland full-dress. Lord Morley says the origin of the feather bonnet cannot be traced further back than the days of Sir R. Abercrombie. The answer to this is that the 74th wore this head-gear at the taking of Seringapatam. We desire that our Highland regiments be allowed to retain this head-dress in the same manner as other regiments are allowed to retain distinctive head-gear. We reckon they have as good a right to retain this as have the following regiments to retain their distinctive dress:—Guards, Life Guards, Hussars, Lancers, Scots Greys, and Fusilier regiments; all these regiments, when ordered on foreign service, adopt the service helmet, but their other head-gear is retained. We ask that our regiments be accorded a like favour.—I am, &c.,

ARCHIBALD CAMPBELL.

PIPE-RIBBONS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Not content with an attack on the feather bonnet, I now hear that the Stuart ribbons on the pipes of the band of the Black Watch are to be done away with. Why tear down the Royal colour of the Royal Highland Regiment? Why order this badge to be discontinued? What is the policy of this? What does it signify and mean? It means that the War-Office officials are ignorant of history, for the regiment always had a right to this distinction, and are too careless to gather the opinion and gauge the feelings of the officers and men of Highland Regiments. Why should this be? The officials will need all the spirit, all the gallantry, and all the endurance they have at their command in these regiments; therefore, why cause needless annoyance? Depend upon it, Sir, because the English officials have torn the badges from English regiments, and produced chaos, it is not good policy to say, "Why should the Scotch regiments not also suffer?" This is adding folly to folly, and evil to evil.—I am, &c.,

ARCHIBALD CAMPBELL.

14 Beaufort Gardens, Brompton, Feb. 28.

P.S.—Tennyson has sung,—

> "The old order giveth way to new."
>
> Time-honoured rights lie in the dust,
> To please the Saxon crew, let as add, with an excuse for the rhyme not being perfect, as we are out of tune, too.—A. C.

SERVICE "WHIGMELERIES."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—May I, a civilian and an artisan, be permitted to ask whether, at a time like the present, when the public should be encouraged to take serious interest in the reform of, or the re-establishment of the British Army upon a sound and reliable basis, a battle about a "bonnet" is not somewhat frivolous? No reasonable person would wish to withhold or take away from "national" or "county" regiments time-honoured distinctions in badge or dress. But Lord Archibald Campbell's letters on the Highland bonnet, I fear, will support the opinion that prevails in many quarters that the Scotch are over-fond of "whigmeleries," and that they lay claim to fashions and customs that did not originate with them. Lord Archibald suggests economy by asking us to go to Aden for our feathers. If argument on the propriety of allowing a Scotch mess to indulge in a haggis were to proceed on similar lines, I presume we ought to go to North America for the real article. As is well known, every part of the carcase of the reindeer serves the natives who people its habitat for food. The entire stomach, with its contents of lichens and other vegetables, is also eaten just as it is taken from the animal, sometimes raw, sometimes cooked,—the vegetable substances being much more easily digested by human beings after they have partially undergone that process by the gastric juice of a ruminating animal. Some Indians and Canadians leave the savoury mixture to ferment or season for a few days before they cook or eat it. Fermentation may improve a haggis, but discussion of the porcupine and thistle order will not promote esprit de corps.—I am, Sir, &c.,

ANOTHER CAMPBELL.

Instructions were received at Sheerness on Feb. 25 directing the Garnet, 6 guns, 1,124 tons, 1,110 horse-power, attached to the 4th Division of the Medway Steam Reserve, to be brought forward for foreign service with all possible despatch.

The Royal yacht Osborne, having completed her annual refit and embellishing at Portsmouth, went out of harbour on Feb. 25, for the trial of her machinery in the Solent. The run was perfectly satisfactory. The Osborne will convey the Queen to the Continent in April.

Com. Erskine, commanding the English squadron in Australasian waters, and Com. Moore, of the Dart, have addressed warm letters of thanks to the French Governor of New Caledonia, for kindness shown by the captain of the French ship Bruat to the gunner of the Dart, after he had been wounded at Ambryn, New Hebrides.

Several firms have been invited to tender for the electric-search and yardarm lights for the Raleigh, fitting at Keyham as a flagship. The iron corvette Bacchante, at Portsmouth, and the Conqueror, turret-ship, at Chatham, are also to be fitted with the electric light.

20th Lancashire Fusiliers. Lieut. Monk, 2nd Batn., arrived home from India on Sunday in H.M.S. Malabar.

21st Royal Scots Fusiliers. Brevet Major Auchinleck, Capt. Carr, Lieut. Collins, and 137 non-commissioned officers and men, 2nd Batn., will embark in H.M.S. Malabar next week for conveyance to Bombay. Capt. Duckett, 2nd Batn., arrived home from India on Sunday in H.M.S. Malabar.

31st East Surrey Regiment. The head-quarters and one half-battalion left England on Thursday en route to Gibraltar. The left half-battalion will leave England on Tuesday next.

34th Border Regiment. Capt. Wood and Lieut. Browne left England on Sunday last in H.M.S. Crocodile.

35th Royal Sussex Regiment. Lieut. Todd-Thornton has been appointed to the Mounted Infantry in Egypt, for active service with the Cavalry Brigade of the Soudan Expedition, under Brigdr.-Gen. Stewart.

40th South Lancashire Regiment. Lieut. Lamb is the winner of the Northern India Association's championship, with a total of 822 points.

44th Essex Regiment. The head-quarters and service companies left India on the 17th ult. for Aden.

ROYAL MARINES.

Major and Brevet Lieut.-Col. J. M. Moody, R.M.L.I., has been promoted (dated Feb. 11, 1884) to be lieut.-col. at the Portsmouth Division. Capt. A. B. Liardet obtains his majority (contingent on his passing the required examination), and Lieut. and Adjt. A. Haughton his company in succession.

Leave of absence has been granted for one month to Major W. H. Clements, Capt. and Brevet Major A. B. Crosbie, Capt. R. B. Kirchhoffer, and Capt. and Adjt. H. S. Thompson, R.M.L.I., with the understanding that they are to rejoin immediately, if required for home or other service.

Lieut.-Col. A. H. Ozzard and Qrmr. J. Murphy, R.M.L.I., left Charing Cross last evening by the tidal train for Alexandria, viâ Brindisi.

Lieut. and Assist.-Instructor in Musketry S. P. Falls has been granted leave of absence to the 20th prox., in extension.

Lieut. W. J. Gaitskell, R.M.A., has been appointed (Jan. 26) to be an assistant-instructor of gunnery at Eastney, vice Lieut. Swinburne, promoted. The appointment is not to exceed three years, unless renewed.

Consequent on the retirement of Major W. H. V. Tom, R.M.L.I., Capt. and Brevet Major E. S. Innes has been promoted to the rank of major, and Lieut. G. Skipwith to the rank of captain (dated Jan. 26). Major Innes' promotion is contingent upon his qualifying for the rank of major.

The under-mentioned officers of the Royal Marine forces have passed the examination for promotion to the ranks specified against their names:—R.M.A.—Capt. and Brevet Major W. L. T. Cockraft; Capts. G. M. S. Douglas, E. R. M. Crooke, and L. R. Connolly to the rank of major; Lieuts. J. W. Grant (special certificate, distinguished in fortification), L. J. Pease, and W. T. Gaitskell to the rank of captain. R.M.L.I.—Capts. C. B. G. Dick and H. E. Robbins to the rank of major; Lieuts. J. W. Robyns, A. F. Gatliff, F. G. Cotter (special certificates, distinguished in tactics), E. C. S. Congdon, D. L. Barrett, and H. C. Fraser to the rank of captain.

64th North Staffordshire Regiment. Mr. Biggar will on Thursday ask the Secretary of State for War whether it is true that Capt. Haldane, whilst lately serving in the North Staffordshire Regt., was under arrest on charges in connection with the falsification of accounts and the misappropriation of a considerable sum of money; whether a compromise was entered into by which Capt. Haldane was made to resign his commission, receiving a gratuity from the State, from which the amount fraudulently misappropriated was guaranteed to be paid; whether Capt. Haldane has recently retired, and has received from the State £1,200, out of which the sum misapplied by him has been deducted; and whether the Government were in possession of all the facts of the case previous to their sanctioning Capt. Haldane's retirement; or, if not, whether a searching inquiry will be instituted, with the view of ascertaining the responsible parties.

65th York and Lancaster Regiment. Major J. H. G. Holroyd, late of the regiment, who recently resigned his appointment in the Egyptian Gendarmerie, has been re-appointed by Mr. Clifford Lloyd, with the approval of Gen. Baker Pasha, Deputy-Inspector of Police at Alexandria.

76th West Riding Regiment. Capt. Seton is about to exchange into the 100th Regt. with Capt. Thomson.

95th Derbyshire Regiment (Sherwood Foresters). Major Miller, who has exchanged from the 64th with Major Bowles, will leave for India on the 6th inst.

99th Wilts Regiment. Capt. Hatch left England on Sunday in H.M.S. Crocodile.

100th Leinster Regiment (Royal Canadians). Capt. Thomson has arranged an exchange to the 76th Regt. with Capt. Seton.

Army Medical Department. The British Medical Journal is much gratified to learn that Dr. O'Leary has been gazetted to the honorary rank of deputy surg.-gen. This step on the part of the military authorities shows that they are completely satisfied that Dr. O'Leary has entirely cleared himself from the aspersions brought against him with regard to his conduct while serving with the Egyptian expedition.

The Auxiliary Forces.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

The first annual meeting of the newly-inaugurated London Rifle Association took place on Wednesday evening in the North Court Jury Room of the Guildhall, under the presidency of Capt. Wadd, London Rifle Brigade. A Council was appointed of five members from each corps, with Lord Napier of Magdala as President.

A circular issued from the War Office states that the Quartermaster-General has been directed by the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief to inform officers commanding Volunteer corps that an opportunity will be afforded for a certain number of Rifle Volunteers to drill with the Regular troops at Aldershot for a period of eight days, from Saturday, Aug. 9, to Saturday, Aug. 16.

THE LATE ADMIRAL GLYN, C.B.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—Noticing in the "Obituary" of your impression last week that "the late Admiral [Glyn] was sent with Admiral Dundas, Prince Leiningen, and about 30 seamen to the Danube, and after many engagements with the enemy his conduct and that of the Prince were brought to the notice of the authorities, with the result of their being rewarded by the Sultan with the only gold medals which were given to officers of their rank," and this statement having also appeared in several other journals, might I suggest that Admiral Dundas, who commanded the British Fleet, would hardly have been sent with such a party on an expedition of that sort? I therefore enclose Lord Raglan's despatch on the occasion, which gives the correct names of the officers employed on that duty (with the omission of Lieut. Pratt, R.E.), and who also received the "Golden Order of Glory."—I am, &c., Fact.

Copy of Lord Raglan's Despatch.

"Before Sebastopol, Jan. 16, 1855.

"I have the honour to lay before your Grace the copy of a despatch from Lieut.-Col. Simmons, which he wrote at the desire of Omar Pasha, expressing his Highness's approbation of the services of Major Bent, R.E., and the detachment of sappers, which I lent him in the summer, his regret at the loss of Lieut. Bourke, R.E., and his high sense of the conduct and exertions of Lieut. Glyn, R.N., of his Serene Highness Prince Edward of Saxe-Leiningen, and the detachment of seamen of H.M.'s Fleet employed in the construction of the bridge across the Danube, the success of which he attributes in a great measure to their well-planned dispositions. Col. Simmons, your Grace will observe, has further been desired by Omar Pasha to say that it would be gratifying to him if her Majesty should be graciously pleased to reward these officers for the able services they have rendered to the Ottoman Army and the common cause. I think it right to mention that the Hon. Major Gage, R.H.A., conducted these detachments to Rustchuk from Varna. I appointed him to this duty, having previously sent him to examine the armament at the former place, and being satisfied that the employment of his services on the occasion would be advantageous.—(Signed) Raglan."

[In the original paragraph in the Army and Navy Gazette respecting the late gallant and lamented officer, there was no mention of Admiral Dundas, but the inaccuracy to which our correspondent refers appeared in the statement of the Admiral's services taken from a daily paper and not corrected.—Ed. A. & N. G.]

ASSISTANT-PAYMASTERS, R.N.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—You very truly remark, in your issue of the 16th inst., that in consequence of there being no age retirements from the Paymasters' List this year, the promotion of assistant-paymasters will be few. It has been advocated over and over again that the age for compulsory retirement should be 55, not 60, as at present, and 50 the voluntary age, thus putting the paymasters on the same footing as fleet surgeons and chief engineers. Surely this is but a small thing to ask of the Admiralty, and whilst ensuring more rapid promotion to the assistant-paymasters, it would be conferring a boon upon the paymasters which would, I am sure, be greatly appreciated. Unfortunately, we are no one's children, and have no representative at head-quarters, as is the case with the medical and engineering branches of the service, to put forward our claims.—I am, &c., Paymaster, R.N.

THE CHANNEL SQUADRON.

Aranci Bay, Gulf of Terranova, February 25.

The Achilles, with her new captain, Capt. A. Buller, C.B., rejoined us at Cagliari, on Monday, the 11th; she brought from Gibraltar a number of midshipmen and naval cadets, and other supernumeraries for the Squadron. The same evening the Admiral made a signal that he had been instructed to remain there to await orders. On Wednesday evening, orders were given for the Minotaur, Achilles, Northumberland, and Neptune to get up steam and prepare for sea. There was considerable excitement and many conjectures as to our destination, till it became known that we were only going as far as Palermo, to fill up with coal. Orders had been received for the Squadron to complete, and the amount procurable at Cagliari was only sufficient for two ships. The Agincourt, Sultan, and Forward remained there and commenced coaling the next day. The flagship, and those accompanying her, left Cagliari at 8 p.m., and arrived at Palermo on Friday morning, the 15th. A collier, which had just arrived, had been secured by the Consul, on his hearing that the Squadron was coming. She went alongside the different ships in succession, so the coaling was got through more conveniently and expeditiously than would have been the case had lighters had to be loaded and towed off. We had beautiful weather during the few days of our stay; it was hotter than we have had it since we came into the Mediterranean. There was the general rush of everybody not actually on duty to the shore, which usually accompanies coaling, even at places less attractive. The Duke of Edinburgh paid an official visit to the civic authorities. Altogether, our unexpected visit to Palermo formed a very agreeable interlude in the programme of the cruise. We left on Sunday evening, and arrived here on Tuesday morning, the 19th; we had a fair wind the whole way, to which we made sail. The Minotaur was for some time under sail alone, the other ships steaming about 20 revolutions to keep station. The Northumberland parted company on Monday, and went on, intending to join Admiral Wilson; she did not meet the Agincourt, so came on here, and arrived the next afternoon, some hours after the others, the Agincourt, Sultan, and Forward having arrived, they having left Cagliari on Monday. The last three days have been devoted to the Squadron Regatta; on Thursday, the pulling races came off; on Friday, sailing races, the boats in separate classes, and using only service rigs; and Saturday, the All-comers' Sailing Race, without restrictions as to rig, for the Admiral's Cup. The Northumberland secured the lion's share of the prizes on Thursday; she got six firsts and one second. The Neptune was next, with four firsts and three seconds. There were 16 races altogether. There was considerable excitement about the All-comers' Race, especially on board the Minotaur and Neptune, as they both fancied their own barge would prove the winning boat. They did eventually finish first and second, the Duke's barge winning. There were a great variety of races, as, besides several for seamen, there were one each for Marines, stokers, bandsmen, excused and working idlers, and two for boys. Friday was not a very favourable day for the sailing races. It was beautifully fine and warm, but there was not enough wind. In the forenoon there was a light westerly breeze, but by the time the boats got to the starting-point it fell calm. The races were put off till the afternoon, and the boats pulled or were towed back to their ships. In the afternoon a breeze from the S.E. sprang up. The starting buoys were at once shifted, and the boats again assembled, but it was nearly 3 o'clock before they could be started, so, as the wind was still light, the course was made only once round the mark-boats instead of twice, as had been originally intended. There was a race for each class of boat, and besides the money prize for the boat's crew, a cup is to be given to the officer who sailed the winning boat in the cutter over 28 ft. class, by the Duke of Edinburgh; and to those in the launch, and cutter under 28 ft., by Lord Shannon, who is staying on board the Minotaur with the Duke. The Duke's prize was won by the Northumberland's cutter, and Lord Shannon's by the Minotaur's launch and Sultan's cutter. The race for the cup on Saturday, which at one time looked as if it would have to be given up, proved a very close and exciting one. A start was made in a very light breeze, and after all the boats had rounded the first mark-boat it fell almost a dead calm, and they all lay for nearly an hour with hardly steerage way, the small boats creeping ahead a little by vigorously rolling and jerking. It was almost determined to recall the boats and put the race off, when a breeze came in from seaward, which soon altered the appearance of things. Soon after reaching the boats it freshened to a good strong breeze, and as the boats had little or no ballast in, it was quite as much as some of them could do to carry whole sails. It was soon evident that, bar mishaps, the race lay between Capt. Fellowes in the Minotaur's launch, and Com. Sir Baldwin Walker in the Northumberland's. After a long beat up they rounded the last mark-boat within a few seconds of each other, and ran down between the lines almost abreast; they finished between the two flag-ships, Sir Baldwin Walker winning by a few yards. The final run in was watched with great interest from all the ships, and both boats were loudly applauded, as so close a finish is very rarely seen. There was one casualty,—the Northumberland's pinnace capsized, but fortunately no one was hurt. It has not yet been officially given out when we leave, or whether we are to visit Port Mahon, but we are to be at Gibraltar by March 10, the day laid down in the original programme.

General H.S.H. Prince EDWARD of SAXE-WEIMAR, K.C.B.
OFFICE—40 CHARING CROSS, S.W.

This Asylum was opened in February, 1854, to provide a home for the widows of non-commissioned officers and privates of the Army of not less than 50 years of age.

There are 65 widows in the Asylum.

Each widow has a furnished room, and receives seven shillings weekly, besides a monthly allowance of two shillings and sixpence for coals.

The House is capable of containing 70 widows, and the Committee appeal to the public for funds to enable them to admit the additional number, the present subscriptions being insufficient.

The funded income of the charity yields only £930, with an additional £50 from the Princess Mary's Fund for Nurses, to meet an estimated expenditure of £3,000 per annum.

An annual subscription of half-a-guinea, or a donation of five guineas, entitles to one vote at each election, with the right of nominating a candidate.

Army & Navy Gazette.
LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 1, 1884.

AT the time of our going to press there was no positive information from Trinkitat respecting the progress of Graham's force, but the evening papers publish posters with capital letter announcements of "Severe Fighting since Seven a.m." and the like, which resolve themselves into windy rumours when examined by the penny reader. Graham has burned his boats and cut his wires in a metaphorical sense. He pays no regard to telegrams, and he sends none; but he is very busily engaged in his special business of fighting, for which in practical manner he has aptitudes. The gentle, gigantic creature whom Lord Wolseley not inaptly characterised,—though his lordship's fervid praise of the warrior's modesty was thought to be incongruous in its application to the bashfulness of a General of fifty and more, and of six foot three and more in his stockings,—as being blushful as a young girl, loses his charm when he is in the presence of an enemy, and becomes very unpleasant to them. For years after the Crimea, he had no chance. At Kassassin, he did not escape censure, and at Tel-el-Kebir he was credited with doing with his Brigade more than they really did; but Graham, without being a genius, is certainly a methodical, safe soldier, and it is scarcely possible to imagine that he has not given a good account of Osman Digna's foot and camel-men. The sun in these parts is tremendous at noon, and the water-supply must create anxiety. It was probably on account of water difficulties Lord Wolseley denied the force any Horse Artillery. Any one who has seen camels on soft or slippery ground, however, will wonder how they crossed the lagoon at Trinkitat. We hope, apart from all considerations of strategy, tactics, or policy, that the morning papers will contain the news that Graham has swept away Osman Digna's levies like flies into the Desert, and is on his return to the sea.

With feelings of astonishment and utter bewilderment, we have received the astounding information that General Graham, V.C., at the head of 4,000 British soldiers, has sent in a "white flag"—call it what you like, "white feather" it cannot be—that he may obtain leave from Osman Digna to put off the battle till to-morrow! We do not know of any parallel to such a proceeding under the circumstances, and in our present state of ignorance we cannot form the smallest surmise as to its motives or results. Mr. Gladstone was very angry with Araby because he used a white flag to cover his evacuation of Alexandria, but what will the world say if General Graham uses his white flag to hurry up reinforcements, or gain advantages he otherwise would not have had, by repairing defects or other means? Osman Digna probably never heard of a flag of truce in his life, and certainly never saw one, unless he was with Araby, which he most probably was not. Next to this curious and inexplicable proceeding, are the declarations in the new proclamation ascribed to Gordon, which are in need of such authoritative recognition that we prefer not treating them as genuine at present.

His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales will hold a Levée on Monday, the 17th inst., at St. James's Palace, at 2 p.m.

Major-General G. S. Young, now commanding the Belfast Brigade, will vacate that appointment at the close of the financial year, and relieve Major-General H. D'O. Torrens, C.B., in command of the Cork District.

On the anniversary of the Majuba catastrophe Lord Derby signed the new Convention with the delegates of "the South-African Republic," which we called the Transvaal. Some papers have been exercised by the style and title of the Republic, and appear to think it is a new and dangerous assumption, but the Government which that very bumptious and unlucky, but plucky official, Sir T. Shepstone, got Lord Carnarvon to overthrow by a coup de main of police at Pretoria was that of "the South-African Republic," and by that name was it known, and such was its official designation and the title on the public seal. The appointment of such a bitter, prejudiced, and violent enemy of the Boers as the Rev. Mr. Mackenzie to be British Consul seems us to be singularly unfortunate and injudicious.

We presume the Russian occupation of Merv will lead now to the immediate construction of the railway from Sibi to Quetta and our extreme outposts in the Pishin Valley. It is interesting to observe this railway was begun by the late Government, and after a good deal of money had been spent, the work was abandoned by the present Ministry. Such is the usual result of misplaced economy.

Major-General L. E. Knight has, we understand, received the offer of employment, and will succeed Major-General G. S. Young in the command of the Belfast District, on that officer being transferred to Cork.

Colonel Sir F. W. De Winton, K.C.M.G., R.A., has accepted an appointment from his Majesty the King of Portugal for two years' service up the Congo, the duties being somewhat similar with which General Gordon was to have been entrusted. We congratulate Colonel De Winton on his appointment, but the Congo will hardly be the bed of roses his last was,—as Military Secretary to Lord Lorne.

The condition of some of the young soldiers of a regiment now en route to the Mediterranean, on Thursday morning last, on the occasion of the inspection by the Duke of Cambridge, was painfully apparent. As the regiment was on parade long before the hour for opening the canteens, it is evident that drink must have been obtained by these lads in an illicit manner. It is true that men are more likely to drink on the eve of leaving their native land, perhaps for ever, than on any other occasion, and that irregularities are then winked at which would not be overlooked at other times; but it must also be remembered that our regiments are now composed of lads who cannot stand strong drink. A quantity of liquor which would only have the effect of steadying (or "stiffening") an old soldier on parade would have a very different effect on the average young soldier of the present day. On the same occasion the steadiness and soldierly bearing of the 31st East Surrey Regiment were specially noticed. Not a single man in the ranks of this regiment appeared to be under the influence of liquor.

A committee of medical officers at the Cambridge Hospital, Aldershot, have recently gone into the whole question of infantry valise equipment. Two men of the Cameronians—one equipped in the old style, and the other in the new—attended at the Horse Guards on Tuesday afternoon last, for inspection by the Commander-in-Chief. Colonel Harrison, C.B., the president of the Committee, was present, also Deputy-Surgeon-General J. J. Thompson, A.M.D.

If Araby the Egyptian takes any pleasure in revenge, he must be gratified by the news from Egypt. It is not a year and a half since he was struck down at Tel-el-Kebir, and driven into exile. In the interval, the Dual Control against which he struggled has been destroyed; the army of European officials he sought to overthrow has been almost effaced; the Khedive has been deprived not only of his power and prestige, but of his largest provinces, by his protectors; the English army of peaceful occupation has been forced to undertake offensive operations against the Arabs, who never molested Araby; the value of Egyptian Stocks has fallen immensely since Araby was in power; the law of liquidation, which Araby respected, is assailed by those who appeared in Egypt to maintain its obligations; slavery, as a domestic institution in the Soudan, is recognised by the Christian Pasha who represents the Queen of England, and repudiates the control of the Mahometan Khedive, and the Christian journals of the City cry out, "Eugé!—Bravo!" Araby's soldiers are the object of British solicitude. Far more Europeans and anti-Egyptian Philistines than the number of Egyptians who fell at Tel-el-Kebir have been slain at El Teb and at the scene of Hicks Pasha's disaster. Finally, the public opinion of Europe, expressed by the Press of France, Germany, Italy, Austria, and Russia, has only one voice of contempt and indignation when it speaks of the Government which declared war against Araby, bombarded Alexandria, sent Wolseley against Tel-el-Kebir, abandoned the Soudan, forced Chérif to resign, recalled Nubar, the Armenian Minister of Ismail, to power, and failed to save Sinkat and Tokar, refused to recognise the obligations which compel it to establish a protectorate of the ports of the Red Sea, and to employ a British Admiral to cover the operations of a British army hundreds of miles beyond Egypt Proper, and which is now obliged to march the newly organised Army of Egypt to defend the frontiers of Upper Egypt at Assouan against the hordes of the mad boatman of the White Nile, whom their own Legate Extraordinary has recognised as the reigning Prince of the Soudan! But perhaps Araby is not civilised enough to delight in revenge.

Mr. Carington, on going into Committee of Supply on the Army Estimates, is to move, "That, in the opinion of this House, it is undesirable that the proposed change in the uniforms of the British Army, from scarlet to grey, should be carried into effect."

Some members of a service club are reviving the evil practice of pitting one branch of the service against another, and have lately been black-balling men, it is said, solely on account of the branches of the service to which they belong. The club in former times admitted the Militia, in order to strengthen its position, and it is more than ungracious to turn upon those whose support was sought in the hour of need.

Colonel M. J. Clarke has left England for Cape Town, en route to Basutoland, to take over the administration of that country. Colonel Clarke will only be away for a few months at first, having to meet Sir Hercules Robinson soon after his arrival, he being under the orders of the High Commissioner, to whom he will address his correspondence, and from whom he will take his instructions.

Mr. Tottenham will on Monday ask the Secretary of State for War how long the practice has been in vogue in Home garrisons of mounting "mixed" guards, consisting of officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of different corps, on the same guard, and how far it commands the approval of the military authorities; if he will also state what are the reasons which have led to the introduction of so novel a system; and whether it is owing to the inability of some battalions to furnish a sufficient number of effective soldiers fit for duty.

The Royal Commission on Colonial Defence having concluded its labours, it is natural anxiety should be felt as to the intention of Government. Sir Hicks-Beach endeavoured the other night to extract from the Secretary of State for War whether it was the intention of her Majesty's Government to make any proposals for carrying out the recommendations of the Commission. The Marquis of Hartington, in reply, said the subject had been under consideration, and he hoped to be able to make a statement upon it on the Army Estimates. The Royal Commission have decided that our principal seaports and coaling stations at home and in the colonies should be placed in a better state of defence, and they recommend the expenditure of a sum not exceeding £2,000,000 sterling.

Colonel Keate, R.A., has assumed the command of the Royal Artillery in North Britain, in succession to Major-General Ingilby, C.B., who has retired on a pension. The head-quarters of the Royal Artillery have been at length very properly moved from Leith Fort to Edinburgh.

We understand that the new Governor of Malta will probably be General Sir J. Lintorn Simmons. A better appointment could not be made. He is an accomplished Engineer, and he will be too busy at Malta to spike the Short Service guns which he has lately been dismounting so unmercifully.

At an inquest held at Canterbury, on Saturday, on Serjeant J. Furnish, manager of the canteen of the depôt of the Buffs, who expired through a large dose of chlorodyne, taken to overcome sleeplessness, it was explained that chlorodyne was largely used by soldiers in India, without any idea that it was dangerous.

Sir Herbert Maxwell intends to move, on the Army Estimates:—"That this House is of opinion that it is desirable to maintain distinctive uniforms for territorial regiments, and that it strongly deprecates the discontinuance of the feather bonnet, which has been worn by the Highland Regiments for upwards of a century in many victorious campaigns."

Sir George Campbell will, on Army Estimates, move:—"That experience shows that no system will provide adequately for the military requirements of the British Empire which does not provide for two distinct classes of soldiers, short-service men, to stay at home and form a reserve for defence, and long service men, to form a professional Army, to serve in India and distant foreign possessions."

Major-General Alexander will, on an early date, call attention to the circumstances under which a colonel on the Head-quarters Staff at home has been appointed to command a brigade in the expeditionary force under Major-General Sir Gerald Graham.

The Queen has approved of Major-General Willis, commanding the 2nd Infantry Brigade at Aldershot, being appointed to the Northern District, vice Major-General W. G. Cameron, from April 1.

The Egyptian correspondents of the Paris newspapers state that the conviction of competent persons from Khartoum is that the Mahdi intends to invade Upper Egypt in October or November, when the rainy season will enable the desert to be traversed without fear of drought. They also speak of Egyptian sympathy with the Mahdi. A letter in the Débats says that his portraits are displayed in the streets of Cairo, and that the natives on passing them exclaim "God give thee victory!" The English need not think of barring the way to this invasion of 200,000 or 300,000 men by fortifying certain points, for the invaders will not take the regular track, but will descend by the desert, enlisting the Bedouins on their way.

General Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar is to have charge of the arrangements for the Easter Review at Portsmouth, and consequently his Serene Highness's term of command has been extended until May 1.

Colonel Flood, late Assistant-Adjutant and Quartermaster-General at Gibraltar, has been appointed to officiate as Assistant-Adjutant-General at the Horse Guards, during the absence of Colonel Sir Redvers Buller in Egypt.

The Secretary of State for War has conferred a good-service pension of £50 per annum on Lieutenant-Colonel John Dennis Swinburne, the Senior Chief Paymaster in the Army Pay Department. Lieutenant-Colonel Swinburne completes 41 years' service on the 25th of this month. Originally gazetted in March, 1843, to the 83rd Regiment, he served with it through the Indian Mutiny, 1858, and obtained the medal. In March, 1849, he was appointed a Paymaster, and served in that capacity for many years with the 92nd Regiment, and with the same corps through the Afghan War of 1879 (medal), and three years ago (April, 1881) was appointed Chief Paymaster, in financial charge of the Home District.

The Navy.

ADMIRALTY, February 22, 1884.

Royal Marine Light Infantry.—Lieutenant-Colonel William Winkworth Allnutt has been placed on the Retired List, on account of physical unfitness for further service (February 11).

ADMIRALTY, February 25, 1884.

Royal Marine Light Infantry.—Captain and Brevet Major Gerald Altham Heseltine to be Major, vice Hore, promoted (January 9); Captain and Brevet Major Edward Selby Innes to be Major, vice Tom, retired (January 26); Lieutenant Grey Skipwith to be Captain, vice Innes (January 26).

ADMIRALTY, February 27, 1884.

In accordance with the provisions of her Majesty's Orders in Council of February 22, 1870, and November 29, 1879, Lieutenant Cecil Holland Whish has been placed on the Retired List, with permission to assume the rank and title of Retired Commander (February 23).

Royal Marine Light Infantry.—Major and Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel John Macdonald Moody to be Lieutenant-Colonel, vice Allnutt, retired (February 11).

ADMIRALTY, February 28, 1884.

In pursuance of her Majesty's pleasure, the uniform of Honorary Paymasters and Honorary Assistant-Paymasters in the Royal Naval Reserve is to be similar to that of Paymasters of less than eight years' seniority, and Assistant-Paymasters of less than eight years' seniority, in the Royal Navy, respectively, with the following exceptions, viz.:—(1.) The provisions of her Majesty's Order in Council of March 1, 1864, as regards the uniform of Officers of the Royal Naval Reserve generally, to apply to these officers. (2.) Honorary Paymasters are to wear between the gold braid waved lines round the sleeves of the coat a stripe of quarter-inch white velvet. (3.) Honorary Assistant-Paymasters are to wear, immediately below the one waved line of gold braid round the sleeve of the coat, a stripe of quarter-inch white velvet.

In accordance with the provisions of her Majesty's Orders in Council of February 22, 1870, and April 30, 1877, Chief Engineer George Fullerton Bell has been placed on the Retired List of his rank (February 27).

Commissioned Boatmen—Walter Warren, Jury's Gap, to be chief boatman, Fishersgate, vice Martin, promoted; Henry Cooper, Craster, to be chief boatman, Alnmouth, vice Mory, promoted; George Young, Bullsmouth, to be chief boatman, Lawrence Cove Division, vice Jeffries, promoted; John Carter, Wyke, to be chief boatman, Cawsand, vice Dean, pensioned; John Holman, Bar of Lough, to be chief boatman, Strangford.

Surgeon and Agent—Mr. Michael Keelan, at Dunany Point and Annagassan Detachment, vice P. Keelan.

Albacore, Lieut.-Com. Smythies, hauled into the stream on Feb. 26, and made trial of her machinery and guns outside the Breakwater on Wednesday.

Alexandra, Capt. Rawson, C.B., while on passage to Alexandria, had to put into Famagusta Harbour, Cyprus, with disabled steering gear, and to telegraph to Alexandria for coal. Why is not Cyprus made a coaling station? The Inflexible, Superb, Iris, and Falcon were at Malta completing for sea on Feb. 18. The Woodlark will probably be paid off on March 3 and recommissioned on the following day. The Cockatrice will be ready for sea on March 5. The Condor was ready for sea on Feb. 23, and proceeded to Alexandria (mails accordingly).

Arab, Com. R. W. Stopford, has been ordered to proceed from Rangoon to Aden, calling at Trincomalee.

Assistance, Capt. St. Clair, has been placed under orders to proceed to the Channel Islands, for the purpose of bringing to Portsmouth a draft, consisting of four officers and 216 men of the Middlesex Regt. It will be despatched to India on March 8, in the hired transport Nuddea.

Audacious, Capt. Hugo Pearson, flagship of Vice-Admiral Sir William M. Dowell, was at Hong Kong up to Jan. 22. The Sapphire was at Nagasaki on Jan. 16, and remains as senior officer's ship of the division. The Kestrel was at Tientsin on Dec. 31. The Cockchafer was at Chefoo on Jan. 3, and remains. The Albatross was at Hankow on Jan. 5, and remains. The Espoir was at Chinkiang on Jan. 7, and on arrival of the Curaçoa at Chinkiang will be stationed at one of the Treaty ports. The Curaçoa left Shanghai on Jan. 19 for Chinkiang. The Champion was at Shanghai on Jan. 16, and remains as senior officer's ship of the division. The Midge was at Tamsui (Formosa) on Jan. 15, and ordered to proceed to Ningpo, calling at Wenchow. The Foxhound was at Foochow on Jan. 16, and remains. The Cleopatra was at Amoy on Jan. 18, and remains. The Esk was at Swatow on Jan. 20, and ordered to return to Hong Kong by Feb. 3. The Swift and Linnet were at Hong Kong on Jan. 22, and remain for general service. The Vigilant was at Hong Kong on Jan. 22, refitting, and her crew were in the Tweed. The Fly was at Canton on Jan. 22, and remains. The Daring left Hong Kong on Jan. 16 for Hoi How and Pakhoi, to be stationed in the vicinity. The Merlin was at Singapore on Dec. 31, and was to leave the same day for Hong Kong. The Zephyr was at Singapore on Jan. 13, and remains for general service in the Straits of Malacca Division. The Pegasus was at Acheen Bay on Dec. 20, and will eventually return to Singapore. The Flying Fish was at Hong Kong on Jan. 22, and leaves in February for Haitan. The Magpie left Singapore on Dec. 13, to survey near Penang.

Boadicea, Capt. Church, flagship of Rear-Admiral Nowell Salmon, V.C., left St. Helena on Jan. 22, and arrived at Ascension on Jan. 27; left that island on Jan. 31, and arrived off the mouth of the Gambia on Feb. 8. The Alecto was at Sierra Leone on Jan. 31. The Goshawk arrived at Sierra Leone on Jan. 31.

Comus, Capt. W. J. East, will be paid off on March 7. The Comus, during her commission, has gone over 80,000 miles of ground; has performed a great deal of special service, and some of a very responsible nature.

Crocodile, Capt. Carr, left Portsmouth on Sunday. She took out a new crew for the Woodlark at Malta. On her arrival at that port she will embark the 2nd Batn. of the Royal Munster Fusiliers for Bombay.

Euphrates, Capt. E. St. J. Garforth, has been found not to have been injured by grounding off Tarifa. She will, therefore, fulfil her appointments on the trooping roster, and the Malabar will be retained in reserve.

Express, Lieut.-Com. V. Knox, which, commissioned at Devonport for the Mediterranean, was taken into the Channel for a preliminary trial of her machinery, on Feb. 26. Under a recent order, the guns on board had to be fired, the Admiralty having directed in October last "that all ships in the first subdivision of the first division of the Steam Reserve that are supplied with new-pattern breech-loading guns for the first time, are to have their fittings tested by the firing of two rounds from each position." Just before the ship got out of the Sound, a leading stoker named Pyne sustained an injury to the forefinger of his right hand, and was sent ashore to the Royal Naval Hospital at Stonehouse. The ship was steered to the west of the Eddystone, and underwent an hour's full-power trial of her machinery. The steam in the boilers was 58 lb.; the vacuum in the condensers, 24¼ in.; the revolutions per minute, 127½; the mean pressure in the high cylinder, 30·3, low, 9·9; indicated horse-power, high, 215·5, low, 208·5. Total, 425. Speed, 10 knots an hour. The engines were also tried at full speed ahead and full speed astern. The gunnery trials commenced when the full-power steaming was over. The Express is armed with two 5-in. breech-loading guns amidships, a 4-in. gun of the same style in the bow and in the stern. All the guns can be worked on either side of the ship, and they are on Vavasseur mountings. The 4-in. guns, which are supposed to throw a shot five miles, have a charge of 12 lb. of powder and 25-lb. shot. The 5-in. guns, throwing a projectile six miles, are loaded with 16 lb. of powder and 50-lb. shot. The guns were fired from each side at various depressions, and in the case of the 5-in. the fittings answered admirably. In firing the third round forward, it was discovered that the racers were weak, and it was decided that no more than three rounds should be discharged from the 4-in. guns. A further trial of these guns will, therefore, have to be made when the racers, fore and aft, have been strengthened.

Himalaya, Capt. Palliser, arrived at Halifax, Nova Scotia, on Feb. 25, and will leave on Feb. 28 for Gibraltar and Malta.

Invincible, Capt. Molyneux, C.B., was at Alexandria on Feb. 8, when a corporal of Marines, named Wingfield, committed suicide. Wingfield was one of a number of men who had been on leave during the day, and who returned to the ship about 11 o'clock at night. He was afterwards seen to be roaming about the ship, instead of going to his hammock, and shortly after midnight a sentry, hearing the discharge of a rifle, ran in the direction of the sound, and came across Wingfield, who had just shot himself. He died in about 20 minutes, and on the following morning Capt. Molyneux made inquiries as to how the man became possessed of the cartridge with which he had committed the act. It was then ascertained that the corporal had gone to the sentry at the captain's cabin and obtained from him two blank cartridges, which he represented were required for the forward sentry to fire at daylight. He went below, loaded his rifle with one of the cartridges, and, placing the muzzle in his mouth, discharged it with his foot by means of a piece of string which he had attached to the trigger. The inside of his mouth and some of his teeth were blown completely away by the explosion. At the inquest, a verdict of temporary insanity was returned, and in the evening the deceased was buried with Naval honours in the cemetery at Rosetta.

Malabar, Capt. Harris, arrived at Portsmouth on Sunday, from Bombay, with 71 officers, 677 men, 35 women, and 51 children, and 500 naval supernumeraries. One death occurred on the voyage.

Miranda, Com. Acland, has been cruising among the South Sea Islands. A correspondent on board, writing from Sydney, New South Wales, on Jan. 8, speaks in high terms of the comfort and happiness prevailing amongst the ship's company. The new crew joined on Sept. 22. The Miranda left Sydney the same week, and was engaged for three months cruising amongst the New Hebrides. The cruise was a most pleasant one, the captain and officers doing all in their power to promote the comfort of the crew. The station is a notorious one for desertions, but with the exception of three second-class men who deserted immediately on the arrival out of the transport, no desertions had taken place, and officers and crew alike are looking forward with confidence to a happy commission. The vessel was to leave for Hobart Town at the end of the week.

Northampton, Capt. Digby, flagship of Vice-Admiral Sir John Commerell, V.C., was at Demerara up to Feb. 5. The Commander-in-Chief will leave the West Indies for Bermuda about March 10, visiting certain United States ports en route. The Flamingo was at Demerara on Feb. 5, and would remain on Jamaica Division after the flagship leaves the West Indies. The Foam is on Jamaica Division, and will leave about March 10 for Bermuda, to await the arrival of the Bullfrog.

Opal, Capt. Brooke, arrived at Simon's Bay on Jan. 25, and would remain until the return of the Commander-in-Chief in April. The Stork was at Simon's Bay on Jan. 30, and was to have left for St. Helena and St. Paul de Loanda on Feb. 20.

Rambler, Com. the Hon. Algernon C. Littleton, arrived in Plymouth Sound on Feb. 25 from the South-East Coast of America, last from St. Vincent, Cape de Verdes. She left again next day for Sheerness—where she was commissioned on Sept. 15, 1880—to pay off.

Superb, Capt. Henry F. Cleveland, is still in the dockyard hands at Malta, and will not be ready for sea before April at the earliest, another proof of the penny-wise, pound-foolish policy of the Admiralty in recommissioning ships abroad, as practically for nearly six months this modern ironclad will have been useless. Two hundred and fifty of the crew have been sent to form part of the garrison at Alexandria, while the troops are absent in the Soudan.

Swiftsure, Capt. Aitchison, flagship of Rear-Admiral Lyons, was up to Jan. 17 at Arica, and would proceed with the Satellite, Mutine, and Kingfisher to Iquique, Valparaiso, and Coquimbo. The Constance was at Arica on Jan. 17, and would part company from the Squadron at sea about Jan. 26, and proceed to Honolulu and Esquimault. The Sappho was at Arica on Jan. 17, and would part company from the squadron at sea about Jan. 26, and return to Callao. The Heroine was on Vancouver Division on Jan. 17 as senior officer's ship, and will meet the Constance at Honolulu the first week in March, and proceed thence to Callao. The Sylvia was at Sandy Point on Dec. 10, 1883, on surveying service.

Valorous, Capt. the Hon. R. Hare, was at Devonport on Feb, 25, when a court-martial assembled on board the Royal Adelaide, flagship at Devonport, for the trial of Edmund Brider, A.B., of the Valorous, on charges of improperly leaving his ship, while at Chatham, on Feb. 10; for using threatening and insulting language on two occasions, to John Macdonald, master-at-arms, his superior officer, and attempting to strike him; and for attempting to strike Ship's Corporal Peter Meyher. The evidence of the witnesses having been taken, the prisoner pleaded drunkenness as an excuse for his conduct. The court sentenced him to 18 months' imprisonment with hard labour, and after that to be dismissed the service.

The Briton was at Bombay on Feb. 13, ordered to join flag at Suakim. The Ranger, Sphinx, Decoy, Coquette, and Carysfort were in the Red Sea. The Tourmaline was at Madagascar. The Dryad left Zanzibar for Aden, and was at Suakim on Feb. 25. The Osprey was at Zanzibar. The Arab was on passage from Rangoon to Trincomalee. The Dragon was to leave Bombay on Feb. 14 for the Persian Gulf. The Philomel was in the Persian Gulf. The Serapis left Aden on Feb. 24.

William Matthews, sick-berth attendant, Flirt; Alexander Ross and Robert Quin, 2nd captains of foretop, Cambridge; James W. Whincop and John W. G. Merchant, boatmen, Coastguard; Charles Camplen, leading stoker, Asia; Henry Perryman, ship's corporal, Excellent; Alfred Evans, captain of hold, Pembroke; Andrew T. Watt, boatman, Coastguard; William Hazell, chief boatman, Coastguard; Thomas Knight, serjeant, Audacious; William Korcher, chief boatswain, Superb; Henry Chard, quartermaster, Terror; John Lewington, A.B. rigger, Osborne; and James Andrews, sick-birth steward, Hermione, have been awarded the medal for long service and good conduct

H.I.M.S. Olga reached Plymouth on Thursday last. On Saturday morning, his Imperial Highness Prince Henry of Prussia, second son of their Imperial Highnesses the Crown Prince and Princess of Germany (the Princess Royal of Great Britain), accompanied by Baron Von Seckendorff, captain of the Olga, and two other officers, landed at Devonport Dockyard, and proceeded to Windsor, on a visit to her Majesty the Queen. Prince Henry accompanied the Prince of Wales, to the House of Lords, on Tuesday, when Lord Granville, the Marquis of Salisbury, and other noblemen were presented to his Royal Highness. He rejoined his ship on Thursday.

Special distilling condenser and gear are to be fitted in the deckhouse of the Seahorse, Staff Capt. H. Hosken, which is required for special service in the Red Sea.

The Active will be out of the dockyard at Portsmouth by March 31, and she will be commissioned for service abroad early in the financial year.

A new ironclad—an improvement on the Conqueror—will be commenced at Portsmouth Dockyard next year.

The Cyclops has been inclined at Portsmouth, to ascertain her centre of gravity.

The Committee sitting at Portsmouth on the subject of torpedo defences are divided in opinion as to whether the Torpedo School should be retained afloat, or removed ashore.

The Channel Squadron is to be divided into two groups of three ships each, one group to proceed on the cruise, and the other one to remain in the Mediterranean to await events, so as to be near at hand, if circumstances should demand its presence.

OUR SQUARES AT WATERLOO.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—I have been frequently asked what regiment I meant as forming a square one side of which was literally blown away, the cries of its officers being distinctly heard by Frenchmen and some wounded Prussians of Bulow's corps, which came into action at 4.30 p.m., and were evidently "File up! file up!" preserving its splendid formation to the last, till the charge of the 3rd Regiment of Life Guards and King's Dragoon Guards under Lord Edward Somerset. The regiment was the 2nd batn. old 95th and the Rifle Brigade, and its behaviour forms a magnificent contrast to the wretched attempts at squares in Egypt. The only true versions of battles can be gained by reading the reports, our own and Continental, and for which the acquaintance with modern languages is an absolute necessity. The battle of Waterloo, or rather Mont St. Jean, and the three final days' fighting round Metz, are most imperfectly understood by many officers.—I am, &c.,

CAIRO CIGARETTE.—SPECIAL NOTICE.—In consequence of the extensive demand for these Cigarettes, SPILLER and CO. have imported a large Consignment in tin boxes. They are pronounced by connoisseurs to be "the only Cigarettes worth smoking." For sample and prices address, SPILLER and CO., 494 Oxford Street, W. Wholesale Prices to the Trade. Cheques Crossed "London and Westminster."

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

RAMA.—We believe not.

D. A. E.—No room at present.

"AN OLD SOLDIER."—We can do no more for the department at present. Our space does not allow us to publish your letter.

PENSIONER.—You had better obey orders, and make representations through the Commanding Officer of the district afterwards.

YEOMAN.—The expense would be too great, we fear. "Pity 'tis, 'tis true."

ERRATA.—In the article on "The Power and Position of Russia in Asia," on p. 127, the name of the post "Askabad" was incorrectly printed as "Astrabad." Again, the name of the river "Hari-rud" was incorrectly rendered "Hari road."

The ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE this week contains eight pages extra.

Tuesday's Gazette contains a long list of Soldiers' Unclaimed Balances.

The Mutual Life Assurance Society has issued its fiftieth annual report. From this it appears that during the year 283 proposals for assurances amounting to £196,445, on which the premiums would have been £6,397 18s. 11d., were submitted to the board. Fifty-five of these, for the sums of £39,695, were either deferred or not completed; and 15 for £6,200 were declined, The number of policies issued was 213, assuring £150,550, on which the premiums paid amounted to £4,789 4s. 4d., including £989 14s. single premiums. This company is the only one which offers special advantages to officers of the Army and Navy.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, AND CO'S NEW BOOKS.

Now ready, The NEW WORK on CENTRAL AFRICA, at all the Libraries.

The RIVER CONGO, from its MOUTH to BOLOBO. With a General Description of the Natural History and Anthropology of its Western Basin. By H. H. JOHNSTON, F.Z.S. With numerous Full-page and other Illustrations, a New Map of the Congo, from its Mouth to Bolobo, also a Physical Map of the West Coast of Africa, and Three Etchings. 1 vol. demy 8vo, cloth extra, One Guinea.

EXTRACT FROM THE TIMES REVIEW, February 27.—"Of Mr. Stanley, Mr. Johnston, who saw much of him, speaks with the enthusiasm of youth in the presence of its hero, but this enthusiasm is quite sufficiently justified by the wonderful work which Mr. Stanley has actually accomplished. What that work is has never been so fully and satisfactorily shown as in the pages of Mr. Johnston's narrative. ......Mr. Johnston is not only a keen and eager observer, he is an artist, botanist, zoologist, and evidently also a bit of a geologist.......His faculty of accurate, intelligible, and graphic description is remarkable in a man so young.......Few recent books of travel are so full of information."

Just ready, crown 8vo, cloth, 7s 6d.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS and OINTMENT.—GLAD TIDINGS.—Some constitutions have a tendency to rheumatism, and are, throughout the year, borne down by its protracted tortures. Let such sufferers bathe the affected parts with warm brine, and afterwards rub in this soothing Ointment. They will find it the best means of lessening their agony, and, assisted by Holloway's Pills, the surest way of overcoming their disease. More need not be said than to request a few days' trial of this safe and soothing treatment, by which the disease will ultimately be completely swept away. Pains that would make a giant shudder are assuaged without difficulty by Holloway's easy and inexpensive remedies, which comfort by moderating the throbbing vessels and calming the excited nerves.

At the five Militia Competitions which have taken place since September 1, 1881, Colonel WILKINSON and Lieutenant-Colonel SHAW have secured for their Pupils THIRTY-EIGHT COMMISSIONS, although they have only Prepared and sent up a very Limited Number of Candidates. A list of successful Pupils, showing the high places taken by them, will be furnished on application.

At the Militia Literary Examinations held during the same period, a Number of Pupils have also passed; in this Competition the FIRST PLACE was taken in April last by Lieutenant Lord Skelmersdale, and the SECOND PLACE in the recent October Examination by the only candidate sent up, Lieutenant the Honourable Victor A. Pelham.

The results of the last WOOLWICH and SANDHURST EXAMINATIONS have also added to the general score, which now amounts to SEVENTY-SEVEN SUCCESSES, obtained by Pupils since September 1, 1881.

Address, DARMSTADT, GERMANY.

LIEUTENANTS of MILITIA desirous of competing for Line Commissions can be received by the Rev. WALTER BAKER, M.A., at Batcombe Rectory, Evercreech, Bath. They will be thoroughly prepared in all Military Subjects by two Officers who for several years past have been engaged with distinguished success in this special work.

Great individual attention is secured, both Instructors are resident and give their whole time, very few Pupils are taken, and steady work is insisted on. Since the introduction of the Military Competitive, out of Forty-four Lieutenants of Militia sent up, Twenty-seven have been successful, several taking high places in the list.

A Large Staff of Experienced Tutors, all resident, assist in preparing for the Qualifying Examinations, and for the Sandhurst and Woolwich Competitions.

THE MOUNTED SERVICE BOOT.—PATENT.

A COMPLETELY NEW and USEFUL INVENTION. By a CAVALRY OFFICER.

It is equally suitable for riding or walking, and consists of an upper and lower part, which, when adjusted by the peculiar arrangement of the spur, forms a complete riding boot, and at the same time the comfort of a boot and gaiter for walking is ensured. The lower part can be worn also as an ordinary walking boot. ECONOMY, COMFORT, and PORTABILITY.

Specially recommended to all Officers and Sportsmen going Abroad.

OROIDE GOLD JEWELLERY (REGD.)

"Recommends itself not alone to those of limited means, but to the wealthy, who, when frequenting large gatherings, whether at racecourses, theatres, public meetings, or even on that sacred thoroughfare, the king's highway, have known what it is to be robbed of their valuables."

OROIDE GOLD WATCHES,
Accurate timekeepers, 21s to 50s, safe and free per post (registered).
The "SERVICE" KEYLESS WATCH,
Open face, jewelled in eight holes, Two Guineas, post free.

"The watches of this patent are in no respect different from gold ones. The degree of finish, of course, regulates the price, but the cheapest class is capable of performing with accuracy for from fifteen to twenty-five years. As to strength and solidity, the Oroide cases are undoubtedly superior to those of gold watches. No other form of amalgam can rival Mr. Rowe's in the general essentials of a substitute for gold."

"Thousands of persons who, though not wishing to impose on their friends by a display of what is but a semblance of the real metal, have not been indisposed to find an equally good-looking metal, which, reproduced in a watch, a chain, or article of jewellery, would not be a costly thing to buy, nor a dear thing to lose." OROIDE GOLD SCARF PINS, 2s 6d to 5s, post free.

MILITARY BIOGRAPHIES.

Messrs. CHAPMAN and HALL are preparing for publication a Series of Volumes dedicated to the Lives of Great Military Commanders.

The Volumes are designed to form a set of critical Biographies, illustrative of the operations and the art of war, by writers of distinction in the profession of arms, whose competence to weigh the military qualities and deeds of the Chiefs can be accepted. Maps will, when necessary, accompany the volumes, for the convenience of students.

The aim of these volumes is to be both popular and scientific, combining the narrative of the most romantic and instructive of human lives with a clear examination of the genius of the soldier.

FREDERICK the GREAT. By Colonel C. B. BRACKENBURY. Containing Maps. Crown 8vo. [Next week.

MARSHAL LOUDON, by Colonel MALLESON, C.S.I., will follow it, the two Lives presenting the opposing aspects of the Seven Years' War.

THE PARCELS POST.—THE PARCELS POST AND TEA.

THE PARCELS POST and the DELIVERY of TEA.

THE PARCELS POST and the DISTRIBUTION of TEA to every place where there is a Post-Office in the United Kingdom.

THE PARCELS POST.—TEA of the highest excellence (as supplied to Dukes, Earls, Barons, and the County Families of England), sent free by Parcels Post in quantities of 4 lb., 5 lb., and 6 lb., to any postal address in the United Kingdom, on receipt of a remittance for the price of the Tea and 3d.

THUS 4 lb. of TWO-SHILLING TEA can be sent to any address free, by post, on receipt of 8s 3d. Thus 6 lb. of Half-Crown Tea can be sent free of post on receipt of 15s 3d. Thus 5 lb. of Three-Shilling Tea can be sent free of post on receipt of 15s 3d.

THE POSTAL LIMIT of 7 lb. will only really cover 6 lb. of Tea, as the weight of paper and twine has to be deducted, so that COOPER COOPER and CO. will send 6 lb. of Three-Shilling Tea free of post for 18s 3d, or 6 lb. of Two-and-Sixpenny Tea free of post for 15s 3d, or 6 lb. of Two-Shilling Tea free of post for 12s 3d.

PACKAGES containing 12 lb., 20 lb., 60 lb., or 100 lb. of TEA will be sent to any railway station in the United Kingdom absolutely free of carriage on receipt of remittance for the value of the Tea.

THE PARCELS POST.—4 lb., 5 lb., or 6 lb. of TEA will be delivered free of charge at your own houses by the postman, for 3d in addition to the cost of the tea.

THUS 4 lb. of TWO-SHILLING TEA will be delivered free at your own house for a remittance of 8s 3d. Thus 5 lb. of Two-Shilling Tea will be delivered free at your own door for a Post-Office Order for 10s 3d. Thus 6 lb. of Two-Shilling Tea will be sent free to your own homes for a cheque for 12s 3d.

THE PARCELS POST.—4 lb., 5 lb., or 6 lb. of THREE-SHILLING TEA despatched to any part of England, Wales, Scotland, or Ireland, by post for 3d in addition to the price of the Tea.

THUS 4 lb. of THREE-SHILLING TEA can be sent to the remotest address on receipt of remittance for 12s 3d. Thus 5 lb. of Three-Shilling Tea will be forwarded to any place where letters are delivered, postage paid, for 15s 3d. Thus 6 lb. of Three-Shilling Tea will be sent to any address in any postal district in these islands for 18s 3d.

TEAS of all descriptions on COOPER COOPER and CO.'S LIST, posted in parcels containing 4 lb., 5 lb., and 6 lb. each by parcels post to any part of England, Wales, Ireland, or Scotland, in exchange for cash (in registered envelope). Post-Office Orders, cheques, postal orders, or stamps for the value of the tea, and 3d extra.

FOR example, a Package containing 4 lb. of TWO-SHILLING TEA can be sent to any place in the United Kingdom in exchange for 8s 3d in cash, enclosed in a registered envelope, and addressed to any of COOPER COOPER and CO.'S establishments in London.

OR, a Parcel containing 6 lb. of TWO-SHILLING TEA can be delivered by parcels post, carriage free, by remitting a Post-Office Order for 12s 3d.

OR, 5 lb. of TWO-SHILLING TEA will be despatched, free of post, for a postal order for 10s, and three penny postage stamps.

THUS, in the same manner, THREE-SHILLING TEA in parcels to the value of 12s 3d, 15s 3d, and 18s 3d each, containing respectively 4 lb., 5 lb., and 6 lb. of tea, will be sent on receipt of postal orders, cheques, or cash for the several amounts.

CO-OPERATION. — COOPER COOPER and CO. also invite attention to the new System of Co-operation in the purchase of Tea by persons living in the country through the medium of the Parcels Post.

CO-OPERATION.—Thus, as COOPER COOPER and CO. are enabled to send packages containing 6 lb. of any of the Choice TEAS on their List to any place in the United Kingdom for 3d, it follows that if six families in a village are willing to club together, each can have a pound of tea sent for one halfpenny.

CO-OPERATION.—Or, as two parcels containing 6 lb. each can be sent for 6d, six families would be enabled, by joining together in one remittance, to order 2 lb. of TWO-SHILLING TEA each, at a cost of one penny only, in addition to the price of the tea.

CO-OPERATION.—This system will apply to every kind of TEA offered for Sale by COOPER COOPER and CO., and if followed out will practically enable them to place before customers in every county town and village in England, Scotland, Ireland, and Wales, in the Channel Islands, and the Isle of Man, in the Hebrides, and the Orkneys, Tea of the same choice kinds as sold in their various Establishments in London, at the same prices, with the addition of the nominal sum of one halfpenny a pound.

The following are the particulars of the Expedition under Major-General Graham, Commandant, now operating in the Soudan :—

Assistant-Adjutant and Quartermaster-General.—Lieut.-Col. Clery, A.A.G.

Deputy - Assistant - Adjutant - General — Lieut.-Col. R. Gordon, 93rd Highlanders.

Deputy - Assistant - Adjutant - General—Capt. A. Wauchope, C.M.G., 42nd Highlanders.

Assistant Provost-Marshal (with status of D.A.A.G.).—Capt. Williams-Freeman, 35th Regt.

Senior Commissariat Officer. — Assist. - Comy. - Gen. Nugent, Commissariat and Transport Corps.

Senior Ordnance Store Officer.—Assist.-Comy.-Gen. Mills, Ordnance Staff Corps.

District Paymaster.—Major Thornhill.

Principal Medical Officer. — Brig.-Surg. McDowell, A.M.D.

Commanding Cavalry and Mounted Corps.—Col. H. Stewart, C.B., A.D.C., 3rd Dragoon Guards.

Commanding Infantry Corps, 2nd-in-Command.—Col. Sir R. Buller, V.C., K.C.M.G., C.B.

Brigade-Major.—Capt. W. Kelly, 35th Regt.

Departmental Officers :—

Chaplains' Department.—Rev. G. Smith (C. of E.); Rev. R. Brindle (R.C.); and Rev. C. McTaggart (P.).

Commissariat and Transport Corps.—D.A.C.G.'s Jessop, 1st Brig. ; Rogers, 2nd Brig. ; Rainsford, Cavalry; Hamilton, S.C.O. of Base; Wilson, Transport; and Qrmr. Robinson, Suez.

Medical Department.—Surgs.-Major O'Dwyer, Wilson, and Connolly; Surgs. Prendergast, Turner, Lucas, Rose, A. M. Davies, W. H. Lewis, Jenken, Stuart, and Treherne; Qrmr. Enright, A.H.C.

Ordnance Store Department.—D.C.G. of Ordnance E. Houghton.

Army Pay Department.—Capt. Kneller, District Office; Capt. Orange, King's Royal Rifles and 1st Royal Highlanders; Major Small, Gordon Highlanders and 19th Hussars.

Veterinary Department. — Vet.-Surgs. Clayton and Thompson.

The force is composed as follows :—

Cavalry.—Col. Stuart.—10th Hussars, 328 men; 19th Hussars, 410 men; Mounted Infantry, 126 men.

Artillery.—Royal Artillery, 126 men; six 7-pounder guns, 10 brass mountain guns, and four Krupp 9-centimètre guns.

Naval Brigade.—Com. Rolfe, of the Euryalus, and Flag-Lieut. Graham.—Blue-jackets, 62 men; two 9-pounder guns, three Gatlings, three Gardners.

Infantry.—1st Brigade.—3rd Batn. 60th Rifles, 610 men; 75th Highlanders, 751 men; 89th Fusiliers, 334 men.

2nd Brigade.—42nd Highlanders, 761 men; Royal Marines (Infantry and Artillery), 361 men; Royal Engineers, 100 men; details (various detachments), 200 men.

The 84th and 65th Regiments were expected, but an accident occurred to the machinery of the Serapis, and it is possible the regiments may be too late. If they arrive, about 400 men will be added to the above, and the whole force, not including transport, will then number about 4,400, with 206 officers, 22 guns, and 6 machine-guns. There are for transport 600 camels, with 350 mules and 100 camels for ambulance work. The camel battery has 80 camels and about 100 men.

Telegraphing on Thursday night, the special correspondent of the Morning Post at Trinkitat says :—

"We are now upon the eve of action. The troops are advancing to-night to Fort Baker, which is situated on the other side of the lagoon, and is three miles distant from this place. We shall start from there at daybreak tomorrow, and expect to meet the enemy after one hour's march. The formation of the troops will be that of a square, with the Reserve in the centre, consisting of four companies of the Marines and four of the Rifles. The guns will be in position at the corners of the square, and the cavalry in the rear. Attached to the Intelligence Department are Baker Pasha, Major Fitzroy, Cols. Hay, Burnaby, Colville, and Harvey."

THE STRENGTH OF OSMAN DIGNA'S FORCE.

The correspondent of the Daily News at Trinkitat says it seems clear also that every available man on the rebel side will be called out for the fight. "Four of the chief tribes between Suakim and Tokar—namely, the Artegas, Komilab, Nourab, and Hadendowa—are known to be able to muster 22,000 armed men. It is also known that every effort will be made to gather as many as possible of this large horde in the vicinity of Teb. Spies this (Thursday) morning report that the rebels at Teb are still feasting, in anticipation of their feat of exterminating the English or driving them into the sea. Two spies from Tokar say that the rebels are occupying that town. No Egyptian soldiers were to be seen. The Sheikh Kadra is occupying the Government house. The rebels in Tokar are holding high festival."

It is stated by the Standard's correspondent that the enemy's parties in front of Fort Baker had on Thursday grown much bolder. "All the morning they have maintained a heavy fire at long range with our mounted infantry. Our artillery have fired a few shots with one of the Krupp guns, and one shot fell well among a clump of the rebels; but, being a percussion shell, no apparent damage was done. The enemy's rifle-bullets fall into Fort Baker, but none of the garrison there have been hit. The spies who have been sent out to gather news of the enemy's doings report that there were great feasting and rejoicing last night in welcome of considerable forces which joined them during the day. Our look-out on Fort Baker reports that the enemy are working, apparently throwing up earthworks. If this be the case, the garrison of Tokar are probably assisting them, as the wild tribes can know nothing of such defences. They have only fired one shot from their artillery this morning. It fell short, and they did not repeat the experiment."

The above plan shows the formation it is understood at Head-quarters that General Graham has adopted for his advance against Osman Digna, viz, two battalions in line, flanked by the machine-guns of the Naval Brigade, and two battalions in quarter-column. The spare ammunition and baggage in rear of the line, covered by the Cavalry not employed as scouts, with the Artillery in their rear; the whole supported by the Marines and Rifles in quarter-column.

NOTES FROM ALDERSHOT.

[FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.]

The preliminary musketry training of non-commissioned officers has been going on during the week, and the annual course for 1884-5 will be commenced on Monday next. The new Musketry Regulations have not yet left the printer's hands, though it was notified some time ago that they would be ready on March 1. It is known that the new musketry course will differ in many respects from that of last year, and the issue of the regulations on the subject is awaited with much interest.

The military training of the companies of infantry for the year 1883-4 having been brought to a conclusion here during the present week, with a short course of instruction in field works, by direction of the Commanding R.E., the new annual course will be commenced during the present month. A syllabus on this subject will be issued shortly.

The 2nd Battalion, 18th Royal Irish Regiment, 900 officers and men, and the head-quarters division of the 1st Battalion, 31st East Surrey Regiment, 350 officers and men, left Aldershot on Thursday morning for Portsmouth, in three special trains, to embark in the Malabar for the Mediterranean. Previous to entraining, the two battalions were closely inspected by H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, who arrived from London by the 11.30 a.m. train for this purpose. The regiments looked as fairly well as regiments usually look now-a-days, being composed mainly of very young men; and his Royal Highness could not fail to observe that many of these young fellows were unfit to be sent abroad, on probably active service, in an unhealthy climate, for at least two years to come.

The removal of these two comparatively strong battalions will so reduce the strength of the Division that the carrying-out of the ordinary guards, duties, and fatigues, without unduly pressing upon the men, will be difficult. There are now but six very weak battalions of infantry here. These are still further reduced in numbers because of the furlough season, and by reason of the recent increase of sickness of a preventable type. On these skeleton battalions, half of which are composed of recruits not yet dismissed drill, will now fall the whole of the guards and duties of the largest military station in the kingdom.

Colonel C. M. Clarke, C.B., Assistant-Adjutant-General of the Division, returns from leave of absence to-day.

Spring drills will shortly be commenced, and route-marching discontinued.

Outpost duty was practised by cavalry and infantry combined on Tuesday last.

A further lecture on "The Tactical Employment of Field Artillery," will be delivered in the Prince Consort's Library, on Monday next, by Major Clayton, R.A., Professor of Artillery and Fortification, Staff College.

The Eighth Grand Army Athletic Meeting will be held at Aldershot during the month of June.

The following officers of Yeomanry have been ordered to report themselves at Aldershot to-day, for a course of instruction at the School for Auxiliary Cavalry :—Lieutenants W. W. Gray and J. M'Donald, East Lothian; J. Bourne and E. Simpson, Staffordshire; the Hon. C. Cochrane-Baillie, Lanarkshire; H. B. Portman, Dorsetshire; H. Lopes, Royal 1st Devon; E. E. C. Wellesley, Hants; and Sub-Lieutenant the Hon. J. W. Fortescue, Royal North Devon.

Surgeon-Major P. W. Stafford, A.M.D., has been appointed a member of the Consultative Committee on Army Tables, at Aldershot, vice Surgeon-Major W. Gasteen, ordered abroad.

Surgeon-Major S. K. Ray, A.M.D., has been appointed to succeed Surgeon-Major Gasteen in the command of the Army Hospital Corps Depôt and Training School at Aldershot.

It has been announced in the Divisional Orders during the week that Major Thrupp, Inspector of Army Signalling; Lieutenants Kirk and Scott, 2nd Dragoon Guards; Captain Douglas, and Lieutenant Macan, 26th Cameronians; and Lieutenant Jenkinson, R.A., have been examined for promotion in subjects (a) and (b), Queen's Regulations, sec. 4, par. 37, and have been found qualified.

The following officers, having been examined, are found qualified to instruct their troops or companies in musketry :—Lieutenant-Colonel H. M'Calmont, 7th Hussars; Lieutenant-Colonel Bond, Majors S. Waller and Rochfort-Boyd, Captain Blackburn, and Lieutenants Littledale, Pemberton, Russell, and Hill, Royal Engineers.

Seven officers and 250 men of the Brigade of Guards arrived at the camp from London and Windsor on Wednesday last, for musketry practice.

The following detail, for instruction at the School of Musketry, Hythe, will proceed from Aldershot to-day :—Captain Cooke, 26th Cameronians; Lieutenant Kirk, 2nd Dragoon Guards; Lieutenants Littledale and Hill, R.E.; Lieutenant Berkeley, 73rd Highlanders, and 15 non-commissioned officers and men.

The next class for the instruction of officers will be formed at the Army Veterinary School on Monday next.

Lieutenant Haines, 39th Regiment, Lieut. Jones, 99th Regiment, and 1 serjeant and 73 rank and file of the 87th Royal Irish Fusiliers, will proceed on Saturday next from the North Camp for Portsmouth, for conveyance to Bombay.

The appointment of Commandant of the School of Instruction for Auxiliary Forces (Infantry) at Aldershot has been vacated by Lieutenant-Colonel Rogers, 2nd Battalion, 18th Royal Irish Regiment, who proceeded with his battalion to the Mediterranean on Thursday.

Surgeon-Major W. P. Smith, A.M.D., embarked for India, Surgeon Morse for Egypt, and Surgeon Baird for St. Helena, during the week, and have been struck off the strength of the Division.

The following officers have been ordered to report themselves to Major Miles, Garrison Instructor, Permanent Barracks, this day, for a four months' course of garrison instruction :—Captain Roper, 7th Hussars; Captain Allfrey, 15th Hussars; Lieutenants D. C. Mercer and C. G. Moulton-Barrett, 73rd Highlanders; Captains J. Smythe and C. H. Collette, and Lieutenant C. Sitwell, 85th; Captain C. Taylor and H. Butler, 31st; Captain J. Piercy and Lieutenant E. Healy, 39th; Lieutenants C. Agnew and G. Fiennes, 1st Battalion, 23rd; Lieutenant C. Hunter, 3rd Battalion, Rifle Brigade; Captain M. Quale-Jones, 1st Battalion, 6th; and Lieutenant A. B. Ridley, 1st Battalion, 4th.

Major A. Browne, H-B R.H.A., has been ordered to Sheerness for duty.

Lieutenant Meredith, R.E., has been ordered to Aldershot for duty.

The War-game Studies, on the Garrison Models, will be discontinued this year after the 15th inst.

Deputy-Surgeon-General R. Wolseley, M.D., has been ordered to Aldershot, to take over the duty of Sanitary Officer of the Division, vice Deputy-Surgeon-General J. J. Thompson, ordered to Dublin.

Surgeon-Major P. W. Stafford has been appointed a member of the Permanent Committee on Dress and Equipment, of which Colonel R. Harrison, C.B., C.M.G., is President, vice Surgeon-Major W. C. Gasteen, ordered abroad.

Lieutenant-Colonel Rogers, 2nd Battalion, 18th, and Captain Turpin and Lieutenant Gillman, 31st, remain at Aldershot in charge of the details left behind by the two regiments.

Surgeon D. Bruce, A.M.D., proceeded on Thursday to the Mediterranean, in medical charge of the 2nd Battalion, 18th Regiment.

THE EUPHRATES COURT-MARTIAL.

The court-martial, composed of Capt. Rowley (president), and Capts. Colomb, Fisher, C.B., Harris, and St. Clair, to inquire into the grounding of the Euphrates off Tarifa, held its first sitting on board the Victory on Tuesday. Mr. G. P. Martin officiated as deputy-judge-advocate, and Mr. Peek, barrister-at-law, appeared as prisoner's friend. According to Capt. Cardale's official report, at noon of the 19th, when about seven miles off Cape Spartel Lighthouse, a mid-channel course, east half south, was shaped up the Strait, with a variation of half a point to the southward for two hours. This course was pursued till 6.35 p.m., when the officer of the watch thought he saw the Rock of Gibraltar ahead on the port bow. He immediately put the helm hard-a-port, and the ship was steered a south-by-west course for 10 minutes, while the captain had a consultation with Lieut. Ewart, who was performing the navigating duties. The conclusion was come to that the officer of the watch was mistaken, and at 6.45 p.m. a course east by south half south was resumed, with the possibility that the officer of the watch was correct in his surmise, in order to obtain the requisite offing. At about 6.55 the officer of the watch observed through the mist what appeared as a white light, which he took for the light of a steamer, which proved to be red. At 7 p.m. the ship took the ground apparently midships. The speed at this time was reported at 10·2 knots, the wind E. by S., force 7 to 9, weather very thick and incessant rain. After describing the methods taken to lighten the ship and get her off, Capt. Cardale continued :—"I can only attribute the disaster to the current, as by dead-reckoning the ship was 36 miles east of Gibraltar. I deeply regret having to report that just as the troops shoved off in a troop boat they got within the influence of the propeller, and several men jumped into the water, but were immediately picked up, with the exception of Private Thomas Colwell, of the 2nd Devonshire Regt., whose loss was discovered at the mustering of the men." Lieut. A. W. S. Ewart, who was performing navigating duties owing to the sickness of the navigating lieutenant, the first witness, corroborated the account of the grounding in the report. He had the position of the ship by sight at noon on the 17th. The next position he got was by cross-bearings. He took the distance at Cape St. Vincent, the captain being on deck at the time. He did not take any fresh soundings. The estimate of the distance to Cape St. Vincent was obtained by four cross-bearings. He had no chance of taking observations while he was doing navigating duty, on account of the weather. He allowed five degrees of deviation alone, applying variations afterwards. To the best of his belief, the speed of the vessel was not reduced when the officer of the watch reported that he believed he saw land ahead. The captain and navigating lieutenant were on the poop when the ship struck, while witness was on the bridge with the officer of the watch. He was supplied with Sir William Thompson's sounding machine, but he did not use it or the lead. Capt. Cardale and the other officers were all satisfied that the red light was not land. Cross-examined by the prisoner, witness said there was complete concurrence of opinion throughout the day between the captain, Mr. Robinson, and himself as to the course. It would not have been of any advantage using the sounding machine, as it would not have told them which side of the Strait they were. Lieut. Heathcote said that during the afternoon they passed four vessels, and that at no time could he see more than three miles. Lieut. Stokes, the officer of the watch, said that at 6.35 he observed what he thought was land on the port bow, and ordered the helm hard-a-port, and steadied the ship at eight points. He believed the captain ordered him afterwards to set the course back to east by south. At 6.55 he saw a light, which he thought was white, as he had been told that they had passed Gibraltar, but which he afterwards found to be red, and immediately after the ship took the ground. After a few words from Mr. Henry Gearing, boatswain, in corroboration, Navigating-Lieut. Robinson stated that when he was told there was land ahead, and that it looked like Gibraltar, he said it was impossible. The mist was such that there appeared to be land as much astern as ahead. Under certain circumstances, he should think it safe to enter the Straits of Gibraltar without making either Cape Trafalgar or Cape Spartel. Cross-examined, witness said that the captain's object in altering the course at 1 o'clock on the 19th was not to get too near Tarifa Point. Other witnesses having been called, Staff Com. Jackson, of the flagship, said that the course steered by the Euphrates, as judged by the reckonings, was, in his opinion, a safe one. From the ship's log and the charts he thought every precaution had been taken except two—making the land off the coast of Africa and sounding. Looking at the chart and the log, he would have commenced sounding not later than 8 in the morning, and would have continued to do so. He had never made the Straits in thick weather, and consequently had never sounded in the Straits. If the deep-sea lead had been continuously used, the sounding would have averted the danger. This closed the case for the prosecution, and the Court adjourned until Wednesday, to enable Capt. Cardale to prepare his defence.

The Court reassembled on Wednesday, when Capt. Cardale, having gone over the points mentioned in his official report as to the course of the ship, said that during the afternoon he was constantly on deck, and could at all times see about three miles from the ship all round, and at 6 o'clock he ascertained the ship's position to be 13 miles past Gibraltar. At 6.35 it was reported to him by the officer of the watch that he saw land on the port bow ahead, and had altered the course eight points. He ran on deck, and on questioning the officer of the watch, he said he thought he saw Gibraltar, and pointed out the direction; but he failed to see any resemblance to land, and Mr. Robinson, who was on the bridge, also failed to see it, and the officer of the watch stated distinctly that he was not at all certain. After consultation with Mr. Robinson, he thought it was wiser to bring the ship up to within half a point of her course, and that, even supposing it to be Gibraltar that had been seen, would clear her of Europa Point. After watching for land for a minute, and seeing no signs, he went with Mr. Ewart and Mr. Robinson to look at the chart, and they all had the most perfect confidence that the ship's position was well to the eastward of Gibraltar. Therefore, he gave directions that the proper course was to be resumed, and watched with his glass in the direction where land was supposed to have been seen. Not seeing any signs of land, and with a firm conviction that land had not, in fact, been sighted, he was returning to the saloon, when he felt the ship strike, and at once returned to the bridge. He could not help expressing his appreciation of Mr. Stokes's and Mr. Ewart's conduct all through this trying time. Mr. Stokes worked continuously in the pinnace for over 24 hours, and through his energy was instrumental in saving the lives of a number of men who foolishly jumped overboard. Mr. Ewart was equally zealous, and knowing his (Capt. Cardale's) anxiety that the facts of the grounding should reach the Admiralty at once, remained another night out of bed, after the ship was off, to get the track charts properly made out, so as to enable him to do so. With such a number of young recruits on board, order and discipline could not have been maintained if the orders given to the officer commanding the troops had not been explicit and thoroughly carried out. As regarded their own ship's company, their discipline and order were perfect. He asked every member of the Court to place himself in his position and consider what he himself would have done with the information he possessed as to wind, tides, and currents, and whether or not he (Capt. Cardale) had reasonable grounds for the conclusion he formed and the action he took. The cause of the mishap he attributed entirely to the abnormal rush of water through the Straits, the result of great meteorological disturbances within the Mediterranean. They had reckoned on the east wind neutralising the ordinary current running easterly through the Straits, but they had no means of foreseeing the current which their reckonings showed to have existed. In conclusion he handed in his certificates, and confidently appealed to the Court to acquit him of "negligence" or "default," and restore him to his position in the service, of which he was justly proud. Capt. Cardale concluded the reading of his defence with some emotion. The Judge-Advocate then proceeded to read his certificates, and one from his superior officer in the Abyssinia expedition, commending his untiring zeal, and stating that his valuable assistance on the wonderful march of 800 miles and throughout the campaign would never be forgotten. His certificates from the time he entered the service in 1852 were all of a highly flattering character.

The Court was cleared, and remained in deliberation for an hour and a quarter, when, having been reopened, the Deputy-Judge-Advocate read the finding as follows :—"The Court find the charge against Capt. C. S. Cardale is partly proved, inasmuch as he omitted to take sufficient precautions, under the circumstances of the case, to ascertain the position of the ship in approaching the Straits of Gibraltar. The Court, therefore, adjudges the said Capt. C. S. Cardale to be dismissed from his ship, the Euphrates."

The commanding officers of the Express and Albacore, gunboats, which are now being fitted at Devonport to reinforce the Mediterranean Squadron, have specially applied to the Admiralty to have the boats of their ships fitted with Hill and Clark's patent disengaging hooks. These hooks, which have been fitted to over 5,000 boats, do not allow a coxswain to slip a boat from any height out of the water, a proceeding which has so often been attended with fatal results.

The Rodney, one of the few surviving wooden line-of-battle ships, left Portsmouth on Feb. 25 in tow of tugs for the Thames, having been purchased by Messrs. Castle and Son, to be broken up. The Rodney was built as a sailing-ship at Chatham, and cost £76,541. After launching she was converted into a screw liner, at a further cost of £49,427, and was provided with engines by Maudslay and Co., for which the contract was £30,000. She was engaged in the Russian war, and was paid off at Portsmouth in April, 1870.

THE WOOLWICH MILITARY MEDICAL SOCIETY.

At the meeting of the society last week, there was an interesting and important discussion on the application of antiseptic surgery to field service, especially with regard to the first line of assistance. Among those present were Sir Joseph Lister (the originator of antiseptic surgery), Dr. Crawford (the Director-General of the Army Medical Department), Professor Longmore, Sir William M'Cormac, and other eminent surgeons from London. Sir J. A. Hanbury (the president of the society), in his opening address, alluded to the necessity of providing prompt antiseptic aid to the wounded in the first line, at the same time pointing out that the campaigns in which we have been recently engaged differed from those of Continental armies, where there were all the resources of civilisation to fall back upon. He therefore advocated the importance of having the dressing-stations and bearer companies prepared and equipped to perform the functions of the first and second line of assistance, as the moveable field hospitals could not be relied upon to be where they were most required, owing to difficulties connected with transport and the physical features of the country, adding that, if the bearer companies were to be efficient during war, they must remain as an organised body in time of peace. Surg.-Major Godwin read a résumé of a paper submitted by him at a previous meeting, in which he advocated the application of a simple temporary antiseptic covering to wounds on the field, without further interference than was necessary to stop bleeding and prevent further mischief; the patient to be then removed to the field hospital, where the wound could be examined and dressed with antiseptic precautions. Sir Joseph Lister, who was enthusiastically received, said that he was convinced that the antiseptic method could be made readily applicable to military surgery, and gave in detail the appliances that were best calculated to prevent defilement of the wound, insisting on the necessity of abstaining from handling wounds with fingers or instruments not rendered clean by antiseptics, and of confining attention merely to the occlusion of the wounds by antiseptic dressings. Sir W. M'Cormac stated that his experience led him unhesitatingly to adopt the doctrine of Sir Joseph Lister, adding that the intelligence of the surgeons would readily enable them to adopt the dressings most suitable for the occasion, urging also the necessity of as little interference as possible with wounds at the fighting line. Professor Longmore advocated extreme simplicity and portability in the first field dressing, particularly if carried by the soldier himself; at the same time, he stated that the field dressing had been found extremely useful, and advocated its being carried in a special pocket in the tunic issued for active service, as had been done in the Ashantee campaign. Deputy-Surgeon-Gen. Marston described the arrangements that had been made in the Egyptian Campaign, and alluded to proposed modifications of the dressings which were about to be introduced, and which, he was happy to say, were in strict accordance with the suggestions of Sir Joseph Lister. Dr. Crawford (the Director-General) declared that the thanks of the Army were due to Sir Joseph Lister, and the other eminent surgeons who had assisted in extending to the soldier the benefits of a discovery which had done so much for humanity at large. He admitted that the means hitherto used for the first treatment of the wounded were not satisfactory; but it was extremely difficult to devise an appliance perfect in character, easy to carry, and simple to use; however, if it could be done, they would try to do so. To overrate unskilled assistance, as was often done, was a mistake; and his conclusion was that the less that was done to a wounded soldier till he fell into the hands of a surgeon, the better. What he wanted to see was surgeons well equipped and carriage sufficient for their materials; if the latter were satisfactory, he would answer that the surgeons gave a good account of the wounded.

A VINDICATION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Some years ago, I had occasion to write to you regarding Sir John Kaye's assertion, in "The Sepoy War," that I was unpopular and bad-tempered, though he was pleased to speak of the unquestionable honesty of my nature, and to state that I was not wanting in intelligence or zeal. In my letter to you, however, I proved that I was most popular both with the officers and with the men. But as another "History of the Indian Mutiny" has just been published, I must trouble you again, for the writer has repeated the assertion that I was unpopular, and has added that I was hard too. Now, the word "hard," I suppose, I must not object to, as the great captain was always called the Iron Duke; and in "Dombey and Son," Major Bostock boasted of being tough. "Joe is tough, Sir; yes, Joe is tough!" But unfortunately I cannot claim being hard, for Gen. Anson told me I was too soft. Still, it is not being hard and unpopular alone that I am accused of, for the author of the "Mutiny" is pleased also to state, in opposition to the opinion of so distinguished an officer and so great a disciplinarian as Sir John Pennefather, that I ought not to have gone to the General, though I was "field-officer of the week," but to my own regiment, I having ordered the men to remain in their stables, and left the corps in the hands of a most efficient officer,—one who had commanded a brigade in Turkey. I enclose you the letter regarding Sir John Pennefather's opinion of my conduct, and also my pamphlet on the Mutiny, a copy of which I had sent to the author of the last work on that subject. And now I have only to add that I feel perfectly satisfied, knowing that Sir John Pennefather said I was perfectly right.—I am, &c.,

G. CARMICHAEL-SMYTH, Major-General.

[True Copy of extract of letter, dated Nov. 26, 1872.]

"I recollect, a considerable time ago, having a conversation with my brother, who had been reading the 'History of the Mutiny,' and his opinion was that your conduct had been perfectly right.

"(Signed,) R. P. PENNEFATHER."

Reviews.

Gladys Fane. By T. Wemyss Reid. (Fisher Unwin.)

Gladys Fane is a story of rare excellence, bright in delineation of character, eloquent in descriptive power, and containing a story of two lives, which can scarcely fail to create profound interest. At the same time, it is eminently a sad story, and why it should be so it is difficult to say, as the author had no necessity to resort to such a dramatic ending. He had meted out to both hero and heroine, during the progress of the story, sufficient misery to justify some few rays of happiness which might serve to herald in a bright futurity. The Fanes of Fanesford belonged to a Northumbrian family which could not be excelled in antiquity and social rank. The member, who, at the opening of the tale, held sway in Fanesford, was a humdrum widower, oppressed with a conviction that the country was frequently saved from extinction by his Parliamentary services. His family consisted of a son and two daughters, Gladys and Bertha. The former is thus introduced :—"Gladys Fane had manifestly a strong sense of humour. The beautiful mouth broke into smiles at every moment as she spoke, and young as she was, men had already discovered that when Gladys Fane smiled her face was one of the loveliest they had ever seen. Possibly it may have been some consciousness of the fact that she never looked so handsome as when her dark blue eyes gleamed with suppressed merriment, or her lips bubbled over with laughter." Having so described his heroine, the author narrates with humour some of the strange escapades in which this girl of fifteen was constantly involved. When Gladys was eighteen years of age she "came out," under the auspices of an aunt, and took her place in society, where due homage was paid to her wonderful beauty. It was difficult to rouse up Fanesford at the best of times, but suddenly a reaction took place,—Parliament was dissolved, a general election was ordered, and, terrible to narrate, Mr. Fane's seat for Fanesford was threatened. The author here enters into an account of a contested election, which is written with considerable spirit. Suffice it to say that during its progress Gladys indulged once more in her fancy for making fun, and almost insulted the Conservative candidate, Mr. Rex Mansfield, journalist, politician, and practising barrister. But if she did so, her Nemesis was upon her, for it was at that very election that Gladys Fane found her fate. Rex Mansfield had the issue of the election at his feet when he withdrew from the contest in deference to some point of honour. The tenth chapter of Mr. Reid's book is devoted to a by no means uncommon person, but one who morally lived by system, and was fated to exercise her power on all the Fanes of Fanesford. The old gentleman thought of taking to himself a wife, and selected Lady Jane Craigallen, youngest daughter of Lord Greymore. This selection and the mode in which it was received by the family is thus told :—"A sharp cry of pain and horror rang through the room. Even the dull and hide-bound soul of Mr. Fane was pierced by that shriek, as it burst from the lips of his eldest daughter. The next instant Gladys, with her arms twined about his neck, and her lovely face upturned towards his, was clinging to him passionately, and crying in accents of wild beseeching, 'Oh, no, papa, not that woman ; not Lady Jane Craigallen ! You cannot mean it, you cannot know her ! Say that you were only joking ; say it is any one—any one in the world, no matter how young—but not Lady Jane!'" All to no use. In reply to this pathetic appeal, Mr. Fane said, "I beg you to understand that I am to be married to Lady Jane Craigallen immediately after Easter." The marriage took place, Lady Jane made known her system, and practised it with such effect that Gladys left her father's house under the protection of one of the head servants at Fanesford, who had nursed her when an infant. Bertha preferred yielding, and seemed not to care. In chapter xiii. Mr. Reid takes us to a soirée at the Cycle Club, where the reader may renew his acquaintance with Rex Mansfield, and be introduced to others, notably to Prince Bessarion, who is thus described :—"Above the average height, so tall, indeed, that he could be seen towering above the heads of most of the men around him, he was yet so perfectly made that there was no suggestion of ungainliness in his figure. It was clear cut and moulded on the lines of a Greek statue. There was something Greek, too, in the faultily faultless features of the man. The face had that tint of lustrous pallor that is never found among Englishmen. Nothing could have been more charming than the effect produced by the jet black moustache and well-trimmed beard against the marble paleness of the skin." It was finally arranged that Gladys should not be required to return to Fanesford, but should be placed under the care of a lady of position, Mrs. Carmichael. During their wanderings from place to place, Gladys met with many men who were of a different class from those she was accustomed to, but her influence over them was just as potent as that which she had exercised in former days. This was particularly remarkable in the case of Prince Bessarion, who took every opportunity of impressing her favourably. Rex, however, was the exception, whose bearing presented to Gladys an enigma which she could not solve. When the season at Nice was approaching, and Paris had become unutterably dull, the travellers proceeded to that favourite resort, and beheld on the platform the "stately form of Prince Bessarion." At this portion of his story, the author dwells upon the pleasures and attractions of Monte Carlo and "The Palace of Sin," which become so intimately connected with the future of this eventful tale. The scenery and charms which daily presented themselves to Gladys filled her with delight. Over and over again they have been described by skilful writers, but by none more effectively than by the author of Gladys Fane. Under the care of Rex, the time passed on delightfully, and made Gladys reflect with joy at her escape from Lady Jane and Fanesford. We cannot afford space to accompany the author, but must be content to ask the reader not to pass unread a single page. In chapter xxv., a "mystery" is involved, which throws some light upon the conduct of Rex Mansfield, who suddenly meets in the play-rooms a Greek who claims his acquaintance. It well may be that this was an event of some moment, when we learn that during the night which closed that day of excitement, Rex might have been seen walking up and down his sitting-room in the Hôtel de France, the picture of dejection, dejection which might have caused Gladys to feel even more pity for him than that with which Prince Bessarion, with his sweet voice and winning manner, had succeeded in inspiring her during their talk at the Casino. But now we must hurry on to the catastrophe. The continuous gaiety and pleasures which had been so abundantly enjoyed were rudely ended, by the receipt of a letter from Rex bidding Gladys adieu for ever. In chapter xxviii., "the secret of Rex" is disclosed. He was married, and could not bring himself to reveal that fatal secret, and thus destroy his happiness for ever. Consequently, he took refuge in flight. Poor Gladys struggled nobly, and succeeded in keeping her secret unknown, save to Mrs. Carmichael. And what was Rex Mansfield's secret? In very early youth, in one of his yachting excursions, he met with Calenas, a merchant at Smyrna, who had two daughters, lovely beyond description. He soon became unable to resist the spell, and married one of them ; her sister, equally beautiful, remaining with her father. Before long, Rex awoke to the fate that had befallen him, by discovering that his wife was cursed with a temper that could not be checked. He settled on her a handsome annuity, and left Smyrna for ever, returning to England to enter on a Parliamentary career. There he first met Gladys. We must now take up the threads of the story which rendered necessary this digression. After Rex had left Nice, Prince Bessarion laid his toils to compromise Gladys. He would have done so with consummate skill, but was frustrated by chance. Rex and he met and fought a duel, in which the former was almost fatally wounded. He, however, recovered partially, and proceeded to Smyrna, in consequence of a summons from Calenas, his wife's father. At an interview with him the fearful truth was told. It was Olga, Rex's wife, who was killed by brigands, and had been dead for sixteen years. At once Rex started for Paris, and on his arrival sent the following message :—"My darling, I am free! I have come to you at once. I left Smyrna on Thursday, and reached Paris an hour ago. I am in the fair haven at last, and you too, darling!—Rex." On this night Nice was en fête. A supper was given in honour of Gladys and her friend. Rex, just arrived, attracted by the lights and sounds of music, approached to the rooms in which some tableaux vivants were being enacted. There stood Gladys, in the garb of Jean of Arc, bound to the stake, awaiting her death. Suddenly fire broke out, and all were petrified with fear. The flames were almost circling round Gladys, as if greedy for their prey, when a powerful figure forced his passage to the stage, raised her up, and brought her to a place of safety. However, this exertion, in his enfeebled state, caused Rex to burst a blood-vessel. His death and Gladys' grief are described with deep feeling. It is quite a pity to make a tale so touchingly beautiful the subject of a newspaper notice. In closing this "Story of Two Lives," we can write with nothing less than decided approbation of the author's present work. We would draw attention to two faults which he falls into,—first, the cruel ending, already referred to; second, the very great difficulty in believing that a man like Rex Mansfield would have left his supposed wife dead for sixteen years with only faint inquiry about her.

Our Schools and Colleges for Boys. By F. S. Dumaresq de Carteret-Bisson. (Simpkin, Marshall, and Co.)—If these two volumes have acquired their present dimensions in the space of ten years, it must be difficult to speculate as to their probable size in ten years more, unless unfortunately some accidental circumstances may arise to check their progress. Since the work first appeared, seven successive editions have been published, and at the present moment it covers nearly 1,300 pages of closely printed matter. In the present edition, which has been materially enlarged, attention is paid to the newly-founded institutions known as "The Royal University of Ireland," "Victoria University, Manchester," "The Royal College of Music," "The City and Guilds of London Institute for the Advancement of Technical Education," "Intermediate Education in Ireland," and the scarcely yet founded colleges of Bangor and Cardiff, in North and South Wales. The author of this work, in an introductory chapter, draws a striking contrast between the character and extent of English education at the present time with its character and extent 25 years ago, and points out how a silent and significant revolution has passed over it, and completely transformed it. Both books are full of instructive matter.

Citizen Soldiers. By H. Spenser Wilkinson. (Kegan Paul, Trench, and Co.)—This is a collection of essays intended to assist in the improvement of the Volunteer Force, which have attracted favourable notice, not only at the present time, but when they appeared from time to time in the Manchester Guardian. The author grapples fairly the question whether the Volunteers of England, as at present constituted, are capable of taking their place in the field against European troops. This is, perhaps, the most crucial question that can be asked, and Captain Wilkinson does not shrink from giving a reply. "We believe that the Volunteers are utterly unfit, in respect of their training, their equipment, and their organisation, to cope with Continental soldiers. Those who may draw this conclusion from the evidence produced will find themselves on the horns of a dilemma. Either the Volunteer Force must be made what it ought to be, or conscription must be introduced. This is simply out of the question, so that another crucial question must arise. Is it possible, without changing its character, so to reform the Volunteer Service as to give it that efficiency which it does not possess?" Having thus enunciated his propositions, the author proceeds to suggest the reforms from which such a result may be expected. Captain Wilkinson, as an essayist, has produced a little book well calculated to throw light on a difficult subject.

Messrs. Cassell and Co., Limited, have commenced the first part of two new works, which promise to attract considerable attention. The first is The Book of the Horse, by S. Sidney ; and the other, a new and revised edition of Cassell's Technical Educator. Each of these publications has its distinctive merits, but The Horse will, no doubt, appeal to the majority of readers. The new serial issue is to consist of monthly parts, and proposes to deal with every description of horse. It will also contain 25 fac-simile coloured plates from original paintings, and 100 wood engravings the price being one shilling for each part.

Dod's Peerage, &c., for 1884, really requires no notice. It is too familiar to the world at large to require any support beyond its own intrinsic merits. There is, however, one important little fact which speaks very eloquently of the progress this publication has made since its birth. It is that this is the 44th consecutive year of issue.

THROAT IRRITATION AND COUGH.—Soreness and dryness, tickling and irritation, inducing cough and affecting the voice. For those symptoms use Epps's Glycerine Jujubes. In contact with the glands at the moment they are excited by the act of sucking, the Glycerine in these agreeable confections becomes actively healing. Sold only in boxes, 7½d, tins, 1s 1½d, labelled "JAMES EPPS and Co., Homœopathic Chemists, London." A letter received :—"Gentlemen,—It may, perhaps, interest you to know that, after an extended trial, I have found your Glycerine Jujubes of considerable benefit (with or without medical treatment) in almost all forms of throat disease. They soften and clear the voice.—Yours faithfully, GORDON HOLMES, M.D., Senior Physician to the Municipal Throat and Ear Infirmary."

A correspondent "Thinks it would be a graceful act on the part of the authorities to allow Line officers, say, of five years' service and upwards to count any Militia service they may have. Militia officers joining the Line now sit on court-martials at once, although officers joining from Sandhurst cannot do so for two years district and three years for a general, and it seems somewhat hard that their Militia service should only be allowed to count for duty. The Army Pay Department is short of officers. Why should not the requisite amount of service for subalterns be made up with old Militia service? Captains, whatever their service is, are allowed to retire on half-pay, if 'about to be appointed to the Militia.' This boon might also be granted to subalterns who have, say, eight years' service, five at least being in the Line."

London Amusements.

At the Opera Comique, on Tuesday afternoon, Mr. Alfred Maltby introduced to the public his new farcical comedy in three acts, entitled "Old Flames." The piece is a free adaptation of a French comic drama written by M. Alexandre Bisson, and produced at the Cluny Theatre, Paris, April 17, 1882. The original story could not be possibly illustrated in its integrity by English actors and actresses, and the adapter has very judiciously eliminated as many of the objectionable allusions as he was able, while preserving most of the ridiculously droll situations. The novelty, favourably received, was briskly interpreted by Miss Lavis, Miss Woodworth, Mr. R. Pateman, Mr. F. Wyatt, and Mr. Alfred Maltby.

It is officially announced that 100 performances of "Cinderella," at Drury Lane, have cost £30,000, being an average of £300 expenses for each representation, and £600 when two are given on the same day. With pardonable pride, Mr. Augustus Harris proclaims that in no theatre in the world, except for opera, are such costly performances indulged in as are now offered to the public at popular prices at Drury Lane, a theatre without a subsidy, and leased by a private individual without State aid.

At Drury Lane on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday evenings the harlequinade is now played first, so that late diners may now conveniently see the whole of the elaborately-illustrated extravaganza, which on these nights commences at half-past eight.

Salvini, the Italian tragedian, now in his fifty-fourth year, has commenced his new and, it is intimated, his final series of performances at Covent Garden Theatre, appearing in his famous embodiment of Othello. On this evening (Saturday) he plays King Lear for the first time in England.

Revivals of popular dramas have been given at the Surrey, the Grand Theatre, Islington, and the National Standard, the pantomimes at these houses having now terminated their career.

On Monday next will be brought out at the Prince's Theatre Messrs. Jones and Herman's new drama, called "Breaking a Butterfly," founded on the story of "The Doll's House," written by the Swedish dramatist, Henrik Ibsen.

Next week, Mr. W. S. Gilbert's drama of "Dan'l Druce," suggested by George Eliot's novel of "Silas Marner," and first played at the Haymarket eight years ago, will be transferred to the Court Theatre.

The new building on the northern side of Leicester Square, first intended to be called "The Pandora," then "The Phœnix," and afterwards "The Queen's," will be at last opened about Easter as the Empire Theatre.

Carl Millöcker's three-act comic opera of "The Beggar Student," which is to be brought out at the Alhambra, will also be acted at the Comedy Theatre during a season of morning performances to commence early in March.

"The Two Orphans" will shortly be revived at the Olympic under the personal superintendence of Mr. Henry Neville, who acquired the acting rights of this powerful drama.

A special matinée in aid of the Actors' Benevolent Fund will be given at the Novelty Theatre next Tuesday, when a new farcical comedy, by Mr. T. J. Warren, will be produced, under the title of "Nita's First." An original comedietta, by Mr. Horace Lennard, will be also brought forward on the occasion with the title of "Reaping the Whirlwind." The Easter novelty, in which Miss Kate Vaughan is to appear, is written by the same author, and will introduce some new music by the tuneful composer, Bucalossi.

"What object have the Admiralty in systematically neglecting the interests of naval or military people in Plymouth?" asks the Western Morning News:—"Yesterday the inquiries as to the Indian troopship Malabar were incessant at the Commander-in-Chief's office, Mount Wise, and at the signal station. It seems that when it was determined to detain the troopship Orontes, in consequence of the rebellion in the Soudan, the paid-off crews she was bringing home from the China and East India stations were transferred to the Malabar. There is no exaggeration in saying that three-fourths of these men belong to the west country, and yet the Admiralty direct that the Malabar shall actually pass Plymouth and go to Portsmouth, the men for Plymouth and Devonport and neighbourhood finding their way to their homes either at their own expense, or waiting the convenience of a Government vessel. This is a matter which the M.P.'s for Plymouth and Devonport should take in hand, and they ought to have substantial aid from Sir Thomas Brassey, Civil Lord of the Admiralty."

With the purpose of carrying out the reorganisation scheme in its entirety, the Admiralty have called for a return of the established and acting foremen of the yards employed in the Royal Dockyards, with the date of their appointments.

The good-service pension of £150 per annum for captains, vacant by the promotion of Capt. W. S. Brown to flag rank, has been awarded to Capt. John D'Arcy, R.N.

HEADACHES AND DISORDERED STOMACH.—"After suffering for nearly two-and-a-half years from severe headache and disordered stomach, and after trying almost everything, and spending much money without finding any benefit, I was recommended to try your Fruit Salt. Before I had finished one bottle, I found it doing me a great deal of good, and now I am restored to my usual health. Others I know that have tried it have not enjoyed such good health for years.—Yours truly, ROBERT HUMPHREYS, Post Office, Barrasford." CAUTION.—Legal rights are protected in every civilised country. Examine each bottle, and see the Capsule is marked "ENO'S FRUIT SALT." Without it, you have been imposed upon by worthless imitations. Sold by all Chemists, price 2s 9d and 4s 6d. Directions in Sixteen Languages,—How to Prevent Disease. Prepared only at ENO'S FRUIT SALT WORKS, Hatcham, London, S.E., by J. C. ENO'S Patent.

"TOKAR is a miserable mud village, possessing no interest." "The people of Tokar are a despicable crew, being all convicts. The rebels are far superior to them in every way." "In Tokar only 70 soldiers were found by Major-General Graham on his arrival there. Next day we met many coming in with their wives and property. The garrison state that since their surrender they had been badly treated by the rebels, whose servants they had agreed to become." "The Black Watch have buried at El Teb nearly 2,500 bodies of the rebels, and are still working." Such are a few "facts" connected with what is called "the relief of Tokar," by one of the strangest misusers of terms ever sanctioned by official adoption. We are treated as a dead certainty by the correspondents to the stock phrases about "white devils" and "never fighting the English again," which have been in vogue since the Russians were credited with the complimentary phrases, after the Alma. There can be no doubt concerning the admirable conduct of the men, but it would be discreditable indeed if a force of nearly 4,000 British Infantry had evinced unsteadiness under the abortive fire of Egyptian and Arab artillerymen, whose guns did no harm, and if a corps of disciplined regulars wavered before the onslaught of naked barbarians armed with primitive spears and javelins. As far as can be made out from the various accounts in the papers, the hordes under Osman Digna's Sheiks did not much, if at all, exceed twice the force under Graham, and it would be hard, indeed, if a European with a breech-loader and 70 rounds of ball cartridge—and bayonet to boot—did not prove a match for more than two savages with pikes, ere they got to close quarters. By way of comparison between the fighting power of Araby's Egyptians, armed with Remington rifles, plentiful ammunition, and abundant artillery, in an entrenched position, and the bravery of these black sons of Ishmael in the Soudan desert, a correspondent calls attention to the following figures:—

The prominent part taken by the Cavalry in the action is now becoming apparent. They not only bore the brunt of the fighting, and sustained the heaviest losses, but by their fierce and resolute charges contributed to the utter defeat of the Arabs and to the comparative immunity of the footmen. Although the Mounted Infantry did good work, they could not have produced the result due to Stewart's horsemen; and Lord Wolseley's foresight, if questionable as regards the Artillery, was fully shown in his insistance on ample Cavalry being provided for the expedition. As in India in the Mutiny, it turned out that there is no more dangerous service than charging men on foot who can use swords or spears, and we must regret that such officers and men as fell did not die in some more glorious field than that of El Teb, though they could not find a braver enemy.

IN a passage in a diary kept by Dr. Russell when in Egypt in 1882 and 1883, there is an interesting account, which we have seen, of a visit paid by him to Zebehr Pasha, who was then living in seclusion and something like poverty in the Shoubra suburb of Cairo. Dr. Russell was introduced to Zebehr Pasha as one who could tell a great deal about the Soudan, which at the time was becoming of interest, owing to the Mahdi's successes, by an old Berber dragoman. Hamed,—as the worthy old dragoman is named, is a fellow-countryman of Zebehr, for whom he had the utmost reverence,—the same who was employed by the late Admiral Murray to take charge of, we believe, the first hippopotamus that was ever brought to England, whence he is known to many as "Hippopotamus Johnny." Dr. Russell was so impressed by the intelligence and capacity of the Pasha, that on his seeing the Khedive a few days afterwards he ventured to suggest that Zebehr was the very man to employ to make head against the False Prophet, and he also requested Baker Pasha to grant Zebehr an interview. The Khedive on that occasion said he would be quite willing to hand over Kordofan and Darfour to any capable lieutenant who would rule the country and send an annual tribute to Cairo, but he did not seem inclined to trust one with the influence Zebehr possessed in the Soudan. Baker Pasha was very much struck by the conversation he had with the conqueror of Darfour, and spoke to the Khedive about him; but nothing was done to secure his aid till Gordon went out the other day, and then an attempt to enlist the influence of Zebehr on the side of the Khedive's Government was made, under singular circumstances. The Pasha was to be employed, but his wife and the women of his harem were to be kept in captivity, and he was called on to act under and with the man who had caused his son to be executed on a charge, alleged by Zebehr to be quite false, of "slave-dealing." "Even if my son had done so," said Zebehr, "it was rather a strong measure, considering that you paid your slave-owners, instead of hanging them." But slavery was not then recognised as a "domestic institution" in the Soudan! When the Blacks whom Zebehr raised found that he was not to command them, their conduct became worse than doubtful. But, telegraphing from Khartoum on March 3, the correspondent of the Times, which may be considered as an official organ, actually clamours in Gordon's name for the appointment of the man whom Sir H. Wolff and others denounce as a vulgar slave merchant, whereas he is far superior in ability to most of the Europeans now in Egypt or the Soudan. "It is now admitted," the correspondent writes, "that Zebehr Pasha is the only man connected with the Soudan who is endowed with the ability and firmness necessary to head any Government here." (!) "The arrival of Zebehr Pasha would draw to his side the bands of rebels which are now scattered over the Soudan, and his great knowledge of the tribes fits him more than any other man to take the place of the Egyptian Government"! In fact, Gordon proposes to call Zebehr to help him to get off the garrisons, and then to install him as his successor in the government of the Soudan; and the Government at home, fearing the ignorant outcry, for which there is no solid base whatever, that Zebehr is a slave-dealer, will probably reject the counsel of their councillor and agent. However, we have as yet no evidence that Zebehr would go. If he did, it would be an augury of his confidence in his own powers and in the chances of success for which we should be grateful. There is no evidence, on which a police magistrate would give a ticket-of-leave man a day's imprisonment, that Zebehr Pasha ever was "The head of the slave-trade."

SIR WILLIAM HEWETT has been able to telegraph home a list of Naval casualties resulting from the battle of El Teb, which, though small in proportion to the Naval force engaged, is far too large, when the object for which the dead have laid down their lives and the wounded have been maimed is considered. We may, indeed, say that the expedition was objectless. It is, nevertheless, gratifying to find our Seamen, Marines, and Soldiers as ready as ever to do their duty, without question or complaint. "Theirs but to do or die, theirs not to reason why," now, as then, in days gone by; and the manner in which all ranks acquitted themselves at El Teb clearly proves that the raw material from which our forces are drawn is not deteriorating. Many deeds of valour have been reported. Foremost we find poor Lieutenant Frank Royds, of the Carysfort, who lost his life while gallantly working a Gatling in a hot corner. He was mortally wounded, and had to be taken to the rear. His gun was at the time detached from the main body, and the dangerous duty of escorting poor Royds to the rear was gallantly performed by Surgeon Gimlette, of the Euryalus. Dr. Gimlette's conduct appears to have been noticed by many on the field, and was specially mentioned in the Times' correspondent's able description of the fight. So was Captain A. K. Wilson's gallant deed. This officer, it appears, accompanied the Hecla's detachment, as did Captain Walter Stewart that of the Carysfort. Notwithstanding that these Post Captains were present, the chief command of the Naval Brigade was given to Commander Rolfe, with Lieutenant Montresor for Adjutant, a Naval way of doing things which has of late become somewhat popular in the Army, where to place a junior in command when a senior is present is no longer an unheard-of thing. We fear, however, that such selections can only in the end do harm to the service; and believe, therefore, that they should never be resorted to. On the present occasion, we have Commander Rolfe in supreme command. On one flank of the Naval Brigade he had Captain Walter Stewart, of the Carysfort, commanding three machine-guns, and on the other flank was Captain A. K. Wilson, of the Hecla, doing the same duty, both superior officers to Commander Rolfe. We candidly admit that we do not understand how such a disposition was possible, unless the Post Captains were merely allowed to be present "on leave of absence." In making these remarks, we do not wish it to be thought that we have a single word to say against Commander Rolfe. Far from it. He is generally recognised as a zealous, able, and dashing officer, and we heartily congratulate him on the good luck which placed him in command of the Naval Brigade at El Teb, and on the soldierlike manner in which he handled his men under fire. At one time, it appears, the Naval Brigade was more sorely pressed by the Arabs than was any other corps in action. Just then a wide gap occurred between the flank of the Naval Brigade and the nearest Line regiment. Through this gap the Arabs endeavoured to rush, when Captain Wilson, seeing the danger of the enemy getting inside the square, leapt single-handed into the gap, and fought with such determined bravery that, notwithstanding his sword broke, as Naval swords generally do when put to the test, and that he had to fight with nothing but his clenched fist and sword-pommel as "knuckle-duster," not an Arab got into the square. Captain Wilson was, however, somewhat severely wounded, receiving a sword-cut across his head, as well as other scars. The square had up till now been advancing to its proper front, but a flank movement brought the Naval Brigade to lead the advance. A change of formation then ensued, earthworks having to be stormed. Then Sir William Hewett, who up to now had been but the guest of Sir G. Graham, and a spectator, put himself at the head of the Naval Brigade, and with Commanders Rolfe and Caffin, Flag-Lieutenant Graham, and Mr. Hyne, Paymaster and Secretary, led his men to storm the enemy's position, the sole thought animating every breast being to do or die like a Briton. The Sphinx endeavoured to take part in the action during the earlier hours of the day, but her shells falling dangerously near our own scouts, she was signalled to desist. The Briton, Captain Andrew J. Kennedy, also arrived in time to send a contingent to swell the Naval Forces, to which the Euryalus, Carysfort, Hecla, Sphinx, and Ranger also contributed men and matériel. The Marines of the Mediterranean and East Indies Squadron experienced a few casualties, Captain W. H. Poë, R.M., and Dr. Martin, R.N., late of the London, being severely wounded. In an engagement in which all have so well done their duty, it is only natural to expect that honours and rewards will follow in due course. No doubt Captain Wilson has won the much-coveted Victoria Cross, as he has, we hear, been specially mentioned by General Buller, and Commander Rolfe his Post Captaincy, which will place the command of the Dragon at the disposal of the Admiralty.

THE following is a copy of the telegram from Lord Wolseley to General Stephenson, dated February 12, giving the instructions for the despatch of the Suakim Expeditionary Force :—

> "Force is to be collected at Suakim, with the object, if possible, of relieving Tokar garrison, if it can hold out; if not, of taking any measures necessary for the defence of ports. General Graham to command force. Redvers Buller to command Infantry Brigade and be second-in-command. Herbert Stewart to command all mounted troops. Two last and Wauchope, as Deputy-Assistant-Adjutant-General, start to-night. Select other Staff officers as required in Egypt. Make following arrangements at once, settling all details yourself. Select three best battalions in your command. Those, with 2nd Irish Fusiliers, now in Jumna, and battalion of Marines, to form Infantry Brigade under Buller. If you deem it advisable, bring garrison of Alexandria to Cairo while expedition lasts. Report if you wish to do so, as orders would be sent to Fleet to hold Alexandria temporarily. While so held a Naval officer will command there. 19th Hussars, mounted Infantry, and any reliable native horsemen now at Suakim to constitute mounted force under Stewart. Take horses from Wood's Cavalry to complete 19th with country horses, leaving behind for the time English horses with Egyptian cavalry. One garrison battery, Royal Artillery, to take over guns, equipment, camels, and camel-drivers from Wood's camel battery. If it has started from Cairo, it must be brought back at once for this purpose. It can take ordinary field-guns with it up Nile. Send one of its officers with camel-drivers. Baring will give necessary authority. Admiral Hewett will furnish machine-guns, manned with sailors, if required. Do not send field guns on any account with expedition. Regimental transport to be taken with troops. Employ camels as much as possible. Hire them if possible; if not, purchase. Baggage to be on lowest possible scale, as troops ought to be back in Cairo in three weeks. Obtain from Egyptian Government means for carrying water on camels. Turn your best attention to carriage of water. Stretchers at rate of three or four per company. Make best arrangements you can for conveyance of wounded. Tents to accompany force to Suakim or Trinkitat, as case may be. Troops to bivouac on line of march. Provisions for men and horses for a fortnight to be embarked. Arrange for sending on enough afterwards for one or two more weeks. Naval authorities may be indented on for first needs to be landed from ships. All sea transport require to be arranged with Naval authorities. Three months' supply of groceries for 6,000 men and a reserve of 180,000 lb. preserved meat and 400 tons of forage will be shipped from England immediately. You will telegraph any further requirements. Send your best doctor as principal medical officer. Two hundred and fifty rounds per man, besides 70 in pouch. Furnish each man with ample puggaree. 10th Hussars from Jumna will be landed to garrison Suakim. A few of them might be mounted on horses now there, as it is desirable to be strong in cavalry. Order all good horses now there to remain for this purpose. Tell Parr to do his best to obtain land transport there. Naval officer at Alexandria will arrange for conveyance from Suez to Suakim. Communicate with him at once. Two medical and two commissariat officers start at once for service in your command. All confidence felt in your judgment and experience to settle necessary details. Communicate this to Baring and Hewett at once, and arrange details with latter. The greatest publicity to be given to the determination to relieve Tokar by British soldiers."

It is observable that General Stephenson, in whose judgment and experience so much confidence is expressed as to "details," is relieved from all trouble in the selection of officers, who are sent out from the Adjutant-General's in London. "Andy Wauchope," as he is generally called, is a very solid, hard-headed, and hard-working officer, and in all ways excellent; and no objection can be raised to Herbert Stewart and Buller, except that they are not the only capable officers for the work assigned to them. Graham is said "not to handle infantry well, and so he had to be nursed," but he is especially praised by the papers for the skill he displayed in his tactics. The most curious point in the memo. is the way in which Stephenson is authorised to take Wood's officers, men, horses, camels, guns, equipment, and drivers, without any reference to Wood, or Khedive, or War Minister! According to the Constitution, the Khedive is Commander-in-Chief of his army; but in this memo. his Highness is not mentioned, and "Baring" is "to give the necessary authority" to appropriate the Egyptian Artillery of Wood's army. The whole force, it will be observed, was to be back in Cairo in three weeks from February 12. The order about the field-guns is very positive.

TWO very important questions were recently put to the Secretary of the Admiralty by Lord Lewisham respecting the Marines at Suakim. The replies to those questions threw darkness rather than light upon the points at issue. Mr. Campbell-Bannerman has a reputation for fairness and for plainness of speech. Doubtless he believed what he said, but what he did say was evidence against that system which has prevailed in Admiralty dealings with the Marines. He said that the Marines landed at Suakim on February 5, from Sir W. Hewett's squadron, "were under the Naval Discipline Act, and under the immediate command of the Admiral." He was "not aware who was the senior Marine officer landed there," but he had "no doubt Sir William Hewett made the best disposition of his officers for the service he had to discharge." Now, we know that Sir W. Hewett had a force of 100 Marines, and that his flagship carries a Captain of Marines. This, indeed, was the only military force the Admiral had at the time at his disposal, the only specially trained and organised military body really fit and effective for land operations, and the officers of the Marines the only officers under Admiral Hewett's command, trained to undertake purely military operations. Naval officers, with all the will in the world, have not, and cannot have, the same detailed knowledge and experience in military operations as Marine officers. Perhaps the Secretary of the Admiralty was not certain that a Marine officer was landed, for Marine officers have often been kept on board ship, while Naval officers from the same ship have been landed to take part in military operations on shore. He also knows that there are no Admiralty Instructions whatever forbidding such square pegging of "round holes." No one in the House or out of it is likely to doubt that Sir W. Hewett would ever do his best where fighting is to be done. He left his Fleet to risk his life and "prospect" danger from the centre of the military oblong at Teb, and if it be best for the public service that an Admiral should do so, the Secretary of the Admiralty must be quite certain the Admiral made the "best disposition" of the senior officer of the Fleet. But supposing Sir W. Hewett, following the precedent set by other Admirals, left his Marine officers on board, or that a Naval officer was put in command of the land defence of Suakim, would the Secretary of the Admiralty say it was the "best disposition" of officers "under the Admiral's command?" There is nothing in the Admiralty Instructions to prevent what is the custom of the service in like cases. The other question put by Lord Lewisham had reference to the fact that the Admiralty sent the Marines from the Mediterranean Fleet to Suakim, and left the officers behind. The Secretary of the Admiralty accounted for this by saying it was done by the Admiralty, "who took into consideration not only the requirements of Sir W. Hewett, but the circumstances of the possible duties of the ships of the Mediterranean Squadron, and also the limited accommodation for passage in ships of war." Is not the Secretary of the Admiralty aware that in the Queen's Regulations and Admiralty Instructions, no duties are defined for Marine officers without their men? What have the possible duties of ships to do with Marine officers in the Mediterranean Fleet and their men in the Red Sea? As regards the excuse of "limited accommodation for passage in ships of war," the Admiralty telegram (No. 17, Affairs at Suakim), which took Marines out of the ships of the Mediterranean Fleet and left their officers behind, told Lord John Hay (as regards the means of transport for these men) that "Orontes was available at Port Said." The Orontes is a transport with ample accommodation for officers, and is not a ship-of-war with "limited accommodation" for passengers. We trust when the Navy Estimates come before the House, we shall hear more about this matter, for the reply of the Secretary of State for War on Thursday threw no real light on the subject.

THERE is, we venture to say, no officer in the Army, except those immediately benefited by the exercise of the patronage, who approves of the action or inaction of the Duke of Cambridge in reference to the recent appointments to the command of the expeditionary force in Egypt. We mention the name of the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief because his Royal Highness is understood theoretically to be the responsible adviser of the Secretary of State for War in the selection of officers for employment. If he is not, then some greater change has been made at the Horse Guards than the degradation of the office of Commander-in-Chief to the functions of Chief of the Staff to the occupant for the time being of the post of Secretary of State for War. There must be now some wide divergence from the traditions of the service established in Pall Mall, if the practices which have been going on for some short time past be recognised as normal. It is understood that Mr. Childers, as Secretary of State, very resolutely exercised his authority in making some of the appointments to the Staff of Sir Garnet Wolseley, when that officer was sent out to command the expedition of 1882, but it is not to be supposed that Mr. Childers over-ruled the Duke of Cambridge or disregarded his advice, but that the Duke approved of what the Secretary of State proposed. However, there were then some hard things done "for the good of the service." The General officer at Malta, who saw his best regiments taken from his command and sent on to Alexandria, must have felt—nay, we may say he did feel—very acutely the disregard shown to his services and his reputation by the appointment of officers from home to pass over his head to field service, but he must now be aware that he was not singular in his suffering. When Sir Gerald Graham was ordered to take command of the troops sent to Suakim, it might be said that General Stephenson, his senior, could not be spared from Cairo to direct the operations of a brigade, but there were in Egypt at least two General Officers of great merit, experience, and service who might surely have been trusted to act in the field without putting the country to the expense, and these officers to the humiliation, of despatching their juniors from England to take their legitimate work out of their hands. It is not necessary to name the officers to whom we allude. The Army knows well who they are. The studied neglect of Sir Evelyn Wood's relation to the defence of Egypt, and the way in which he has been passed over in the arrangments for the military operations which have been considered necessary for the protection of the Egyptian ports on the Red Sea, may be easily conjectured to have been most painful to his feelings. No wonder it is reported that he is sick and unable to see any one. He and his officers are on the strength of the British Army. They were lent to the Khedive to organise and command an army for the protection of Egypt, and, having full confidence in their work and in their men, they are denied the right they might fairly have expected to be conceded to them of putting down those who are uniformly described as "rebels" (not to us—that they could not be, but to the Khedive), or of taking part in the operations against them, though they were deprived of some of the troops they had drilled for service in the expedition. The "orders" to appoint General Graham, and to employ the officers who were despatched from England, were not sent by the Commander-in-Chief through his Military Secretary. They were not sent by the Secretary of State for War. They were telegraphed to General Stephenson direct by the Adjutant-General. Sir Evelyn Wood's force was subjected to the effect of these orders. Perhaps it was "to save time," and Lord Wolseley has given another proof, perhaps a wholesome one, of his disregard of precedent and love of innovation. In the days of Crimea, it was the Duke of Newcastle or Lord Panmure who sent orders to the General in the field. Now all is changed. Any way, it was, so far as we know, a new departure as to form. The Adjutant-General would seem to be the War Office and the Horse Guards in one. He certainly is to be complimented on the energy and entire completeness of the way in which he did his business. But he might have done it just as well in the old fashion. It is a novelty to have a Queen's Adjutant-General making speeches at public dinners, in which Army reforms are discussed for the benefit of Fishmongers and Livery Companies. It is evident that all the "boulders" have been removed. They are knocked into a cocked-hat, and there is now no impediment to the full career of the brand-new vehicle in the form of a quadriga, in which the conqueror drives over the course in Pall Mall.

THE Pall Mall Gazette and the Globe this week have written strong paragraphs in support of the view taken by many Military men, and well expressed in the letter of "A Cavalry Officer" to a contemporary, that the time has at last come when the long and cruel punishment of a gallant soldier should be considered to have been worked out, and that a term should be put to the ostracism of exile and to the degradation in sorrow and suffering which have tried, though they have not broken, the spirit or heart of one who, ever since the fatal moment which brought with it such fearful shame and loss, and cut short a great career of usefulness to the country, has rendered to friendly strangers all the services which a cool, clear head and admirable military aptitudes could bestow in the field. We do not propose to open the question of the fitness or fulness of the "justice" done in Baker's trial. But in the case of even the most abandoned criminal, the doctrine of eternal punishment is not accepted. When a man has purged himself of his offence by undergoing his sentence, he is no more liable to pains and penalties of any kind. For the alleged offence, which, it must be remembered, was established on the evidence for the prosecution alone, as the accused would not allow the cross-examination of the principal witness, Colonel Baker lost all a man held dear,—his rank in the Army, the favour of his Sovereign, the good opinion of his friends and his country. He was subjected to imprisonment, such as would have been inflicted on a civilian in a like case, but he was also subjected to a frightful fine, from which a civilian would have been exempt. He lost his commission, he lost the price of his commission—at least £8,000—and he was sent adrift with a mark on his brow blacker and deeper than that of Cain. We are very sure Valentine Baker, when he was sentenced, would have welcomed death gladly in lieu of the fate in store for him; but as it was, he bowed his head to "Justice," and went forth a broken man to win for himself a name and fame in foreign lands. The brightest page in the annals of the desperate campaign which nearly gave St. Sophia to the Russian Christians, was written by Baker's sword, when he conducted his gallant Turks in the masterly movements and hard fights which were necessary to cover the retreat of the Army of Bulgaria on the sea. He began later on the work of organising the Egyptian Army so well, that when he was removed by orders from home to make room for Evelyn Wood, his successor could do no better than work on the lines Baker had laid down, and the Egyptian Police, in the organisation of which Baker was exposed to all kinds of restrictions, impediments, and offensive imputations, were developed by him so rapidly that when our dilatory Government sanctioned the dispatch by the Egyptian Government of a force to Suakim to relieve Sinkat and Tokar, it was Baker's gendarmerie-constabulary which was selected as the only force available to serve as a nucleus of the expedition. How Baker behaved on the disastrous day when his wretched rabblement fled from the death they could not escape, we need not say. Those who know the man need no assurance that in proportion to the danger swelled his courage and his calm. He was recalled to Cairo after that terrible defeat, and many men of different mettle, and yet not less gallant, glad to escape from the painful position to which contact with the officers of the Queen's Army would expose them, would, in his place, have obeyed the command; but Baker was above all that kind of mock fine feeling. He was not vindictive. He placed his knowledge and his experience at the service of his old comrades, and it is to their credit that he was placed on the Staff of the army when it advanced, and was enabled to render substantial service to her Majesty's forces. We admit the very grave and great difficulties in the way of the measure recommended by our contemporaries; but "where there is a will there is a way," and we cannot believe that the service and the country would hestitate to sanction the bestowal of some mark of Royal clemency and favour on the English Pasha who has maintained so gallantly the reputation of our race, and illustrated the best qualities of a British officer in fighting the battles of our allies, and in directing the operations of a British Army.

THE necessity of a Mobilisation Scheme for the Navy, on the outbreak of war, when this country, having such vast interests to defend, should not only be able to protect those interests at once, but also to attack our enemy without loss of time, is evident. To do this effectually, every officer and man and every ship should be assigned a certain duty. Each squadron should be detailed to perform work prearranged for it, and the whole should be included in one grand plan of attack. That such an organisation does not exist is well known. Indeed, no such scheme has ever been worked out. Last year, the Council of the Royal United Service Institution offered its gold medal for an essay approaching this question, the subject being,—"On an outbreak of war, what is the best organisation for distributing the personnel of the Navy and the Reserves among the available war-vessels, and among a proportion of merchant vessels as an auxiliary to the Navy?" and Sir Astley Cooper Key has informed the world, when announcing that the prize had been won by Captain Charles Johnstone, late of the Dryad, that the Admiralty have had this very subject under their consideration "for the last year or two." Surely it is time that the question should pass out of the consideration phase. Here we are in the nineteenth century, and yet the Admiralty do not appear to have profited as yet by the experience gained during the last hundred years, for no mobilisation scheme exists for the Navy. Is this right? Did "reason go before every enterprise, and counsel before every action" of their Lordships, there would be far less cause for discontent in the Navy than exists at this day, when enterprises are undertaken without reason, and action without counsel, the motive power in all cases being "expediency." It is, however, most inexpedient that such a state of things should be allowed to exist a moment longer, as the safety, honour, and welfare of the Empire may thereby suffer. It is not enough for the Admiralty to rest satisfied with moving in the old and worn-out groove of the past. Their Lordships must keep pace with the times. To inform the country in this year of grace 1884 that "for the last year or two" their Lordships have been considering the adoption of a reform in the organisation of the Navy, which became necessary from the day steam superseded sail power, is to admit that the interests of the country have been neglected in the past. We can only hope, therefore, that with so many eminent and able officers at the helm as now compose the Board of Admiralty, the subject will be thoroughly gone into, and a scheme adopted without delay, whereby, at a moment's notice, the whole of England's Naval power may be exerted to the best advantage.

THE latest returns rendered to Head-quarters show that batteries of Garrison Artillery serving in England are, on an average, 30 per cent. below their normal strength. It is becoming as difficult to obtain recruits as it has been to obtain officers. Too much is expected from the garrison gunner. He is required, and rightly so, to be a proficient artillerist, to be acquainted with the service of all heavy guns used in the attack and defence of fortresses, and to possess a thorough knowledge of the stores and ammunition he may be called on to handle. He is also required—and it seems to us wrongly so—to be trained in infantry drill. We cannot think this system is sound. In these days of short service, the garrison gunner has quite enough to do to perfect himself in his artillery duties without being required to learn the work of an infantry soldier too. Yet this dual system of training has been developed lately to such an extent, and has so much to do with the difficulty of recruiting, that it requires serious notice. What is the rôle of the Garrison Artillery? Undoubtedly, fortress warfare. "The circumstances," writes a distinguished Artillery officer "are hardly conceivable, in fortress warfare, wherein it could be desirable for the gunner to desist from the service of the guns, and employ his carbine against the enemy." We cannot recall a single instance in former or recent wars when garrison artillery have ever been used as infantry. Why, then, are so many hours wasted in teaching men duties which are not really their own? The time allowed for training gunners is too short to admit of their energies being diverted into extraneous channels. English Artillery officers have a European reputation for smartness and scientific proficiency. When applying themselves to their Artillery duties they always display conspicuous ability. We think they are out of place in the field, dismounted, and conducting their men through intricate infantry manœuvres. The position of officers and men is a false one. They know it is such, and when this is so, it can hardly be wondered at if they grow disgusted at having to do work which they ought never to be ordered to perform. The fault is not with the Artillery regimental officers. It lies, as we think, chiefly with General officers commanding districts. In these days of skeleton battalions, the temptation to increase the number of effective men at field-days is great. Every time the General drags out the garrison artilleryman into the field, let him remember that he does so to the detriment of the man's legitimate duties as a gunner. For our own part, we should be glad to see the carbine withdrawn altogether from the Garrison Artillery. There would then be no excuse for playing at infantry drill. This reform has been strongly advocated by many Artillery officers, by none with greater force than by Major-General H. A. Smyth, commandant of the Woolwich Garrison. "Traditional custom," he writes, "would, no doubt, undergo some derangement by the general withdrawal of the carbine from the Garrison Artillery; marching-past would be less effective to the eye than heretofore; periodic inspection would see the gunners on the guns, rather than under arms, in the reality of shell practice rather than in the dumb-show of musketry exercises; but the display of ability would be more genuine, the effect in education more practical, and the men, relieved from supererogatory lessons, would devote a fuller and heartier energy towards the mastery of their proper, yet sometimes most lightly regarded, duties." These are weighty words. We commend them to the notice of the authorities.

It has been known for some time past that the Lords of the Admiralty have been seriously considering the case of the Senior Lieutenants of the Royal Navy, with a view towards taking some practical steps to mitigate the acknowledged hardship of their position. We have heard rumours to the effect that, in addition to granting a small increase of pay, they were about to introduce, if not a new rank, at least a new title. We trust that this is not the case. We feel confident that we are giving expression to the feelings of the great majority of Naval officers, when we say that such a step would be most unpopular, not only among the officers chiefly effected by it, but throughout the Navy generally. The title of Lieutenant-Commander, given to officers in command of gunboats and other small craft, is the one which most readily offers itself for adoption; but to confer on a man the additional title of Commander, while his rank and position in the ship in which he may be serving remains unchanged, would tend towards making that position ridiculous, rather than more dignified. Should an entirely new title be discovered or invented, it will be almost worse. Looking at it from a social point of view, it is well known that the general public, unconnected with the Navy, have very vague ideas as to the rank and precedence which the various titles of Naval officers confer on the holders. Let us not make matters worse by introducing some new-fangled designation, the unfortunate holder of which will, after being introduced to anybody by it, be compelled to explain what it means. We sincerely hope that when their Lordships disclose their intentions, the rumour to which we have alluded will prove to be unfounded.

Nothing has been heard of the whereabouts of Lieutenant Francis H. N. Wilson, R.M.L.I., of the Lord Warden, during the past month, and his absence without leave from his ship has been reported to the Admiralty.

Rear-Admiral Sir William Hewett, V.C., accompanied by Captain Speedy, will, it is said, meet King Johannes of Abyssinia near Massowah, in order to negotiate the retrocession of territory to Abyssinia and the surrender of Massowah, in consideration of King Johannes relieving the beleaguered Egyptian garrisons in the south of the Soudan. Captain Speedy has already left Cairo, and is said to be the bearer of a letter from her Majesty the Queen to King Johannes.

Vice-Admiral Sir William Dowell, accompanied by Captain Hugo Pearson and Staff, arrived at Hong Kong on March 2, and relieved Vice-Admiral Willes of the command of the China station the next day. Admiral Willes left for England on February 5.

A correspondent writes from on board the s.s. Gilsland, off Alexandria, on February 25, regarding the Marines sent from England, as follows :—"Thanks for your note, received at Malta on our arrival there last Friday, the 22nd, after a vile passage, and at least two days behind time. You will apprehend that I had no time to write from there when I tell you we got in at 8 a.m., and were bundled anyhow on board this craft, sailing again at noon, we suppose to assist in garrisoning Alexandria, where we hope to be at day-light to-morrow, until the return of the troops from Cairo and Suakim. Captain Montgomery and Lieutenants Roche and Eastman remained on board the Poonah. Captain Conolly and Lieutenants Stamper and Holman went to the Superb at Malta. The former lot are for conveyance to flagship at Alexandria. It is an infamous shame to have put us on board this craft, a quick steamer, but totally inadequate for the accommodation of 400 men. Fortunately, the weather has been perfect, or I really do not know how the men would have come through it; they could not have stood on the iron deck, and must have been battened down without air or light. Most of our cabins are bunks knocked up on the troop-deck among the men; and we feed in the most primitive style in two lots! I much fear Rose, good fellow as he is, will not be strong enough to represent the indignity of bundling us out of the Poonah to make room for the 38th and a battery of artillery, for conveyance to the same place as ourselves." The Admiralty seem to take very little heed of the feelings of the Marines, and to trouble their heads anent their creature comforts still less.

An Order has been issued from the Admiralty, dated February 27, 1884, notifying that certain alterations made in the system of musketry firing in her Majesty's Fleet, are to apply also to the Royal Marines, viz. :—"The annual expenditure of ball ammunition is to be increased from 100 to 150 rounds per rifle, at the discretion of the captain. All seamen are in future to fire up to 600 yards. The following classification to be adopted instead of that now in force, viz. :—Any seaman obtaining 165 points to be marksman; from 140 to 164, 1st class; from 100 to 139, 2nd class; below 100, 3rd class."

The "Torpedo Hunter" of which trials have been made in the Italian ports is said to have been most successful. It is an exceedingly fast and powerful vessel, intended to hunt down torpedo-launches, and is credited with a speed of 22 miles an hour.

Naval officers who have served on the West Coast of Africa, and are conversant with the past policy of this country in regard to Portuguese claims on the Congo and the West Coast, have been somewhat astonished at the announcement that Lord Granville has acknowledged the claims Lord Palmerston steadfastly combatted, and that a treaty has been signed between England and Portugal. But it appears that these "high contracting parties" have been disposing of that which other civilised states of Europe claim a right in. Lord Granville has surrendered rights which other nations assert England had no right to surrender. A century ago this would have led to a "grand war." And so it does now,—on paper.

The Order in Council of November 29, 1881, provided that Staff appointments in the Royal Marines were to be held for a period of five years. This, however, has now been modified, with a view to increasing the efficiency and value of the young officers of the corps by giving as many as possible an opportunity of perfecting themselves by experience in the important duty of instructing in musketry and gunnery; consequently, the appointments of Assistant Musketry or Gunnery Instructors are in future to be held for three years only, subject to renewal at their Lordships' pleasure for a further period of two years.

At Portsmouth, the brigs are preparing for their spring cruise, and in the ship basin is a steam yacht, purchased by the Admiralty to replace the Antelope in Eastern waters, and suitable, it is to be hoped, for the purpose. Judging, however, from former experiments of the kind, the presumption is not in her favour. Their Lordships have been singularly unfortunate in their purchases of yachts, the two schooners Undine and Harrier being quite unsuitable for their work, besides being ruined by alterations of trim, &c.; and the new Fire Queen, née Candace, having proved, as we prophesied, to be totally unfitted, owing to her heavy draft, for "conveying distinguished personages to Osborne," the "distinguished personages" objecting, not unnaturally, to being conveyed in a very small steam pinnace from Cowes Roads to the pier, and much preferring to be landed comfortably alongside by one of the "joint Company's steamers," which is accordingly hired on such occasions. The Imperieuse is under the sheers in the old steam basin, receiving her boilers and machinery; and the two vessels on the slips—the Camperdown and Calliope—are progressing slowly, but, it is to be hoped, surely; the former has one plate of her side armour in position, and a considerable portion of the armoured deck completed forward. The huge sheds which have stood for so many years over these building slips, and have sheltered so many different types of vessels during the process of construction, cause considerable anxiety to the Works Department during such a breeze, for instance, as that of a month ago; it is to be hoped that the one over the north slip is among the more reliable, as the Camperdown will probably not emerge from it for at least 18 months. The Osborne is now resplendent in new gilt and varnish; the Triumph is in No. 12, and the Edinburgh afloat in No. 13; the Dreadnought has been undocked, and resumed her place in the large basin. The Bacchante's refit is nearly completed, and she has been painted, for some reason, white, being evidently intended for service in a hot climate. The Polyphemus has once more taken up her quarters in No. 10 dock, and has a substantial platform built up round her spur, which would seem to augur another long spell of inactivity.

There is a considerable show of "great coats" among Naval officers at Portsmouth, and as a natural consequence—in the absence of any external mark of distinction—there is some confusion in the minds of subordinates, who may chance to encounter officers enveloped in this comfortable but cosmopolitan garment, as to the rank of the wearer. Even when it is surmounted by a gold-peaked cap, there is still some scope for the exercise of the imagination as to the number of stripes and the arrangement of buttons, &c.; but with plain peaks, it is simply one of those things "no fellow can make out."

The number of Acting Sub-Lieutenants at the old College at Portsmouth bids fair, from various causes, to be so large during the next few months as to preclude the possibility of accommodating the usual class of Half-pay Captains and Commanders in April. We understand that some alterations are contemplated, by which additional room will be secured; anything, of course, being better than paying these officers lodging allowance, to which there appears to exist an insuperable objection at the Admiralty. The attention of their Lordships has also lately been drawn to an incongruity existing in the Circular, issued periodically, determining the dates of the examinations in mathematics, gunnery, &c., for Acting Sub-Lieutenants, the days for the examination in pilotage—the last Wednesday in each month—being quite independent of the termination of the course, so that some students get their bare two months' instruction, while others may have to wait as long as thirty days for their examination, being under instruction the whole of this time. The days for joining Greenwich, on passing in seamanship, are to be reduced from ten in the year to five, viz., in February, March, May, September, and November.

One of the latest economies introduced at Portsmouth is the abolition of a boat's crew which used to attend until the "overtime" men left off work, in order to avoid any delay in conveying a man to Haslar, in case of accident, the crew, of course, being also paid overtime. This would seem to be a very necessary precaution, but probably the boat has not been required for years, and therefore is considered fair game for economisers. The saving effected can scarcely be commensurate with the importance of promptly obtaining the best surgical treatment in case of an accident; and accidents will occur, as we know, even in the best regulated dockyards!

The Admiralty, having regard to the altered condition of the examinations for Lieutenants, have decided that the lieutenant's commission and the prize of books, &c., will not be given to officers who entered after December 31, 1875, unless first-class in pilotage, as well as in other subjects, is obtained. Also that, with a view to encourage officers to acquire a thorough knowledge of professional and other useful subjects, a lieutenant's commission, dated from the day of attaining six months' seniority as sub-lieutenant, will be given to any sub-lieutenant who obtains first-class certificates in all subjects, and not less than 1,300 marks in the College examination. He must also be recommended by the President of the Royal Naval College, and must possess certificates of good conduct and zeal in the performance of his duties for the whole period of his service. A prize of books or instruments to the value of £10 will be bestowed on those who obtain first-class certificates in all subjects.

A correspondent writes regarding Egyptian honours:—"With reference to the letters which have at various times appeared in the Army and Navy Gazette, and in which it is generally stated that in the late Egyptian Campaign Lieutenant C. Burney, of the Carysfort, was in command of a detached Naval force, consisting of two Gatling guns, an electrical party, and a detachment of Marines; as also, that while in command of that party, he took part in the affair at Tel-el-Mahuta, &c., for which the said Lieutenant C. Burney received no reward; while another officer, Lieutenant King-Harman, 'who was miles in rear,' has been decorated; allow me to state that at no time was Lieutenant Burney in command of any such force, and I can vouch for the following :—After the seizure of Ismailia and the landing of Graham's Brigade, Lieutenant King-Harman received orders from Captain FitzRoy, of the Orion, to take charge of the force before mentioned, and attach himself to the Brigade in its advance on Nefiche. Not receiving any further orders, he remained with the Brigade until after the affair at Tel-el-Mahuta, during which the Orion's Gatling, under Lieutenant King-Harman, together with Lieutenant Adair, was in position about one hundred yards from our artillery position, on which nearly all the fire of the enemy was concentrated. The Carysfort's Gatling was detached by Lieutenant King-Harman to take up a position on the other side of the railway, for the support of the 84th Regiment, and there Lieut. Burney came into action towards evening, the casualties being two men of the 84th shot with the same bullet. So much for the determined attack. After the action, Commander Moore arrived, and took the Naval command, and detached Lieutenant King-Harman to cut through a dam on the Freshwater Canal. There was no more fighting until after the Gatlings returned to their ships. Just before Tel-el-Kebir, a Naval Gatling battery was formed, and sent up from Ismailia, in which Lieutenant King-Harman had charge of the Orion's party." It was, our correspondent presumes, for this latter service that, in common with all the other Lieutenants engaged in that affair, Lieutenant King-Harman received the decoration which has given rise to so much controversy. We may add, that a reference to Lord Wolseley's despatch will prove that Lieutenant King-Harman was in command of the Gatling guns on this occasion; and he has, therefore, evidently won his Medjidieh as honourably as any man in the "miserable little campaign." We hope that the work done by Lieutenant Adair on this occasion, as well as subsequently, when in charge of the Canal transport, will not be forgotten at the Admiralty.

We are given to understand that the Admiralty contemplate the abolition of the rank of Barrack-master at the several Divisions of the Royal Marines, substituting in lieu thereof an additional Quarter-master for the performance of the duties. Should this change be effected, we cannot but congratulate their Lordships upon the steps they are taking. The number of promotions from the ranks of the Royal Marines is totally out of proportion to the numerical strength of the rank and file of the corps; and viewing the splendid matériel of which it is formed, we cannot do otherwise than hope that the authorities will see their way to the realisation of so beneficial a change.

A correspondent calls attention to an inaccuracy in the letter headed "The Late Admiral Glyn," in which,—in referring to the services performed by a naval detachment in bridging the Danube during the war with Russia in 1854, for which Glyn and the Prince got the Sultan's gold medal and were mentioned in the despatch from Lord Raglan, reproduced in our last number,—H.S.H. Vice-Admiral Prince Leiningen, who was then "Prince Ernest," is spoken of as "Prince Edward of Saxe-Leiningen."

As previously announced, Lieutenant-Colonel Moody, Royal Marines, will be retained for a further period on the recruiting service in London. It is very possible that in future the London station may be held by a regimental lieutenant-colonel, as recruits from the out-stations pass through the hands of the recruiting officer in London, and he has therefore greater responsibilities than officers in the provinces, and is, further, in direct daily communication with the Royal Marine office. For these reasons, the officer in London should at least hold a senior position to those who have to send their recruits through him, and their Lordships would have great difficulty in securing the services of a more zealous and efficient officer than Lieutenant-Colonel Moody.

Captain Lord C. Beresford, R.N., is a candidate for Pembroke, and we hear that he has every chance of reappearing in Parliament as Member for the district, which could not be better represented. That he may be returned, is, we believe, the hope of those who desire to have the interests of the Navy advocated in the House by an officer who, whilst he respects and maintains the traditions of the glorious service of which he has proved himself a worthy member, has progressive ideas founded on experience. We say this without reference to party considerations, convinced that on all service questions Lord C. Beresford will regard only measures, not men.

The Admiralty have notified that, with reference to the provisions in Clause 9 of the Order in Council of November 29, 1882, that staff appointments in the Royal Marine Forces, excepting in certain specified cases, are to be held for five years. With a view of increasing the efficiency and value of the young officers of the corps, it is desirable that as many of these as possible should have the opportunity of perfecting themselves by experience in the important duties of instructing in musketry and gunnery; consequently the appointments of assistant-instructors of musketry and gunnery at the several divisional head-quarters and depôts are in future to be held for three years only, renewable, at their Lordships' option, for a further period of two years.

The meeting at Chatham in reference to a memorial to the late Lieutenant Waghorn, Royal Navy, of overland route fame, brought to light the fact that the Government of Victoria, fully recognising the valuable service rendered to Australia by that gallant officer, had granted each of his sisters a life-pension of fifty guineas. The Liberal Government of Great Britain has not been so generous.

Captain and Brevet Major C. S. Webb, R.M.L.I., having failed to pass the required test at the recent Army examination for the substantive rank of Major, will be compelled to retire for age on the 26th prox. The case of Major Webb is one calling for more than usual consideration at the hands of the Admiralty, from the fact that he owes his unfortunate position to his having served for a period of upwards of 18 years as a subaltern officer, a circumstance which has militated against him to such an extent as now to enforce compulsory retirement.

We hear from America that Captain W. A. Kirkland, U.S.N., who is so well known and appreciated by English Naval Officers, applied for the command of the Greeley Relief Expedition the moment it became known that the officer to whom Secretary Chandler had offered the said command (Captain Brown) had declined the duty. By cable we now hear that Commander Schley, U.S.N., has received this command, the services of Captain Kirkland, who is now commanding the receiving-ship Colorado at New York, being considered too valuable for him to be spared for the length of time it is anticipated the expedition will have to remain in Arctic waters.

It really makes one feel very sorrowful to come across such a paragraph as this, in a newspaper published in English in the commercial capital of Egypt:—

> "Gen. Gordon Pasha, in reply to a telegram of good wishes from the Editor of the Daily Telegraph, sent through their Cairo correspondent, telegraphed from Khartoum yesterday afternoon as follows:—'Khartoum, Feb. 18, 1884, 4·5 p.m. Editor Daily Telegraph Cairo,—Have arrived safe and had good reception from poor people. God willing, I hope things will go well. Mahdi will never advance. His endeavours are to raise population, who will not rise if just concessions are made them. I ask your readers for their prayers for the welfare of these people. —GORDON.'"

The readers of our excellent contemporary do not seem to have given their minds to the Soudanese Litany, and certainly Graham put some 3,000 of them past praying for.

It is to be regretted that there was no Lancer regiment at El Teb. Both the 10th and 19th Hussars fought, no doubt, admirably, but they were very much handicapped on the Egyptian ponies.

It would appear that the Medjidies and Osmanies, of which Gordon Pasha took up such a copious supply to Khartoum, have failed to win over the chiefs, and he has sent a demand to Cairo for more money. He lately asked for £49,000 in silver dollars, but all that could be collected in that medium up to February 20 was £19,000, and these were at once sent to him. On the same day a suggestion was sent to London from Cairo to authorise the despatch of British troops to Upper Egypt, but up to the departure of the last mail no action had been taken, as far as could be ascertained.

M. de Martino, the Italian diplomatic agent at Cairo, made a strong representation in favour of the officer of the 60th Rifles who was put under arrest by General Stephenson for tearing up an Italian flag at a public circus. We dare say a severe reprimand would have been thought adequate punishment. It is much to be regretted there should be any occurrence of the sort. Another incident which, according to the account of it in the Egyptian Gazette of February 19, does not read very pleasantly, led to the petition by some native soldiers of the 3rd Battery to the Khedive, which was exaggerated into a general refusal to serve. It appears to be that when the orders came from London to take over the guns of the 3rd Battery, it was found necessary to tell off a certain detail of the Egyptians to act as drivers, and these men were subjected to some horse-play and practical joking by the English artillerymen. They were, moreover, in bad humour at being deprived of their own officers. They complained to Major Wodehouse of their treatment, but apparently they were not satisfied. So "they went and told the Khedive they would not go with English soldiers." The five men who presented the petition, "which was perfectly submissive, were tried for irregularity in transmitting it direct to the Khedive," (poor devils, as if they could tell!) "and they were sentenced to various terms of imprisonment, the maximum being one year." (In an Egyptian prison!) It is astonishing how rapidly local associations and institutions affect the character of our officials. We remember what dreadful things were said about the use of the kourbash by the Egyptians. A correspondent, writing from Suakim on February 12, says:—

> "Last night, some Bashi-Bazouks, on being ordered to do guard duty on the lines, became very mutinous, and refused to obey orders, alleging that as General Baker, they had heard, was about to leave, they declined to serve any longer. General Sartorius at once caused a good dose of the kourbash to be administered to three of the ringleaders, which had the effect of bringing the others to their senses."

Gordon Pasha is quite in the swim with the Soudanese slave-holder, as long as the slaves are domestic. But there is no chattel slavery in the Soudan. It is almost pitiable to read that "the Egyptian authorities are taking measures to prevent the importation of slaves from the Soudan" into Egypt, in consequence of Gordon Pasha's proclamation (vide Egyptian Gazette, February 20).

The new order with regard to the tenure of Indian regimental commands has been published. It is notified that the Secretary of State for India has been pleased to decide that a present Commandant of a regiment, who is required to vacate his command (under G.G.O. No. 209 of 1882) before he has served for the pension granted for 32 years' service, may, on the recommendation of the Commander-in-Chief in India, Madras, or Bombay, and with the approval of the Government of India, Madras, or Bombay, as the case may be, be permitted an extension of command, not exceeding two years—or nine years in all—towards his 32 years' pension service, or such less period as may be required for its completion; no portion of such extension being permitted to be passed on any leave or furlough except privilege-leave. Any officer whose command may be extended under this order will, if now on furlough, be required to rejoin his regiment at once.

Captain F. H. England, 101st Royal Munster Fusiliers, has been appointed Superintendent of Gymnasia in the Western District, vice Captain P. F. Lambart, 5th Northumberland Fusiliers, whose period of staff service has expired.

It may be remembered that an inquiry was recently conducted by Lieutenant-Colonel Walker, R.A., into the alleged defective state of the ammunition produced at the Kirkee Small Arms Ammunition Factory, and that it was reported inter alia that the Kirkee ammunition had not failed from any defect in the powder with which it was made up, but from certain defects in the Small Arms Factory itself. The result was that Colonel A. J. Wake, R.A., the superintendent of the establishment, was deprived of his appointment, and Colonel Walker succeeded him. The quality of the ammunition produced under the new régime having recently been complained of, a fresh inquiry it seems has been ordered, and is now being conducted. Colonel Walker apparently has come to the conclusion that it is the powder after all that is in fault, and it is suggested that the dry air of the Deccan has something to do with this, as Kirkee powder when fired at Dum Dum with bullets made there gives good results. If the powder is proved to be defective, Colonel Wake's case will doubtless be reconsidered by Government. The Kirkee Small Arms Ammunition Factory is again before the Indian public in regard to the alleged bad quality of the Snider cartridges lately turned out and used at the late Presidency Central Rifle Meeting at Poona. The complaint as to their want of accuracy was made by an officer of the Staff Corps, whose men won more prizes at the meeting than those of all the other native corps competitors put together, and this fact has been seized upon by the factory authorities as a ground of disbelief of the alleged inferiority of the cartridges used, apparently forgetting that the men being good shots were better able to determine whether a miss was due to a defective cartridge or to their own unsteadiness. Be this as it may, a very pretty dispute has been engendered, and the new superintendent of the factory has called for the services of an experienced officer from one of the Bengal factories to assist him in the inquiry ordered by the Bombay Government to be held in the matter.

Colonel A. Johnstone, R.H.A., has been selected for the command of the Eastern District, Madras, vice Brigadier-General R. C. Stewart, C.B., who is about to be retired under the age clause of the Royal Warrant.

Earl Percy will on Monday ask the Secretary of State for War how many captains in the last examination for promotion in the Army failed to pass. Whether of the five captains of the Northumberland Fusiliers who failed to satisfy the examiners four are adjutants of Militia and Volunteer battalions, and whether he will state how their regimental duties are to be performed during the summer months while they are preparing for the next examination. Whether, although the general standard of the examination may not have been lately altered, it is not a fact that the marks have been given more sparingly, and the minimum number necessary to receive a pass has been raised. And, whether failure does not in some cases render officers of long service who have distinguished themselves in time of war liable to be superseded by juniors who have never been out of the United Kingdom.

The Ordnance establishments of the three Indian Presidencies are to be amalgamated into one department from the 1st prox., subordinate to the Government of India, but under the immediate control of a Director-General of Ordnance, who will be the adviser of Government on all ordnance matters, and be responsible for the efficient and economical working of the whole department. The first appointment of commissioned officers to the department will be made by his Excellency the Viceroy, all proposals for their subsequent promotion, transfer, and leave being submitted by the Director-General for the orders of the Government of India. He will dispose of all questions relating to the appointment, transfer, and leave of all warrant and non-commissioned officers. The manufacturing establishments will remain under the superintendence of the Inspectors-General of Ordnance, but the general direction as to the nature and amount of work to be undertaken annually in each factory will rest with the Director-General. The Director-General will be responsible for the supply and distribution of ordnance stores, for the preparation and submission of the annual estimates, as well as of the annual indents for stores procured from England. The consolidated Ordnance Department for all India will for the present be divided into three circles of superintendence and supply—Bengal, Madras, Bombay—each under the charge of an Inspector-General of Ordnance, who will be allowed an assistant, taken from the establishment of Commissaries, but not seconded. The Inspector-General of Ordnance, Bengal, will also be assisted by a Deputy-Inspector-General. The Director-General and the Inspectors-General of Ordnance will hold their appointments for a term of five years, and the local rank of Major-General will be conferred upon the Director-General when not appointed in that rank. No officer above the rank of Major-General will be appointed Director-General, nor will any officer above the rank of Colonel be appointed an Inspector-General, but the Director-General and Inspectors-General will be allowed to retain their appointments for the full term of five years, even if the former be promoted to the rank of Lieutenant-General, or the latter to the rank of Major-General. With this exception, no officer shall hold an appointment in the department after promotion to the rank of Major-General. Assistant-Superintendents of Factories will be appointed, as at present, for a term of three years, but all Superintendents of Factories and Commissaries of Ordnance will be appointed for a term of five years. They will then be eligible for re-appointment for a similar term, after which they will revert to regimental duty.

General Sir F. Haines was in Melbourne when the mail left. He has recently visited the New Hebrides and other Pacific islands on board the Miranda, and it was rumoured that he would probably be asked to state his views on Colonial defence.

The new scheme of defence for the North-East Frontier of India provides for the taking over of all outlying posts and stockades by the Frontier Police, who will be placed on a military footing and be drilled and armed accordingly. The regular troops in garrison will be in reserve, and their efficiency will not be lowered by regiments being broken up into small detachments. The Frontier Police will be organised into four large divisions, each under the command of a military officer, and half a lac yearly will be devoted from imperial resources towards their maintenance. An improved system of reliefs and patrols on the frontier has been arranged, under which the police will spend part of every year at their local head-quarters for training and instruction.

It is stated that the office of Inspector-General of Ordnance, Bengal, will not be located at Simla after all, but the office of the Director-General of Ordnance, a new creation, will be at Simla, while that of the Inspector-General will remain at Calcutta.

Major-General R. S. Hill, who lately brought the Aka campaign to a successful conclusion, has been seriously ill. Unfavourable symptoms set in at Labi's village, and the General had to be carried down in a "doolee" to Dijumukh, where it was found necessary to perform an operation. The latest letters state that the General was doing well. We understand that it is under consideration to recommend General Hill for some mark of approval on account of his services.

It has been decided that the British soldier shall be allowed to calculate his pay in India at the rate of exchange annually fixed by Government. This will mean an increase of nearly 25 per cent. in his pay, which cannot fail to be acceptable to Tommy Atkins.

The Times and the other organs of the indefinite occupation of Egypt seem very regardless of some of the consequences of what would be in effect annexation. Indeed, "the leading journal" this week preached annexation, pure and simple. It is not our business to deal with the political results of such a breach of faith and a violation of distinct pledges given over and over again to the Powers of Europe, nor to speak of the moral results of such a proceeding on our good name and on the relations of European States to their neighbours; nor shall we insist on the financial aspect of the question, which would place the taxpayer at home in face of all the Bondholders of a State now only saved from bankruptcy by loans, and render us Receivers-General for Europe; but we do think it is no light matter to undertake to garrison a country like Egypt, exposed to epidemics and intense heat in summer, and inhabited by an excitable, if pusillanimous, people, with a dangerous ingredient of foreign nationality in the large towns. The mode of proceeding adopted in dealing with Egypt has been, and is, quite in keeping with its fruits. First, we destroyed—"shattered," says the Times—the native Government. We overthrew the popular leader and Minister, for Araby, no doubt, was the tribune of the Egyptian people. Then we established a military dictatorship, which after a time was changed into a provincial despotism extending over every department of the Government of Egypt. It was assumed that there would be found Egyptians pliant enough to consent to act as the "devils" of our officials, and to wear the official guise of independent Ministers; but not one native gentleman of station or ability like Cherif or Riaz Pashas would remain in such a position, when he was called on to sanction acts and carry out a policy of which he disapproved, and we were obliged to fall back on an Armenian like Nubar and such men as Sultan Pasha, who is a mere Fellah, without education or knowledge of affairs. The prestige of the Khedive having been trampled in the dust, and all power having been taken from his Ministers, the correspondents of the London newspapers cry out against the utter inaptitude of Egyptians, the folly of trusting them with power, the imbecility and corruption of all native officials, &c., and the leader-writers at home accept the invective as gospel, and declare that it is hopeless to do anything but annex or protect à la Pizarro.

The Victorian Minister for Defence has received a lengthy communication from Major-General Scratchley, in which the latter says he has practically concluded his mission in England regarding the defences. He gives full particulars of the progress made with the gunboats, guns, &c., and states that the South Channel fort for Hobson's Bay, the plans for which have been forwarded to Sir Andrew Clarke and Sir W. Jervois, comprises the very latest ideas for the construction of forts in the water. Exception has been taken to Lieutenant-Colonel Sargood's reorganisation scheme mainly on the ground of an undue increase of the proportion of the artillery and disregard of the accepted limit of three guns to every 1,000 men. Colonel Sargood points out that in the Franco-German War the Germans entered the campaign with 10 guns per 1,000 men, and in other wars the proportion was not less. He provides 18 guns for 3,000 men, and claims that he is supported by the highest military examples. Complaint is also made of the reduction in the cavalry from 250 to 102. The Minister thinks the cavalry would not be likely to be needed, and it would be almost impossible for an irregular body to keep trained horses fit for service. The Nordenfelt is to be provided in connection with the cavalry.

The loss of life in the various "military operations," which were not however "war," in Egypt since 1882, when we bombarded Alexandria to save the British fleet, to the action last week, has been very considerable. We do not take note of the slaughter in the Soudan before any English officer took the field, but begin with the expedition against the Mahdi at El Obeid, in which, at Tel-el-Kebir, the Egyptian loss was at least 2,000. It is said Hicks Pasha's losses were about 8,000, but were probably more. Moncrieff's losses were 500. The returns of Baker's losses were 2,335, as per following statement :—

(About 3,200 rifles lost, 4 Krupps, 2 Gatlings, 2 rocket tubes. Each man carried 100 rounds, and 100 more per man were in reserve.)

The losses of the Arabs at El Teb may be put at 3,000. So that our "operations" in Egyptian territory have been attended with the slaughter of at least 20,000 men, including those who fell at Alexandria.

Experiments were made last year at the engineer camp of Ust-Ischorsk, in Russia, with firing at an iron railing, in order to show how far such railings could be used in place of detached escarps. The results have now been published. The railing, manufactured by Demidoff, was 13¾ ft. high, 72 ft. long, and was fixed in the bare ground without any protection. Firing took place at a distance of 3,608 feet, from two long 24-pounder (15-centimètre) siege guns, with small charges, with 10 degrees of inclination. Sixty shots were fired. From the damage done to the railing the following conclusions were drawn :—(1.) Railings exposed to the fire of siege guns suffer considerably. (2.) A large amount of ammunition, out of proportion to the results obtained, has to be expended before a breach can be made of the breadth of a storming column. If the expenditure of ammunition is less, only small openings are made, which break up the attacking party, and thus jeopardise the success of the assault. (3.) The damage done was, on the whole, of such a nature that under favourable conditions not much time and labour would be required to repair it with wire netting, &c. (4.) The material used for the railing exerts a great effect upon its power of resistance. Cast-iron breaks and splinters. The railing supplied by Demidoff was of the best wrought iron.

For the last two or three years considerable difficulty has been experienced in France in keeping the number of men provided for by the Estimates under the colours. In order to fill up the deficit in 1881, the War Minister had to lay hands upon certain sums voted for the expedition to Tunis. In 1882, Parliament was asked to vote, and voted supplementary credits. But the explanation furnished upon this subject by the War Minister were considered so unsatisfactory, that the next year the Government did not presume to ask for more money. In order to escape from his difficulties, the War Minister resorted to this expedient,—he determined to send 100,000 men on a confidential furlough for three months. The secret, (?) however, became known, and before this measure could be carried out to any extent, the War Minister was obliged to renounce it. To make up for this, he delayed incorporating the annual contingent, and we now see that the present War Minister, in order to make ends meet, has determined to liberate the class of 1879 in the month of August next, or two months before their time. In independent military circles this measure is much blamed, as the men to be liberated will escape the autumn manœuvres, when General officers like to have every possible man in the field. In previous years the strength of a company was seldom over 150 men—the war establishment being 250—and next autumn they will certainly not be over 130 men. Altogether, it is curious to see the War Minister obliged to resort to all kinds of devices, so as not to exceed the Estimates, which are now over £24,000,000.

The Report of the Minister of Militia for the Dominion of Canada, just presented to the Canadian Parliament, gives some interesting details of the Militia force of the country. The active Militia consists of 37,000 officers and men, divided into 12 military districts. A marked improvement is reported in the general bearing of the force, and the Minister believes that a most beneficial effect will result from the facilities which will hereafter be given to officers of all ranks, and in each arm of the service, to acquire a thorough knowledge of their duties by attending the schools of instruction now being formed. It is recommended that not less than three more permanent military schools be established, and that the force be more efficiently equipped. The Minister, in conclusion, expresses his opinion that "the Militia of Canada, being strong, healthy, active men, inured to outdoor labour, and temperate in their habits, are the making of excellent soldiers." We hope to review the Report more fully at an early date.

We learn that the recommendation of the Government of India to the Madras Government's scheme for the permanent location of the local Army Headquarters at Ootacamund has met with the approval and sanction of the Secretary of State for India, and will come into operation from April 1.

ANOTHER ANOMALY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Will you kindly permit me, through the medium of your columns, to direct attention to the anomalous position of Captains in the Line regiments with regard to their promotion to the rank of major, when compared with officers of a similar rank in the Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers? The Royal Warrant of 1881 provides by par. 10 (b) that a captain of the Royal Engineers, on attaining 20 years' service, shall be promoted to the rank of major, whether there may be a vacancy or not; and sub-section (ff) added by Army Circular of March, 1882, provides that a captain of Royal Artillery, on attaining a similar length of service, shall be promoted to a brevet majority; but no mention whatever is made of a captain of the Line receiving any similar promotion when he shall have served for the same term of years. I think, Sir, it must be admitted, that to make such invidious distinctions is, to say the least of it, eminently undesirable; but when it is borne in mind that the captains of the Line have paid money for their first commissions at least, then I think the omission to grant them favours similar to those bestowed on the captains of the Royal Engineers and Royal Artillery may be characterised without exaggeration as gross injustice. I would suggest, therefore, that captains of the Line be put on an equal footing with at least their brethren in the Royal Artillery, and be granted the brevet rank of major after 20 years' service, presuming, of course, that they have not attained the age of 40, and that they have qualified for promotion to field rank. Indeed, I would go further, and suggest that all officers so promoted should be exempt from compulsory removal from their regiments at the age of 40, and be permitted to serve under the same regulations as an officer promoted to brevet rank for distinguished service in the field. Such an act, of what appears to be simple justice on the part of the authorities, would probably not affect very many officers, but it would save a considerable amount of heartburning on the part of those who would otherwise find themselves ruthlessly deprived of their profession, because, having been supremely unfortunate in their promotion, they have committed the unpardonable offence of arriving at the age of 40 before obtaining their majority. Compulsory age retirement in the rank of captain is sufficiently harsh and impolitic in itself, punishing as it does a number of unfortunate officers for no fault of their own, and depriving the State of good and efficient servants; but to make a distinction in favour of one branch of the service appears to me quite unjustifiable, and calls for immediate amendment. If such a step as I have ventured to suggest were adopted, it would do much to ameliorate the present hard terms of service forced upon those who joined the Army under conditions entirely different.—I am, &c., A LINE CAPTAIN.

The Army.

3RD DRAGOON GUARDS. The move of the regiment from Manchester to Aldershot will take place, we believe, before the drill season.

4TH DRAGOON GUARDS. No date has been named for the removal of the regiment from Brighton to the North of England.

8TH HUSSARS arrived at Meerut on the 14th ult. from Meean Meer.

10TH HUSSARS. Latest advices from Egypt announce that the regiment has landed at Suakim. Major M. M. Slade, whose body was found after the battle of Teb on Friday last pierced with twelve spear wounds, was the second surviving son of the late Gen. Marcus Slade, some time Lieut.-Governor of Guernsey, and col. of the 50th Regiment. He was born on Jan. 16, 1849, and joined the 56th Regiment in 1868, exchanging first into the 18th Hussars, and thence into the 10th Hussars, the regiment in which his distinguished grandfather, Gen. Sir John Slade, Bart., G.C.H., gained the first of his many laurels. In the 10th Hussars Montague Slade served in the Afghan War, and earned the special mention and recommendation of his commanders. Returning home, he was stopped at Trinkitat to join his regiment, and if anything can render less poignant the grief and disappointment of the mother and sister, who, now at Cairo, went out to meet him and to be near his younger brother, Major F. G. Slade, R.H.A. (on the staff of Sir Evelyn Wood), it will be seen that he died, as he had lived, a grand-hearted and true scion of a family who have well served their country. Gen. Sir John Slade had 11 sons—of these, eight held, and with honour, commissions in the Army or Navy, two became prominent lawyers, and one entered the Church. Gen. Marcus Slade (who claimed to be the lawful inheritor of his father's baronetcy on the death of his elder brother, Sir Frederick Slade, second baronet) left three sons to perpetuate the traditions of his house. The eldest, John Ramsay Slade (major R.H.A.), has received the Companionship of the Bath for his conduct at Maiwand and his courage and humanity during the difficult march to Candahar. The youngest son, Frederick George (also major R.H.A.), is with Sir Evelyn Wood, and has been to the front at every opportunity since he donned the Queen's uniform. The following officers arrived in Egypt with the regiment in H.M.S. Jumna from India :—Lieut.-Cols. Wood and Liddell; Majors Gough and Slade; Brevet Major Brabazon; Capt. Brett; Lieuts. Lord Compton, Durham, Wilson, Greenwood, Allsopp, Harvey, Byng, and Hughes-Onslow.

13TH HUSSARS. At the desire of H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught, commanding the Division, an interesting tent-pegging competition came off at Meerut on Jan. 1, between teams of nine men selected from each of the regiments of the Meerut Cavalry Brigade. It was won by three points only by the 13th Hussars. The scores were as follow :—13th Hussars: Troop Serjt.-Major Pilsbury, 11 points; Serjt. Pook, 6; Serjt. Brooker, 7; Corpl. Hagan, 8; Pte. Brown, 6; Corpl. Barringer, 8; Pte. Farmer, 6; Pte. Powell, 6; Pte. Bathgate, 10; total, 68. 5th Bengal Cavalry, 59; 13th (Duke of Connaught's) Bengal Lancers, 65. Capt. and Pymr. Christie has passed the higher proficiency examination in the Urdu language. The regiment left Meerut on Feb. 9.

15TH HUSSARS. It is not thought probable that the regiment will leave Aldershot for Brighton until after the Aldershot drill season.

17TH LANCERS. Capt. Benson has taken up the appointment of Garrison Instructor at Lucknow. Lieut. Coventry has been granted leave from India to England for nine months, on private affairs.

19TH HUSSARS. The regiment, according to latest accounts from Egypt, had landed at Suakim. The Times' correspondent at Tokar writes on March 3:—"Two serjeants and a trooper of the 19th Hussars saved Col. Barrow with great courage, which might be inferred from this fact alone, that no other officer or man severely wounded escaped to live. One trumpeter, terribly cut about by spears, was carried out only to die. When Col. Barrow was wounded, Serjt. Marshall caught him as he fell from his horse, and seizing a loose horse, tried to place his colonel on it. Then came up Trooper Boseley, to whom belonged the loose horse, which had fallen. Boseley on foot, under a heavy fire, through masses of the enemy, supported the wounded officer into our infantry lines, aided by Serjt. Fenton; Serjt. Marshall, knowing that his troop would be feeling the loss of officers, rejoining it. A corporal of the 19th Hussars had four horses killed under him, three by rifle bullets and one by spears. In the last case, at the moment his horse was killed, a trooper near him was killed also, and he leapt into the empty saddle. The daring of the scouting up to Tokar may be illustrated by the fact that Serjt. James Fatt, of the 19th Hussars, being ordered to push forward on scouting duty, and finding himself close to Tokar and alone, entered the town, not knowing whether it were friendly or hostile. He was the first man in Tokar and brought out the inhabitants, who ran up to Gen. Stewart. The 10th Hussars record equally bold actions, which have not yet been reported in detail." Lieut. F. A. Freeman, who was killed in the Battle of El Teb, on the 29th ult., entered the Army, Aug. 13, 1879, and became lieut., July 1, 1881. He served with the regiment in the Egyptian Campaign of 1882, and was present at the Battle of Tel-el-Kebir (medal with clasp and bronze star).

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

Col. W. H. Wardell has been appointed to command Royal Artillery in the Belfast District, vice Col. W. G. Brancker, C.B., transferred to Ipswich.

Brevet Col. T. F. Chapman, C.B., A.D.C., has resumed his appointment as Military Secretary to Gen. Sir D. M. Stewart, Commanding-in-Chief in India.

The Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief has approved of the Artillery districts in the Southern District being designated as follows :—The present No. 2 to become the Spithead District; the commands at Weymouth and the Isle of Wight being respectively designated the Weymouth District, the Eastern Forts District, Isle of Wight, and the Western Forts District, Isle of Wight.

A brass memorial has been placed in the Garrison Church of St. George, Woolwich, with the following inscription:—"To the glory of God, and in loving memory of Clarence Thomas Irving Noble, Lieut., R.A., who died at Chanda, Central Provinces, India, May 7, 1883, in his 27th year."

Orders have been issued for the increase of the establishment of A Baty. A Brig., R.H.A., at Newbridge, to that of a battery of the 1st Army Corps. The following are the numbers to be added to the present strength:—24 gunners, 18 drivers, 18 riding-horses, 14 draught-horses, 18 sets of riding appointments, 14 sets of draught-harness, and two guns.

The Delhi paper makes an appeal to H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught, as major-general commanding of the division, to insist on a searching inquiry being instituted into the circumstances attending the mysterious disappearance of Major Innes, R.A., who is now stigmatised as a deserter. Our contemporary states that the missing officer was the soul of honour, and that there was not the faintest slur on his name; he owed no man a pie, and the accounts of his battery were kept with scrupulous exactness. Major Innes is known to have reached Calcutta, and when there he recollected that in the hurry of leaving Delhi he had omitted to pay a gunner of his battery for some private work done for him. He sent the man a m.o. for the money due, with apologies for his forgetfulness.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

Lieut. R. S. Hedley was accidentally drowned at Trincomalee on Jan. 29. Deceased, who was 27 years of age, was son of Mr. R. Hedley, of 44 St. George's Square.

Grenadier Guards. Col. Lord Hinchingbrook has succeeded to the title and estates of the earldom of Sandwich, by the death of his father. His lordship has represented Huntingdon since February, 1876. Lieut. the Hon. G. F. H. Somerset has resigned his appointment as aide-de-camp to the Governor of Bombay.

1st or Royal Scots. Lieut.-Col. W. Freeborn, captain on the Retired List, died at Mistley, Manningtree, on the 28th ult., aged 47 years. He joined the Army Jan. 10, 1854; became lieut., May 1, 1855; capt., July 20, 1866; major, Nov. 10, 1877; and lieut.-col., July 1, 1881. Landed in the Crimea with the 2nd Batn. on April 22, 1855, and was at the siege and fall of Sebastopol (medal with clasp, Turkish medal, and 5th class of the Medjidie).

3rd Buffs (East Kent Regiment). The 2nd Batn. will, it is understood, be moved from Hong Kong to Malta during the autumn.

4th King's Own (Royal Lancaster Regiment). Capt. MacCarthy, 2nd Batn., has been granted leave from India to Australia for 13 months, on private affairs. Lieut. Thorne, 2nd Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for eight months, on private affairs.

5th Northumberland Fusiliers. Major Broad, 2nd Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for 12 months, on medical certificate. Major Dyke and Lieuts. James, Caulfield, and Willmott, 2nd Batn., proceed to India in H.M.S. Euphrates.

6th Royal Warwickshire Regiment. Major Gibbs, 2nd Batn., on leave from India, has been posted to the depôt for duty.

8th King's Liverpool Regiment. Major Crawley and Lieut. Fowler, 2nd Batn., proceed to India in H.M.S. Euphrates. Lieut. Loudon, 2nd Batn., is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and has been appointed to the 25th Madras N.I., on probation.

10th Lincolnshire Regiment. Capt. Day, 2nd Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for six months, on urgent private affairs.

11th Devonshire Regiment. Capt. Carden, 2nd Batn., proceeds to India in H.M.S. Euphrates. Lieut. Smith, 2nd Batn., a probationer, attached to 13th Madras N.I., is about to be admitted to the Madras S.C., from July 17, 1882.

15th East Yorkshire Regiment. Lieut. Hamilton, 2nd Batn., has been confirmed in his appointment as aide-de-camp to the Governor of Bombay.

17th Leicestershire Regiment. An exchange has been permitted between Majors Bradburne and Cox, Major Bradburne joining the 2nd and Major Cox the 1st Batn. The 1st Batn., at Portsmouth, is likely, it is said, shortly to proceed to Aldershot.

18th Royal Irish Regiment. The following officesr left Portsmouth on the 29th ult., with head-quarters, in H.M.S. Malabar, for Malta, viz.:—Lieut.-Cols. Dawson and Toppin, Brevet Lieut.-Col. Rogers; Majors Herbert, Brereton, and Daubeny; Capts. Lye, Hatchell, and Park; Lieuts. Chichester, Chawner, Orr, Ward, Daly, Bass, Downing, King, Cullinan, Garraway, Segrave, and Knowles; Lieut. and Adjt. Symonds, and Capt. and Pymr. Robinson.

20th Lancashire Fusiliers. The Deccan Herald gives the following account of the regimental inspection of the 2nd Batn.:—"The battalion paraded on Saturday morning, at 7.30 a.m., for musketry inspection. The battalion was broken up, and, under the junior officers, was put through the preliminary duties of outpost duty and tactical drill. The 16 men per company were marched up to the range, and told off by companies, at distance and position ordered, commencing from 1,200 yards. The Major-General expressed himself highly satisfied with the good shooting of the regiment, and we say, 'well he may.' We had the Lancasters here before, and we can safely say that on or off parade they are the beau-idéal of soldiers. The battalion, punctual to time, was formed up in column at 5.15 p.m., and, on the arrival of the General, turned out for outpost duty and tactical drill. The change of relief-posts was well performed, the several moves to bring reliefs, and the increase and diminishing of outpost duties were smartly executed. We can safely congratulate our General in having the Lancasters at hand, a regiment as well handled by its present commander as any in the British service."

21st Royal Scots Fusiliers. A draft, consisting of two officers, one serjeant, two corporals, two drummers, and 135 privates, left Aldershot, on the 4th inst., en route to the 2nd Batn., India. They were inspected on the previous day by Gen. Sir A. Alison and Major-Gen. Feilding. The men were in drill order, and were put through many testing evolutions by Serjt.-Major Smith, at which both distinguished officers expressed themselves highly pleased. At the termination of the inspection and drill, Major-Gen. Feilding addressed them. He said:—"Men of the draft of the Royal Scots Fusiliers, I send you from my command with feelings mingled with pleasure and regret, for whilst being sorry to lose you, I am highly pleased and thankful that I am enabled to send a draft of your appearance and your high training from under my command; and I never remember sending so fine and so perfectly drilled a body of men from under my command before. Amongst the many things which I would wish to say to you, from my experience of this distant country where you are now going, one, above all, I would ask you to remember,—keep from drink; it is bad at home, it is death in India. This is not the first time I soldiered beside your regiment, and as a parting favour, I hope you will endeavour to keep it in the high position which, through many years of gallantry and perseverance, it has won." Sir A. Alison then said,—"Men of the Royal Scots Fusiliers, I am proud of all I have seen of you to-day; you are, indeed, a credit to your old and honoured regiment. I wish you all a pleasant voyage to your new homes." The draft is conducted to India by Major Auchinleck, Royal Scots Fusiliers, whose name is familiar to those who have been at all interested in the Transvaal Campaign. He defended with great gallantry and success the town of Rustenburg for three months; he was three times wounded, one causing a slight disfiguration of his face. The men paraded complete, without a prisoner. Previous to handing them over to Major Auchinleck, Col. G. F. Gildea, A.D.C., addressed them as follows:—"Men,—Only for the consolation of knowing that you are going to our 2nd Batn., whose interests are identical with us in all things, I should find it very hard indeed to part with you, because by your exemplary conduct, your attention to your drill (at which, I may say, you are perfect), your cleanliness and cheerfulness under all circumstances, you have caused us to feel your departure with regret. On you we depend to preserve, and, if possible, draw closer the bonds of friendship which bind us to the other battalion. Whether in peace or in war, never forget the example of loyalty, esprit de corps, strict performance of all duties, and good comradeship, which you have been taught whilst with us. Go on in the future as you have in the past, think well before you leave this regiment, and still more seriously before you give up your profession, for in vain will you search for a better regiment than your own, and you will never find a better or more honourable calling than soldiering. I entered the service before any of you were born, I appreciate and admire it now as then, and I think of the time when I must leave it with feelings of regret. Major Auchinleck, there is no officer to whom I would sooner entrust this draft than to you, for under my own command, in another hemisphere, you have proved yourself a real soldier, and few there are who have contributed more largely towards the honour of the Royal Scots Fusiliers than you have. You will find those 'lads' will amply repay your care of them, and I feel confident you can depend on them to render a good account of themselves, under whatever circumstances they may be placed. Major Auchinleck, I now hand them into your care." The men cheered again and again leaving the camp and at the railway-station for their colonel and serjeant-major, for in them, no doubt, they recognised their foremost friends. The 1st Batn. Royal Scots Fusiliers is reduced to a skeleton again, just as it was 15 months ago, when Col. Gildea took it over; but thanks to his forethought, recruiting is going on in Scotland and Ireland for the last six weeks, so that he still hopes to hand over to his successor next August (when his command expires) a battalion fairly strong, if not complete. Capt. Lambart, 2nd Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for six months, on private affairs.

23rd Royal Welsh Fusiliers. Capt. and Qrmr. McCormac, 1st Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for 10 months, on private affairs.

24th South Wales Borderers. Capt. Weallens and Lieuts. Drury, Kirkpatrick, and Field, 2nd Batn., proceed to India in H.M.S. Euphrates. Lieut. Way, 2nd Batn., is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and has been appointed to the 27th Madras N.I., on probation.

25th King's Own Borderers. Lieut. Turner, 1st Batn., has passed the higher-standard examination in Hindostanee.

26th Scottish Rifles (Cameronians). Capt. Strong embarked for India yesterday in the hired troopship Nuddea.

27th Inniskillings. The regiment has now been in the Far East since February, 1879, over two years of which time have been spent in the Straits Settlements. A move ought to be arranged shortly. Capt. Thackeray has arrived home, and relieved Capt. Bayly, at the depôt.

29th Worcestershire Regiment. Lieut. Aitken, a probationer, doing duty with the 19th Bombay N.I., is about to be admitted to the Bombay S.C. from Dec. 31, 1882.

31st East Surrey Regiment. The following officers left Portsmouth on the 29th ult. in H.M.S. Malabar, with head-quarters for Gibraltar, viz.:—Lieut.-Col. Bayley, Major Leatham, Capt. Butler, Lieuts. Treeby, Bowles, O'Hara, Hyde, and Grant, and Lieut. and Adjt. Napier. The left half-battalion, 14 officers and 530 men, left Aldershot on Wednesday morning, and proceeded by special train to Woolwich, where it embarked on board the P. and O. Company's steamer Ancoria, en route to Gibraltar.

36th Worcestershire Regiment. Capts. Allen and Holwell have been noted as fully qualified for promotion to the rank of major, and Lieut. Hickman to that of captain.

39th Dorsetshire Regiment arrived at Peshawur on Feb. 4 from Roorkhee and Delhi, to relieve the 2nd Batn. 22nd.

40th South Lancashire. Lieut. Darrah, a probationer for the Indian S.C., has passed the high proficiency examination in Hindostanee.

42nd Black Watch (Royal Highlanders). By latest advices from Egypt, the regiment had landed at Suakim.

44th Essex Regiment. Lieut.-Col. Macguire has been granted leave from India to England for 15 months, on private affairs. Capt. Powell is a candidate for the Pay Department.

ROYAL MARINES.

The Admiralty have notified that serjeant-majors and quartermaster-serjeants of the several divisions of Royal Marines may be considered available for employment on the staff of a battalion of Royal Marines, when formed for service.

Lieut. R. M. Byne has been ordered to proceed to Bermuda, to relieve Lieut. C. E. Hardy, period of service expired.

Capt. A. B. Liardet has been promoted (dated Feb. 11, 1884) to be major at the Plymouth Division, vice Moody, promoted, contingent upon his qualifying for that rank by Oct. 4. Lieut. and Adjt. A. E. Houghton to be Capt., vice Liardet, appointed to the Portsmouth Division.

Major and Gunnery Instructor W. P. Wright, Portsmouth Division, has been transferred to the Chatham Division, to fill the vacancy caused by the promotion of Lieut.-Col. Moody.

54th Dorsetshire Regiment. Col. Hughes has been granted leave from India to England for six months, on medical certificate.

58th Northamptonshire Regiment. Col. Bond has been appointed to serve as a colonel on the Staff in South Africa, with a view to his commanding the troops in Natal.

60th King's Royal Rifle Corps. The 3rd Batn. landed at Suakim on Thursday. Qrmr. J. Wilkins, 3rd Batn., who was killed at the battle of El Teb, received his commission on April 19, 1882, having previously served in the Zulu War of 1879, and been present in the engagement of Ginghilovo and at the relief of Ekowe (medal with clasp). He also served in the Boer War of 1881, and was present in the engagements of Laing's Nek and the Ingogo River (mentioned in despatches, and medal for distinguished conduct). He was with his late regiment throughout the Egyptian campaign, being present at the engagements of Kassassin and Tel-el-Kebir (medal with clasp and Khedive's star).

65th York and Lancaster Regiment landed at Suakim on Thursday.

67th Hampshire Regiment. Capt. Garfitt embarked for India yesterday in the hired troopship Nuddea.

75th Gordon Highlanders. The regiment landed at Suakim on Thursday.

77th Middlesex Regiment. Capt. Bellingham, Lieuts. Le Bailly, Norie, and Burn, and 222 men embark for India to-day in the hired troopship Nuddea.

82nd South Lancashire Regiment. The regiment is under orders of readiness to proceed from Devonport to Aldershot, from which station it was moved to Devonport three years ago.

88th Connaught Rangers. Lieut. Haldane, a probationer for the Indian S.C., attached to the 30th Bengal N.I., is about to be admitted to the Bengal S.C., from Oct. 19, 1882.

89th Royal Irish Fusiliers. The following combatant officers arrived in Egypt with the regiment in H.M.S. Jumna from India:—Lieut.-Col. Robinson, Majors Harvest and Caddell; Capts. Smith, Gordon, Reeves, and Munn; Lieuts. Moore, Campbell, Hill, Hext, Nurse, Brinckman, Angell, Williams, Plomer, and Davison. The regiment landed at Suakim on Thursday.

95th Sherwood Foresters (Derbyshire Regiment). Major Millar and Lieut. Impey proceed to India in H.M.S. Euphrates.

99th Wiltshire Regiment. Lieut. Whistler, a probationer, wing-officer of the 3rd Bengal N.I., is about to be admitted to the Bengal S.C., from Dec. 18, 1880.

100th Leinster Regiment (Royal Canadians). Major Prior, Capt. Seaton, and Lieuts. Tighe, Tribe, and Davidson proceed to India in H.M.S. Euphrates.

102nd Royal Dublin Fusiliers. Capt. A. Q. Palmer died at 35 Dorset Square on the 29th ult., aged 32 years. He joined the Army, April 24, 1872, and became capt., May 24, 1879.

104th Royal Munster Fusiliers. Major J. J. Hockley, formerly of the regiment, afterwards adjt. of the 4th Devon Rifle Volunteers, died suddenly at Old Blundell's, Tiverton, Devon, on the 2nd inst., aged 59 years.

Rifle Brigade. Capt. Hammond and Lieut. Ferguson, 4th Batn., and Lieuts. Drummond and M'Kenzie, 1st Batn., proceed to India in H.M.S. Euphrates. Lieut. Morrison, 3rd Batn., takes up the appointment of acting Adjt. of the Rifle Depôt at Winchester.

Pay Department. The Times says:—"In consequence of the number of vacancies in the Army Pay Department, it is understood that the War Office authorities are about to admit combatant officers of seven years' service and upwards as pymrs., with the option of reverting to their regimental positions within a certain number of years. Col. Swinburne, Chief Paymaster of the Home District and the senior officer of the Department, has been awarded a good-service pension of £50 a year. Several changes among the chief pymrs. are about to take place. As at present arranged, it is probable that Col. Swinburne will go from the Home District to Egypt, in the room of Col. Olivey, and Col. Macdonnell from York to Gibraltar. Major O'Dowd, late of the 4th Hussars, is named for the 31st Regtl. District, at Kingston-on-Thames, and Major Coote, from the 8th Hussars, to the 88th Regtl. District, at Galway."

Quartermaster E. Wilkinson, A.H.C., arrived at Aldershot, and has been posted to the Cambridge Hospital for duty.

Army & Navy Gazette.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 8, 1884.

MAJOR-GENERAL Frederick Marshall, whose severe accident in the hunting-field was mentioned in this paper recently, is, we hear, making a rapid recovery, but his face will bear for a long time to come the scars of the wounds received from the horse's shoes, as the animal kicked the General in its efforts to get up. In the paragraph referred to, General Marshall was described, by a slip of the pen, as of the "1st Life Guards." There are few Cavalry officers of field rank who do not fully appreciate the reasons why General Marshall's friends associate his name with the "2nd Life Guards," which he saved from something like dissolution, and raised to a high pitch of excellence. It is no injustice to officers like Keith Fraser, Bateson, and others, who made the Household Cavalry of such temper and tone, that "the born leader" of horse, Baker Russell, had no words of praise too strong for the efficiency in Egypt of the Compound Householders, to say that the first and foremost of the Commanding Officers who carried out their regeneration was F. Marshall, aided as he certainly was by some few good officers, and that by the work he did and the example he set in the resuscitation of the 2nd Life Guards, a marked improvement was effected in the tone. But for the efficiency, tested by their appearance in the autumn manœuvres and by the reports of inspecting officers, the remonstrances and energetic representations of Colonel Keith Fraser, to which the employment of the Householders in Egypt was mainly, if not entirely due, would have been disregarded, and the Life Guards and Blues would have been left to live on the laurels of Waterloo and the doubtful traditions of Dettingen. Few who know the facts will gainsay the assertion that the established credit of the Household Cavalry was largely due to the efforts successfully made to set the 2nd Life Guards on their legs, and to work the three regiments as a Brigade. The Red Prince and the Crown Prince of Prussia, after careful inspection on two different occasions, declared the 2nd were "the finest and most mobile regiment" they ever saw. We shall not dwell on the scant justice—on the liberal injustice—Major-General F. Marshall received in Zululand, where he was subjected to the misery of seeing his Brigade broken up, turned into transport corps and mounted infantry, and the active command in the field given to a junior officer. The recompense of the C.M.G. was held to be a fitting reward for his work, and adequate consolation for his disappointment. But surely, now that Sir F. Fitz-Wygram is about to hand over his command to Major-General Fraser, the claims of Major-General Marshall to suitable employment should not be ignored. In some two and a half years or less, he will be promoted Lieutenant-General; if he be not employed before the end of this year, General Marshall will be passed on to the military Inferno established for the punishment of those whose only sin is that they are unfortunate. Major-General Fraser has only a few months to serve, and it is understood that he will hand over Aldershot to a very capable officer—to Sir Drury Lowe, who is General Marshall's junior, and served under him in South Africa. The appointment to the Curragh would obviate the application of the non-employment rule to his case, but the command there would necessarily be vacated by Major-General Marshall on succession to the higher grade in a comparatively short time, and A. Elliot is to succeed Fraser at the Curragh, should General Marshall not accept it as a final employment. We are the first to admit the greatness of Drury Lowe's services and the weight of his claims, and we feel how inadequate has been the public recognition of the work done by Major-General C. Fraser in a time of excessive responsibility and trial. It is no depreciation of these officers' services to say that it would be a pity and a hardship if General Marshall were not to have the employment he has a right to expect, especially at the hands of the Commander-in-Chief on whose personal Staff he was so long employed, and who must be aware of his fitness for Cavalry service.

Nothing is of course decided, but it is generally believed that the victory at El Teb will be commemorated by a line on the colours and appointments of the regiments engaged.

A vacancy is created on the list of Aides-de-Camp to his Royal Highness the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, by the promotion of Colonel Bateson, half-pay, late 1st Life Guards, to the establishment of General Officers.

The rank of Serjeant-Instructor of Musketry, abolished by G.O. 51 of 1883, will be resuscitated on April 1 next.

is no unusual sight, at our largest military station, at the present time, to see guards of less than six rank and file composed of men of different corps—helmeted privates commanded by a bonneted and bare-legged serjeant, or Scots Fusiliers commanded by a rifleman. It is said to be impossible, to avoid these incongruities in carrying out fairly the guard duties of a large station.

Colonel F. D. Walters, half-pay, late 82nd Regiment, has been appointed Assistant-Adjutant and Quartermaster-General for Recruiting at Liverpool, from April 1.

The appointment of Adjutant of the Royal Military College is vacant, by the death of Captain J. Davies, which occurred on the 3rd instant.

Among the announcements in Tuesday's Gazette is the following:—"The Essex Regiment—Major E. C. P. Pigott to be Lieutenant-Colonel, vice A. Greenland, deceased." Major Pigott is thus promoted from the 1st Battalion (the old 44th) to the 2nd Battalion (the old 56th). He obtained his majority on July 1, 1881, on the introduction of the territorial system.

Major-General R. Gipps, C.B., has been selected to succeed Lieutenant-General G. W. A. Higginson, C.B., in command of the Home District, on April 1.

A practical answer to the statements in circulation as to the early removal of Major-General the Duke of Connaught from the Meerut division to the chief command at Bombay is furnished by the fact that his Royal Highness has just taken Herne Dale, Mussoorie, the residence of the late Commissioner, Mr. Colvin, for the season. Mussoorie, as most of our readers must be aware, is in the Meerut district, and within easy reach of the head-quarters of the division.

The Government powder magazines at Purfleet will in future be in custody of the Metropolitan Police Force, instead of military guards. This step is to be commended, for it is easier in these days to provide policemen than soldiers, and far easier than to provide soldiers who are fit to guard a magazine.

The York and Lancaster Regiment and Royal Irish Fusiliers must be considered exceptionally fortunate, seeing that both these battalions have within the last two years enjoyed the privilege of seeing active service. The 2nd Battalion of the former (the old 84th) and the 1st Battalion of the latter (the old 87th) took part in the campaign in Egypt, whilst the 1st Battalion of the York and Lancaster (the old 65th) and the 2nd Battalion of the Fusiliers (the old 89th) participated in the glories of El Teb.

Colonel F. Chenevix Trench, Military Attaché at St. Petersburg, who has been at home for three months on leave, has left England to rejoin his post.

A donation of £20 from the Queen has recently been received for the Victoria Soldiers' Library at the Aldershot Camp. During the Crimean War the Queen sent 2,112 volumes to the Army in the East. A great proportion of the books in the library are the identical ones which were sent out to the Crimea. and although much worn, are generally entire.

Earl Percy will, on Army Estimates, call attention to the system of examination of officers in the Army for promotion, and move a resolution.

The "Territorial" system is illustrated curiously by the names of the killed and wounded at El Teb. Imagine "York and Lancaster" men named "John Connor," "Callanan," "Hickey," and "Burke;" or a "Royal Highlander" named "Boycott"!

If the present state of our Army at home is so eminently satisfactory, why did the Secretary of State for War refuse to answer the question put to him in the House of Commons, namely, whether it was true that in one of the regiments about to embark for the Mediterranean the men were for the greater part under 21 years of age? This would have been an excellent opportunity to deal a blow against adverse criticism, but for obvious reasons it was not taken advantage of.

A desirable appointment seems just now to be going begging,—that of Military Secretary to the Governor-General of Canada.

The Times, of March 3, in its acconnt of the battle of El Teb, says:—"There has been lately so much miserable talk in the Clubs, so much distrust of the quality of the present British infantry, that we have refrained from mentioning the fact that there have been an unusual number of young soldiers lately drafted to Egypt and incorporated in the regiments. It has been stated, and perhaps with truth, that many of them had not even gone through a course of musketry instruction." The Times, when it harps on military doings, always plays upon a one-stringed instrument, and we may be sure that it would not have sounded another note unless with some special object. But what can be said for a system which necessitates the sending-out to a regiment abroad lads who have not even received their first lessons in musketry instruction? The Times, however, is not certain as to the truth of the statement. It qualifies the assertion with a "perhaps." At the conclusion of the article, the writer becomes quite pathetic. He says:—"Yet those gallant souls who have gone to rest, and those sufferers [who now lie in pain, will not have died or suffered in vain, if their conduct has taught their persistent detractors that English courage and steadiness are exactly what they have always been, in old soldiers and young, whenever they have a commander whom they can trust." Fine words, they say, butter no parsnips, and the fine-writing above quoted does not alter the fact that the Battle of El Teb was fought by old soldiers, and not by young, though it serves the purpose of the Times and those who inspire its military articles to say the reverse. The only regiment there which could have had a sprinkling even of young soldiers in its ranks was the 3rd Battalion of the Rifles, and they were judiciously posted during the engagement. The brunt of the fighting was borne by the 65th, the Marines, and the Naval Brigade. Of the regiments under General Graham, not one was up to its war strength, and not one was composed of young soldiers, as the word is now understood. The 10th Hussars went to India in 1873, and took part in the Afghan Campaign of 1878-79, and were all old soldiers. The 19th Hussars, though not so old, had the experience of one campaign, and it has been in Egypt for some time. The 42nd also took part in the Egyptian Campaign of 1882, and it was weeded of all its lads before it left England. The 65th went to India in 1871, and it is composed of all old soldiers; and it must be noted that General Graham waited for this regiment to land before he advanced. The Royal Irish Fusiliers were also on their way home from India. The 75th took part in the campaign in Egypt in 1882, and were at Malta before that. The battle of El Teb, more than any other battle of recent years, proves the value of soldiers of a certain age and length of service; and the conduct of the men there, both cavalry and infantry, is a strong proof in favour of the principles constantly advocated in these columns.

Dr. Cameron, on going into Committee of Supply, is to call attention to the cruelty, waste of money, and danger to British arms in recent campaigns, caused by the defective organisation of the Indian and British Transport and Commissariat services, and move a resolution.

Siout, or Assiout, a large town on the left bank of the Nile, to which it is believed the Sussex Regiment will be sent, is at the extremity of the railway which runs along the river from Cairo, and is a bustling, dirty, dusty place, with a large bazaar, a fanatical, one-eyed population, and a repute for disorderly outbreaks, which will not, we fear, be found either healthy or cool when the flies and the khamseen winds begin. It is surrounded by a mud wall, and is close to the Libyan range. The heat in summer is intense, but it is not as hot as Assouan, to which the English brigade of Wood's army is ordered.

The Colonel Harrington now in the Soudan with Baker Pasha was formerly a Captain in the Rifle Brigade, and Colonel Holroyd was a Captain in the 65th Foot. The "Colonel" in each case is the Egyptian rank. Colonel Candy, formerly a Captain in the 9th Lancers, has resigned his appointment.

It is all very wonderful! Fifteen hundred Remingtons were found at Dubbah a couple of days ago. "They were at once destroyed by the soldiers." A payment of a dollar apiece would have secured the carriage of these arms to the shore by the natives. When Alexandria was occupied, the astounding accumulation of war matériel in the forts was given over to destruction. Beautiful breech-loaders were rendered useless, the initial tubes being split by charges of gun-cotton; a magazine of the most expensive torpedoes was destroyed, and the energies of the Navy were taxed in flooding, exploding, and spoiling the powder, the water in the ditches of some of the works being turned into black paste by the process. There were complete batteries of beautiful Krupps found or surrendered at Cairo and elsewhere, with immense stores of artillery equipments, and there were Remingtons by tens and tens of thousands. Well, now we read that an Artillery officer has just returned to Egypt from Prussia, where he has been ordering Krupp guns, and that a steamer has sailed from England with powder and torpedoes for Alexandria! This seems a wicked, wanton waste of money.

With reference to the announcement we made some time ago as to the defences of Aden, we understand that Colonel Innes, Inspector-General of Military Works in India, is now on a visit, in his capacity as a member of the Defence Committee, in order to examine the existing fortifications.

Mr. or Colonel Long, whom the Times' correspondent calls "M. Chaille Long, the African explorer," is an American, ex-officer of the ex-Confederate Army, who was employed by the late Khedive when Stone Pasha was engaged to import a number of Americans to assist in the organisation of the Egyptian Army, which did not show to much advantage at Tel-el-Kebir. He was afterwards engaged by Gordon, when the first Soudan expedition was placed under the latter, but he was not "Chief of the Staff," for the reason that Gordon had no Staff to be Chief of, on the occasion. Colonel Long has, it seems, been amusing a Parisian audience by a lecture on "The Three Mahdis," "Arabi," "Mahmoud" (? Ahmed), and "Gordon," in which he elegantly described his former chief (now Lieutenant-Governor of the Soudan, vice the Mahdi, pro tem.), Ismail Pasha, his late employer, Arabi ex-Pasha, and Nubar Pasha as "humbugs." He is, it is said, an admirable judge of the article.

The Navy.

ADMIRALTY, February 29, 1884.

In accordance with the provisions of her Majesty's Orders in Council of February 22, 1870, and November 29, 1879, Lieutenant Graham John Bower has been placed on the Retired List, with permission to assume the rank and title of Retired Commander (February 29).

NAVAL KNIGHTS OF WINDSOR.

ADMIRALTY, March 1, 1884.

The Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty do hereby give notice to such Lieutenants of the Royal Navy, and to such Lieutenants retired with the rank of Commander, as are desirous of being recommended for the appointment of Naval Knight of Windsor, under the will of the late Samuel Travers, Esq., that they must apply at this office, either personally or by letter, on or before the 5th day of April next, when they will be informed of the nature of the certificates and testimonials which are required to show that they come within the meaning of the will, an extract from which is herewith appended:—"These gentlemen are to be superannuated or disabled Lieutenants of English men-of-war, single men, without children, inclined to lead a virtuous, studious, and devout life; to be removed if they give occasion for scandal." By the Act 30 and 31 Victoria, cap. 100, widowers are deemed single men within the meaning of the will in question.

Deputy-Inspector-General James Nicholas Dick has been promoted to the rank of Inspector-General of Hospitals and Fleets in her Majesty's Fleet (February 27).

The Rev. Barton Shepherd Tucker, B.A., has been appointed a Chaplain in her Majesty's Fleet (February 19).

Assistant-Engineer Edwin James Rattenbury has been promoted to the rank of Acting Engineer in her Majesty's Fleet (March 1).

The under-mentioned Assistant-Engineers have been promoted to the rank of Engineers in her Majesty's Fleet, viz.:—Joseph Thomas Purkis, Henry Samuel Rashbrook, Edwin Cornish, Ernest Frank Ellis, George Edward Bench, James Armstrong, John Lake Michell, Edward George Pitt Moffett, William Joseph Jeans Sivyer, Richard Samuel Hornsby, Robert Samuel George Norgate, James Barber (b), John Stanmore Fussell, John George Lightfoot Baker, John Greet Stevens, Walter Brown, and Arthur John Joens (all dated March 1).

ADMIRALTY, March 4, 1884.

In accordance with the provisions of her Majesty's Order in Council of April 1, 1881, Staff Surgeon Matthew Trevan has been placed on the Retired List of his rank (February 22, 1884).

ADMIRALTY, March 5, 1884.

ROYAL MARINE LIGHT INFANTRY.—Captain Augustus Bury Liardet to be Major, vice Moody, promoted; Lieutenant Albert Evelyn Houghton to be Captain, vice Liardet (both dated February 11, 1884).

ADMIRALTY, March 6, 1884.

In accordance with the provisions of her Majesty's Order in Council of July 21, 1876, Commander Coryndon Peters Boger, having attained fifteen years' seniority as Commander on the 2nd inst., has been authorised to assume the rank and title of Retired Captain from that date.

APPOINTMENTS.

Surgeon and Agent—Mr. Daniel J. Cullen, to Gweedore, vice Stephens.

ALBACORE, Lieut.-Com. Smythies. The full-speed trial of this vessel took place last Friday. She left Plymouth shortly after 9 a.m., and proceeded outside the Breakwater under the direction of Lieut. R. T. Yonge, senior lieutenant of the Asia, representing Capt. Edward Kelly, of the Steam Reserve. The engines were in charge of Mr. O. N. Booker, Chief Inspector of Machinery, and Mr. W. W. Chilcott, first assistant to the Chief Engineer of Devonport Dockyard. Mr. R. W. Edwards, engineer in charge of the ship, was in the engine-room during the trial, which was most satisfactory in every respect. The mean pressure of steam in the boilers was 76·7 lb., vacuum in condenser, 24·7; mean revolutions, 128·3; pressure in cylinder, high, 38·0 lb.; low, 12·1; indicated horse-power, 669·3; speed of the ship, 10·8 knots; consumption of coal per indicated horse-power, 2·9 lb. The Albacore subsequently returned to the Sound, where her compasses were adjusted by Staff Capt. A. de G. Sutton, Queen's Harbour-master. She then proceeded into harbour.

ALEXANDRA, Capt. Harry Rawson, C.B., arrived at Alexandria on March 6.

AMETHYST, Capt. Brent, senior officer on the South-east Coast of America, was at Monte Video up to Feb. 4. The Algerine was at Monte Video, and was about to proceed to the Falkland Islands. The Rifleman was at the Falkland Islands, and on relief by the Algerine, would return to Monte Video. The Wrangler was in the River Parana, proceeding to Colonia.

AUDACIOUS, Capt. Pearson, flagship of Sir William Dowell, was at Hong Kong on March 1.

BRITON, Capt. A. J. Kennedy, arrived at Trinkitat on Friday last, from Bombay, and landed a detachment of seamen and Marines to join the Naval Brigade.

COMUS, Capt. James W. East, was paid off at Sheerness Dockyard yesterday (Friday) morning, after having been in commission since Oct. 23, 1879. A very pleasant gathering took place on board the ship on Thursday afternoon, when the whole of the crew assembled on the quarter-deck to witness the presentation of the Royal Humane Society's bronze medal, and a testimonial on vellum, to John Prendergast, captain of the foretop, and Charles Chrismas, seaman gunner, in recognition of their courage and humanity in saving the life of a seaman named Alfred Cook, under very trying circumstances, whilst the ship was lying at Monte Video. The ceremony was performed by Mrs. Poland, wife of Capt. Poland, of the Royal Naval Barracks. Capt. East addressed the men from the poop, and stated that during the commission the ship had gone over 80,000 miles, and the health of the crew had been unusually healthy, not a single death having occurred on board the whole of the voyage. He was pleased to congratulate them on their general behaviour, and was proud to inform them that the Admiralty expressed themselves well pleased with the work performed by the ship during the commission. He expressed a hope that they would thoroughly enjoy themselves among their friends, after which Mrs. Poland presented the medals and gave a short address to the men. At the Sheerness police-court on Thursday afternoon a marine named Samuel Smith, belonging to the Comus, was summoned for an assault upon Mahomet Kessim, a man of colour, belonging to the same ship. Defendant pleaded guilty, and stated that about three months ago the complainant told him at the breakfast table that he would get his four good-conduct badges off before the Comus reached England. When he met complainant on Wednesday afternoon, the affair again came into his mind, and he gave him a good shaking. Complainant stated that defendant beat him on the head, back, and shoulders, and threatened to murder him. The defendant was paid to commit the assault by another man. Complainant was a steward on the Comus, and his assistant was jealous of him, and wanted his berth. Defendant had taken the part of the under-steward, and had frequently annoyed him during the voyage. Defendant was fined £2, and 6s. 6d. costs, which was paid.

CYGNET, Lieut. and Com. Jauncey, was at Port Said on March 1.

EUPHRATES, Capt. Garforth, left Portsmouth on Tuesday, and arrived at Queenstown on Thursday, leaving the following day, after embarking drafts at both places for Bombay. Mr. Eckford, chief engineer of this ship, was, much to the regret of all on board, sent to Haslar on the day of sailing, and his place is temporarily filled by the chief engineer of the Emerald. When the Euphrates grounded at Tarifa a quantity of sand found its way through the valves in the ship's bottom, and endangered the machinery. Mr. Eckford, with a zeal which was most creditable to him, worked continuously in freeing the different parts, and his example to the engine-room staff was an incentive to additional exertion at a very critical period.

HELICON, Lieut. and Com. Winslow, flying the flag of Vice-Admiral Lord John Hay, was with the Invincible and Monarch at Alexandria on Feb. 25, when the Temeraire and Cygnet were at Port Said. The Alexandra was at Famagusta; mails to Alexandria. The Inflexible, Superb, Iris, Falcon, and Cockatrice were in dockyard hands at Malta. The Woodlark was at Malta, preparing to pay off. The Cruiser was at Corfu; mails to Malta. The Bittern was at Constantinople. The Condor is on passage to Alexandria.

JUMNA, Capt. Singleton, left Trinkitat on March 6 with wounded to be landed at Suez, and was to return.

MALABAR, Capt. Harris, arrived at Gibraltar on Feb. 5.

MINOTAUR, Capt. Fellowes, flagship of Vice-Admiral H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, with the remaining ships of the Channel Squadron in company, arrived at Suda Bay on March 5.

MYRMIDON, Com. A. Carpenter, which arrived at Gibraltar on Thursday last, was to leave for Malta on Saturday.

NELSON, Comdre. Erskine, A.D.C., was at Hobart up to Jan. 22, and would leave for Sydney about the middle of March. The Diamond, Miranda, Dart, and Raven were at Hobart on Jan. 22. The Espiègle was at Dunedin on Jan. 16, and would proceed to Lyttleton on Jan. 24. The Lark was at Auckland on Jan. 5.

OPAL, Capt. Brooke, was at Simon's Bay on Feb. 13.

RAMBLER, Com. the Hon. Algernon Littleton, will be paid off on March 15 at Sheerness.

SERAPIS, Capt. Douglas, arrived at Port Said on March 5.

"F. B. R. T." writes:—"Will you kindly afford me space in your valuable paper for the following extraordinary fact? I was in Brussels a few weeks ago, and visited the new cavalry barracks of the 1st Regiment of Guides. The arm the men carry in their holsters is an obsolete muzzle-loading pistol, date, 1811. I have just received one of these funny old things. It is to be hoped the Belgian War Office will soon substitute a modern weapon for this pistolet horrible."

THE PACIFIC LABOUR TRAFFIC.

A Parliamentary paper has been issued, giving the Report of the Royal Commission appointed to inquire into the working of the Western Pacific Orders in Council, which govern the relations between British colonists and traders with the natives of the Western Pacific Islands. The Royal Commissioners recommend that the Orders in Council should be carefully revised, with a view to their simplification, and the extension of the powers conferred on the High Commissioner. Also that the High Commissionership should be separated, if possible, from the Government of Fiji, and should for the present have his head-quarters in the island of New Guinea. That the islands to the west of Fiji should be divided into five districts in each of which a resident Deputy-Commissioner should be stationed. That the Line Islands, Gilbert, Ellice, and Marshall Groups, and also the Caroline Islands, should for the present be visited annually, or when occasion arises, by a ship-of-war, the commanding officer of which should receive a temporary commission as Deputy-Commissioner for the purpose. That a steam yacht of considerable tonnage should be placed at the service of the High Commissioner, and that this vessel should be put by him as he may think desirable at the disposal of each Deputy-Commissioner in turn, so as to allow an inspection of each district to be made annually. That each Deputy-Commissioner should possess a small sailing boat of from five to 25 tons burden, in proportion to the size and nature of the district; "and we desire in the strongest manner," say the Commissioners, "to represent to her Majesty's Government that, without the command of such means of locomotion, it is literally impossible for a Deputy-Commissioner to discharge his functions, and that our other recommendations, even if carried out, would become nugatory and unavailing." That provision should be made to enable each Deputy-Commissioner to be absent from his post for four clear months every alternate year. That the Orders in Council should be so modified as to admit of power being given to Naval officers to bring offenders before the High Commission Court, and to arbitrate in civil cases, as provided by the rules issued by the Court on March 3, 1881, and May 5, 1881, but which were decided to be ultra vires.

As regards the labour trade, the Commissioners recommend and consider it absolutely essential to the continued sufferance of the trade, that its regulation should be placed entirely under Imperial authority. To effect this we advise—(1), the appointment of a greatly superior class of labour agents, to be nominated and paid by the Imperial authorities, conjointly with the owners of the labour vessels as before suggested; (2), that every Colonial vessel starting on a labour cruise should be compelled, in the first instance, to report to the Deputy-Commissioner of the district within which he proposes to recruit, and to receive from him a recruiting agent and a licence, stating at what islands and for what number of men permission to recruit is given; (3), that when recruiting is completed, the vessel should return to the Deputy Commissioner, discharge the labour agent, and report proceedings during the cruise; and that after having discharged the labour agent, the vessel shall be bound under heavy penalties to proceed direct to her destination; (4), that when labour is returned, similar process should be gone through. That the recruiting of women should be limited strictly to wives or immediate relations of men recruited, and conveyed in the same vessel and at the same time as themselves. That the marine survey of the islands should be prosecuted with diligence, with a view to the better knowledge of the localities.

The concluding paragraph of this Report is important. The Commissioners say:—"We cannot conclude this Report without again expressing our firm conviction that any considerable delay in placing upon a more satisfactory footing the control over British subjects in the Western Pacific, and the supervision of their relations and intercourse with the native races, will be perilous, and, in all probability, attended with calamitous results. The time has arrived at which to do nothing is, in fact, to take most momentous and most responsible action. We do not suppose that our recommendations, if adopted, will effect all that we desire, nor are we unaware that they may be easily susceptible of modification and improvement; but we trust that in no case will they be laid aside unconsidered, and that, if not adopted, their non-adoption will be due to the inauguration by her Majesty's Government of a policy and measures calculated more effectually to attain the desired end, and not to any hesitation to recognise the importance of the subject of which they treat."

Sir Arthur Gordon, Rear-Admiral Sir Anthony H. Hoskins, and Rear-Admiral J. C. Wilson formed the Commission.

In June last, we mentioned that a subscription had been started amongst the brother-officers of the late Mr. George Reay-Mackey, assistant-paymaster Royal Navy, who died suddenly, whilst employed as manager of the Crystal Palace, Sydenham, in which office he had not time to reap the advantages of his income, and, therefore, left his widow and children without any support and in embarrassed circumstances. The subscription list, now closed, amounts to £250 and a few shillings. For this substantial help, Mrs. Reay-Mackey wishes, through our columns, to offer the expression of her heartfelt gratitude to those officers and friends who have so liberally subscribed towards the support of her children and self. She values their contributions the more, as being a mark of their respect and regard for her lamented husband.

EPPS'S COCOA.—GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.—"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.—Made simply with boiling water or milk. Sold only in packets, labelled—"JAMES EPPS and Co., Homœopathic Chemists, London."—Also makers of Epps's Chocolate Essence.

NEW SYSTEM FOR INFANTRY ATTACK.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—You were good enough to publish an account of the trial in Australia of my system of formation for attack some weeks ago. In answer to numerous enquiries as to whether it can be tried in this country, I am glad to say that the Commander-in-Chief has sanctioned its being practised by my corps, and reported on by the General commanding here, as will be seen by the accompanying copy letter.—I am, &c. J. H. A. MACDONALD,

Lieut.-Col. Commandant,

SIR,—With reference to your letter of the 6th inst., I am directed by the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief to acquaint you that the General officer commanding the North British District has been requested to give you facilities for trying your system for infantry attack this season, and to report on the same.—I have the honour to be, Sir, your obedient servant,

(Signed), REDVERS BULLER, A.A.G.

ARMY SCHOOLMASTERS.

"Syntax" writes:—"With reference to your leader upon Army Schools and Schoolmasters, I hope that a few remarks by one of that unfortunate class—schoolmasters without warrant rank—may not be out of place. I entered Chelsea as a serjeant. When enlisted as a schoolmaster, I had a total of eight years' service, but 18 months—the time spent in Chelsea—is entirely lost, I not being allowed to count it towards completion of the first period or pension on discharge. If I ask why do I forfeit this service, I would be told 'it was one of the articles in the agreement I signed before going to Chelsea.' Quite so. But it was also in the same agreement that if I was successful in passing my examinations, and appointed schoolmaster, 'that I should rank with but immediately after the serjeant-major;' and the Government having broken the agreement by placing the bandmaster between us, why can I not dispute the agreement, and claim my forfeited service? I have not forfeited my position by misconduct, then why am I punished? By changing our relative positions Government has not only punished, but acted with great injustice towards me. Government ought in justice to restore me to my position, or allow me to count my previous service towards first period of service."

GENERAL BOXER AND PELLET POWDER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—In the account of a lecture on "Gunpowder" delivered at the United Service Institution on Friday last which appeared in the Times of the 2nd inst., I notice that the Superintendent of the Royal Gunpowder Factories claims to be the designer of the "cylindrical" powder lately introduced into the service for heavy breech-loading guns. I think I am correct in stating that this form of gunpowder is by no means a novelty, but is the same in all essential particulars as the "pellet" powder I supplied to the original committee on gunpowder, for experimental investigation, more than 20 years ago. This pellet powder was adopted for rifle ordnance in 1866, but was afterwards superseded, on the recommendation of the Committee on Explosives, by a gunpowder (termed "pebble"), which, owing to the mode of its manufacture, was defective as regards uniformity, in density, and in the size and form of grains. The lecturer appears to have omitted to mention a fact which would probably have been an interesting one to a professional audience, particularly as the public of late years have been taught that we mostly owe to foreigners our improvements in gunpowder and other artillery matériel. The fact I allude to is, that it was a British artillery officer who, in 1858, was the first to bring to official notice the great importance of modifying the explosive action of gunpowder for rifle ordnance and for guns of large calibre, and to explain the scientific reason why the rapidity of combustion should be reduced as the calibre of the gun was increased; and, moreover, to point out the method (which is now universally adopted) by which the desired result could be best attained.—I am, &c., E. M. BOXER,

Major-General, late R.A.

Upton, near Ryde, Isle of Wight, March 5.

SERVICE PROMOTIONS, R.N.

"J. M." says:—"There will, of course, be some special promotions for the late affairs in Egypt. It is to be hoped that these will not be merely confined to the officers of the flagship and personal friends of the Admiral, as was the case in the Ashantee war, and that the seniority of those engaged, both afloat and ashore, will be properly recognised. These desultory affairs, now constantly happening, spoil entirely the chances of the senior lieutenants and commanders, and point to the absolute necessity of some system of brevet promotions, by which an officer may be rewarded without injuring the prospects of senior, and frequently better men."

Dr. Henry Veale, Deputy-Surgeon-General, will give a lecture on Organisation and Management of Field Hospitals at the Parkes Museum on Thursday, March 13, at 5 p.m.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS, Etc.

E. S. P.—The extra inch in the Conqueror's armour is a vast increase in the resisting power of her plates, as you may satisfy yourself by calculation. The comparative power of the armaments can scarcely be established, but the Richuelo's draught and speed score heavily in her favour.

M. I. C. E.—Altogether fanciful and unpractical.

A SUBSCRIBER.—Yes, the Commanding Officer very properly has the needful authority.

The Editor is requested to acknowledge the receipt of the following sums, received by Captain Sangster in aid of the fund being raised for Captain Lawless, late 97th Regiment:—General Sir W. Codrington, G.C.B., £5; A. L., £5; Colonel Holdsworth R.A., £5; Major Morrah, S.O.P., £2.

Obituary.

Capt. Francis Grant Suttie, R.N., died last week in Edinburgh. Capt. Suttie was born in Jan., 1832. He entered the Navy in 1847, and served as acting mate of the Bellerophon during the Russian War, in the Black Sea (Crimean and Turkish medals, Medjidieh 5th class, Sebastopol clasp). He retired in 1882, having attained Post rank in 1869.

THE CEDARS and MORNINGTON PARK ESTATES, near West Kensington and Addison Road (Kensington) Railway Stations, and Omnibus Routes to the City, &c.—HOUSES to be LET or SOLD. Rents from £55 to £150. Well built, of white bricks, Bath-stone dressings, admirably designed, with all modern improvements, bath-rooms, electric bells, venetian blinds, &c. These well-known and fashionable Estates afford advantages which cannot be surpassed in any of the suburbs. Situate within easy access of the West End either by road or rail, and within the four-mile radius of Charing Cross. For Military and Naval officers and persons of moderate incomes who require good family residences, they are unequalled. Soil is a fine gravel. St. Paul's School (from St. Paul's Churchyard), now being erected on the Estate, will, when completed, afford exceptional advantages to the sons of residents in the neighbourhood. Lawn-tennis and ornamental gardens on the Estate for the use of residents.—Particulars post free on application to GIBBS and FLEW (Limited), Cedars Estate Office, West Kensington Station, W.

THE MIDLAND COUNTIES WATCH COMPANY, OF VYSE STREET, BIRMINGHAM.

Let every reader of this send for our beautiful, new, Illustrated Catalogue, containing 1,000 unsolicited Testimonials (from all parts of the world), and over 500 fine, copper-plate Engravings of Watches, Jewellery, and Electro-plate, sent gratis and post-free on application to any part of the World.

GENTLEMEN'S FINE SILVER, flat crystal glass, 25s.
LADIES' FINE SILVER, flat crystal glass, 25s.
YOUTH'S FINE SILVER, flat crystal glass, 25s.
LADIES' GOLD LEVERS, in exquisitely chased cases, 70s.
GENTLEMEN'S GOLD LEVERS, engine-turned cases, 80s.

The Rev. Robert Cass, Settle, Yorkshire, writes, February 19, 1880:—"The Lady's Gold Lever Watch received from you for 70s, in size, workmanship, and beautiful appearance, resembles a watch usually sold at £10. It gives entire satisfaction."

From Mr. J. J. Harris, Schoolmaster, 2-18 The Royal Irish Regiment, Aldershot, September 22, 1880:—"I am very much pleased with everything I have had from your Company. The watch (25s) has proved to be an excellent one, and is a marvel of cheapness. It is fully equal to, or indeed superior to, many I have seen purchased by Regimental Clubs for treble the money."

Mr. A. PERCY, VYSE STREET, BIRMINGHAM.

On receipt of which, any watch will be registered post free to any part of the United Kingdom, and for 2s 6d per watch extra to any part of the postal world.

Our Indian Agents are Messrs. King, King, and Co., Bombay, and Messrs. King, Hamilton, and Co., Calcutta, through whom remittances and orders may be sent, and catalogues obtained.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS and OINTMENT.—During excessive variations of temperature, every one is more or less liable to internal congestions and inflammations. Throat, liver, chest, bowels, kidneys, and skin all suffer in some degree, and may be relieved by rubbing in this Ointment, aided by proper doses of the Pills, for administering which full directions accompany each box; in truth, any one who thoroughly masters Holloway's "instructions" will, in remedying disease, exchange the labour of an hour for the profit of a lifetime. All bronchial, pulmonary, and throat disorders require that the Ointment should be thoroughly well rubbed upon the skin twice a day with great regularity, considerable briskness, and much persistence.

PRUDENTIAL ASSURANCE COMPANY,

LIMITED.

HOLBORN BARS, LONDON.

THIRTY-FIFTH ANNUAL REPORT,

For the Year ending December 31, 1883.

THE DIRECTORS have much pleasure in presenting their Report and Accounts for the year 1883.

The reduction in the rate of expenditure in both Branches has been continued during the year.

The Funds of the Company have been increased during the year by the sum of £759,818; in the Ordinary Branch £126,255, and in the Industrial Branch £633,563, raising the total assets of the Company to £3,807,217.

It will be seen that the Investments of the year have been confined to the usual first-class securities.

ORDINARY BRANCH.

The new business of this Branch for the year consists of 9,504 Policies, assuring the sum of £1,166,392, and producing a New Annual Premium Income of £16,959.

The claims of the year amount to £86,075, representing 526 Deaths and 21 Endowment Assurances matured.

The Annual Premium Income at the end of the year is £200,790, being an increase of £35,811 over the year 1882. The increase for 1882 was £22,216, making a total increase in the Premium Income for the first two years of the Quinquennium of £58,057.

The rate of expenditure of the Branch slightly exceeds Ten per Cent. on the Premium Income.

INDUSTRIAL BRANCH.

The Premiums actually received during the year in this Branch are £2,504,307 14s 2d, as compared with the sum of £2,126,022 3s 11d received during 1882, being an increase of Premium Receipts of £378,285 10s 3d. The increase for 1882 was £276,527 5s 6d, making a total increase in the Premium Receipts for the first two years of the Quinquennium of £654,812 15s 9d.

The claims of the year amount to £912,333.

The total expenses of this Branch, as compared with those of the previous year, show a reduction in the rate of expenditure of 2½ per cent. on the Premium Income.

The Directors have thought it advisable to make a further addition to their number, and they have invited Dr. Robert Barnes, of Harley Street, one of the original Shareholders of the Company, to a seat at the Board. Dr. Barnes's election will be submitted to the meeting for confirmation.

The vacancy in the Auditorship has been filled by the appointment of Mr. Thomas Wharrie, of Glasgow, a duly qualified Shareholder.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE.

COUGHS,
COLDS,
ASTHMA,
BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.
Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) discovered a remedy to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false.

Vice-Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was undoubtedly the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.—See the Times, July 13th, 1864.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the true Palliative in

IS THE GREAT SPECIFIC for CHOLERA, DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY.

The General Board of Health, London, report that it acts as a charm, one dose generally sufficient.

Dr. Gibbon, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states:—"Two doses completely cured me of Diarrhœa."

From SYMES and CO., Simla:
Dear Sir,—We congratulate you upon the wide-spread reputation this justly esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of Dr. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescriber and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES and Co., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, his Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a Liquid Medicine which assuages Pain of every kind, affords a calm, refreshing sleep without Headache, and invigorates the Nervous System when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.
The immense sale of this remedy has given rise to many unscrupulous imitations. Of all Chemists, 1s 1½d, 2s 9d, and 4s 6d.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

From the ATHENÆUM.

"For more than 30 years he served in every part of the world, sharing in some of the greatest of geographical enterprises, and now at fourscore and four he has set himself to tell the world of the sights he saw......Mr. M'Cormick is unquestionably a gallant officer, a skilful artist, and a naturalist whose services to science have never been adequately acknowledged....Nowhere are there more truthful pictures of Polar scenery, and in no work descriptive of these regions is there a greater profusion of maps and plates, not one of which we should care to lose......We welcome the story of an actual sharer in those expeditions, more especially in that of the Erebus and Terror to the Antarctic Seas, for the same ground has never since been gone over, and the account of these memorable and partially successful attempts to break through the extensive Antarctic ice barrier occupies the greater part of the first volume......Hermit Island is, in like manner, sketched with much ability; and indeed, wherever Mr. M'Cormick landed, he seems to have had his eyes open for any scientific facts worthy of note"

From the DAILY TELEGRAPH.

"The terrible fascination of the Polar Seas has tested the manhood of many nations; and our mingled race in 'this little England' has no cause to feel ashamed of the part it has played in the great historic drama......The two volumes from his hand (Mr. M'Cormick's) are amongst the most comprehensive accounts of scientific travel and personal observations ever penned."

From the ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.

"These well-written and well-illustrated volumes are appropriately inscribed to the Duke of Edinburgh and to the officers of the Royal Navy. They are the work of a man who is an honour to the profession to which he belongs......The praise thus given to a portion of Mr. M'Cormick's book may be fairly extended to the whole of it......Moreover, there is always a charm in first-hand descriptions, which is lacking in even the most skilful compilations, and with this charm Mr. M'Cormick's narratives abound.

From LIFE.

"The fascinating narrative is written with a free and able pen, and contains much startling and exceedingly interesting matter, when the less frequented spots are reached."

THE BATTLE OF EL TEB.

THE news of the success of the Expedition under Major-General Sir G. Graham's command, despatched from Trinkitat for the relief of the garrison of Tokar and other objects, reached London on Saturday last. The force was made up as follows:—

Cavalry.—Col. Stewart.—10th Hussars, 328 men; 19th Hussars, 410 men; Mounted Infantry, 126 men.

Artillery.—Major Prendergast.—Royal Artillery, 126 men; six 7-pounder guns, 10 brass mountain guns, and four Krupp 9-centimètre guns.

Naval Brigade.—Com. Rolfe, of the Euryalus, and Flag-Lieut. Graham.—Blue-jackets, 62 men; two 9-pounder guns, three Gatlings, three Gardners.

Infantry.—1st Brigade.—3rd Batn. 60th Rifles, 610 men; 75th Highlanders, 751 men; 89th Fusiliers, 334 men. 2nd Brigade.—42nd Highlanders, 761 men; Royal Marines (Infantry and Artillery), 361 men; Royal Engineers, 100 men; details (various detachments), 200 men.

Later on, the force was joined by the 65th York and Lancaster Regt. The troops bivouacked in marching order. The Gordon Highlanders, under Col. Hammill, were in front; the Black Watch, under Col. Green, in the rear; the Royal Irish Fusiliers and the King's Royal Rifles on the right front; and the York and Lancaster on the left front. Half a battery, the Naval Brigade, two Gatlings and one Gardner, commanded by Flag-Lieut. Graham, of the Euryalus, were also on the left front, and half a battery, two Gardners, and one Gatling, under Capt. Stewart, of the Carysfort, on the right front. Com. Rolfe commanded the Naval Brigade, with Lieut. Montresor as adjutant. The Royal Artillery, Major Prendergast—eight guns—were in rear of the flanks. The cavalry were in rear, in three lines, the first commanded by Lieut.-Col. Wood, 10th Hussars; the second, by Lieut.-Col. Barrow, 19th Hussars; and the third, by Lieut.-Col. Webster, 19th Hussars. The mounted infantry, under Lieut. Humphrey, 69th Foot, were in front.

Having set out from the landing-place as soon as all was ready for a start, Major Harvey went out the same evening with a flag of truce and a letter, which was stuck in a stick in the sand, warning the enemy of the consequences of attacking us. Arriving at Fort Baker at sundown on February 28, the expedition bivouacked for the night, due precautions being taken to guard against a surprise.

During the night the enemy, at intervals, fired on the bivouac, including two rockets. Just before daybreak, half an hour's heavy rain refreshed the horses, for which there was no water, but it made the ground heavy. On Friday morning reveille sounded at dawn. The order to march sounded at 8 o'clock. The formation was a square, with four companies in reserve on each flank. The cavalry were écheloned on the left rear, the mounted infantry moving in advance. The march over difficult ground was necessarily slow, and on approaching El Teb it became evident that the enemy was determined to make a stand, and had prepared entrenchments. Gen. Graham ordered the whole square to change direction half right, the mounted infantry and cavalry skirmishers meanwhile continuing the advance as before, until the officers were enabled to see into the rear of the works. This inspection showed that there were but few men at the guns, and no men could be seen in the trenches. Gen. Graham then brought up the right shoulder of the square, and moved past the flank of the works at a distance of 1,200 yards. While executing this movement, 2,000 men who had been concealed in rifle-pits suddenly sprang up, and the Krupp guns in the works at the same time opened fire on our flank. Our troops, however, remained thoroughly cool, not returning a shot, but marching steadily forward until a point was reached which was 800 yards in rear of the works. While this movement was being completed the enemy had run forward, and having passed to a position facing what had originally been the left face of the square, took cover behind some bushes, from which position they opened a tremendous fire on the square. At this moment, a bullet from a shrapnel shell, which burst close to the line, struck Baker Pasha in the cheek, inflicting a severe wound, but he refused to leave the field until an order to him to do so was given by Gen. Graham. Col. Burnaby also soon after received a shot through his left arm. Gen. Graham now ordered the square to lie down without firing, while our Gatlings and Gardner artillery opened on the enemy with excellent effect. During this Admiral Hewett rode about the square, setting a splendid example of coolness. Orders were at last given to the artillery to cease firing, and the advance was sounded. The men sprang to their feet, and with tremendous cheering rushed on at the double. Splendid courage was shown on the part of the enemy, who under a heavy fire, coolly threw themselves upon the square, using their spears with the utmost determination. The enemy, when driven out of their works, took up a position in the rear of their entrenchments, and were immediately engaged by the left face of our square. The cavalry finally charged the masses of the enemy in the open, who were flocking towards the position. These footmen, however, would not run, and the troops galloped to and fro among them, knocking them down by the sheer weight of their horses. Although there was in this work but little slaughter, these charges produced an excellent moral effect.

The Times' correspondent, describing the cavalry charge, says:—"Soon came the order to charge; this was about 12.40. On went Col. Barrow, his squadrons as regular as if on parade, but he had a dangerous enemy to meet. Neither horsemen nor footmen showed the faintest vestige of fear or indecision. The men on foot lay in shelter of the hillocks and mounds of sand, which, though small to the eye, were effective, and rising as the horses leapt over them or swerved aside, drove home their heavy spears, throwing them, where they were unable to reach their foe by hand. The spears are Zulu assegais in form, except that being weighted with a roll of iron at the extreme end of the shaft, they have a greater momentum and piercing power. Some 30 horsemen rode with full force and boldly against the whole advancing squadron, not a sign of trepidation anywhere among them. Three came safely straight through, and undismayed either by the shock they had survived or the equal peril imminent from the second line sweeping down upon them, wheeled their horses, which they were riding barebacked, with wonderful rapidity, and actually hesitated not to hunt in full pursuit the squadrons whose superior power they had so narrowly escaped. I do not think they survived to boast of their prowess, but the tussle became a tough one, and obscure in some of its details. Col. Barrow was struck by a thrown spear that pierced his arm and side, entering, it is feared, the lung. Then the first line, missing its leader, and not fully realising the position, swept straight on where its lost leader no doubt would have wheeled it to the right. Gen. Stuart, who was riding somewhat in advance of the left flank of the second line, noting at once the flaw, drove spurs into his horse, and with his Staff galloped hard to bring round the erring squadrons. It was a race between this small band, the General and Staff, and a cloud of the foe rushing from the right. The General won, and caught up his first line; but in this conflict, and under the unfaltering sweep of the 10th Hussars, as they followed, wheeling with admirable precision to the left, the most mournful casualties of the day came. Of the General's four orderlies, one was killed and two were wounded, but this was little. Major Slade, 10th Hussars, as fine a soldier and of as fine a family of soldiers as ever breathed, fell mortally wounded. His horse has since been found hamstrung to the bone, its gallant rider close beside it pierced with seven spear wounds. Lieut. Probyn, 9th Bengal Cavalry, attached to the 10th, is missing, and must, there is every fear, be counted dead. Here, too, perished Lieut. Freeman, 19th Hussars. The enemy were now in full flight to the left, and since a pursuit of them would have brought the pursuers across an infantry file, the men of the leading line were dismounted, to use their carbines. Just then Col. Webster, who had been charging the enemy independently at a distance, reappeared. From 12 o'clock to 2 the cavalry had been riding backwards and forwards through the enemy, at the gallop for the greater part of the time."

The day was now won, and our troops took possession of El Teb. The number of the enemy engaged is estimated at from 9,000 to 12,000. Admiral Hewett, Baker Pasha, and Col. Burnaby rode back to Trinkitat later in the day, and left that place for Suakim at noon on Saturday.

The following General Order was read on the 1st inst.:—"The object of the expedition is achieved. Tokar has been relieved, and the rebels in arms have been defeated, and so thoroughly humbled that the force before Tokar may safely be reduced. Before the force is broken up the General Officer Commanding desires to record his sense of the gallantry and discipline displayed by all arms of the force which he has had the honour to lead. The Cavalry showed the dash which has always characterised that arm. They have also rendered invaluable service in reconnaissance and scouting duties. The action of the Infantry was generally characterised by steadiness and firmness in presence of the enemy. The first operation—that of moving to the flank under fire—was very trying to the steadiness of young soldiers, as was also the great daring of the foe in charging to close quarters in face of an overwhelming fire. The result of the action of Feb. 28 (29?) has shown the British soldier that as long as he is steady, keeps his formation, and is cool in firing, the desperate rushes of brave blacks only insure their destruction. The Arab has now felt the terrible fire of British infantry, a lesson not easily forgotten. The General Officer Commanding thanks the Naval Brigade for their cheerful endurance during the severe work of dragging the guns over difficult country when suffering from heat and scarcity of water, and for their ready gallantry and steadiness under fire while serving the guns. The Naval Brigade contributed materially to the success of the action, and the General Officer Commanding cannot too highly express his thanks for their services. The guns of the Royal Artillery were also admirably served, and, in conjunction with the Naval Brigade, succeeding in silencing the enemy's guns, and preparing the way for the infantry advance. The staff and departmental officers worked loyally, without sparing themselves, and the supplies of the army were always furnished, in spite of difficulties in the communications." This is a very well deserved order, but it does not appear as if the "brave blacks" are quite so much cowed by the fire and loss as they ought to be. Perhaps the fear will spread in time.

The Times' correspondent at Trinkitat telegraphs on March 2:—"Major-Gen. Buller has just arrived here from Tokar, and also the 10th Hussars and some regiments of infantry—in all, nearly 1,000 men, while more are on the way. Major-Gen. Graham read a farewell despatch to the troops to-day. He thanked and congratulated them all, but made special mention of the gallantry of Trooper Hayes, of the 10th Hussars. All the troops will have arrived here to-morrow. The Black Watch (Royal Highlanders) have buried at El Teb nearly 2,500 bodies of the rebels, and are still working. The rebel prisoners, some 20 in number, mostly wounded, are greatly astonished at the treatment which they have received. They say that the rebels will never face the 'White Devils' again. The refugees from Tokar are embarking rapidly, and a large number of them have already started."

A correspondent at Suakim, telegraphs on March 4:—"Major Slade, Lieut. Freeman, Lieut. Probyn, and seven troopers were killed within 30 yards of one another. Major Slade, leading his squadron, received a spear-thrust, and his horse was then hamstrung. Major Slade fell, and was speared again on the ground. Apparently, however, he made a great fight, for several rebels were found lying dead round him."

The Queen sent the following message to Gen. Stephenson, on Saturday:—"Pray convey my congratulations and deep sense of his services and of those under him to Sir Gerald Graham, as well as my sorrow for the loss of the distinguished officers and men, and my anxiety for the wounded."

The following are some of the official telegrams:—"From Major-Gen. Sir G. Graham, Teb, to the Secretary of State for War. Despatched Suakim, March 1, 4.30 p.m., received 4.20 p.m.—No reply received to message sent to rebel chiefs. Advanced this morning from Fort Baker with entire available force of 3,000 infantry, 750 mounted troops, and 115 of the Naval Brigade, 6 machine guns, and 8 Royal Artillery 7-pounders. Found rebels entrenched at Teb with Krupp guns. Moved to right, so as to turn their entrenchments, which were stormed and carried in rear, two successive positions being taken. Captured four Krupp guns, two brass howitzers, and a Gatling, besides a quantity of arms and ammunition. Loss of rebels very heavy, nearly 900 bodies being already counted in positions captured, irrespective of cavalry operations. Action lasted three hours, enemy showing desperate resolution and tenacity. Their force is reported as about 10,000. Our loss amounted to 28 killed, 2 missing, and 142 wounded. The infantry moved at first in a hollow square, with transport animals carrying reserve ammunition, gun ammunition, and hospital equipment only inside, but found some difficulty in attacking in that formation, which was accordingly altered. Our loss would have been far heavier had the entrenchments been attacked in front. The cavalry were very ably handled, and made some dashing charges, but I regret their heavy loss. Tents and every necessary appliance for the wounded have been supplied from base. I leave this post entrenched to-morrow, and push on to Tokar. Moderate water supply here. Have sent through prisoners a summons to the chief of Tokar to make submission to-morrow, and have repeated the terms offered yesterday.

"Officers Killed—Lieut. Freeman, 19th Hussars; Major Slade, 10th Hussars; Lieut. Probyn, 9th Bengal Cavalry; and Qrmr. Wilkins, 3rd Batn. King's Royal Rifles.

"Officers Wounded.—Gen. Baker Pasha, severely; Lieut.-Col. Burnaby, severely; Lieut.-Col. Barrow, 19th Hussars, dangerously; Lieut. Royds, R.N., dangerously; Brevet Major Brabazon, 10th Hussars, slightly; Capt. Kellie, R.A., slightly; Vet.-Surg. Beech, slightly; Qrmr. Watkins, Irish Fusiliers, slightly; Surg. Turner, slightly; Major Dalgety, York and Lancaster Regt., slightly; Capt. Littledale, York and Lancaster Regt., severely; Lieuts. Gordon (? Wolrige Gordon) and Macleod, Royal Highlanders, slightly; Capt. Green, R.E., and Capt. Wauchope, Royal Highlanders, Staff, slightly; Capt. and Adjt. Poë and Major Allen, Royal Marines, slightly; Staff Surg. Martin, R.N., slightly; Capt. Kelly, Staff, slightly, and Capt. Wilson, Royal Navy, slightly. The garrison left at this place have orders to search Baker's battle-field, and bury European dead.

“From Sir G. Graham, Tokar, dated Suakim, 4th, 6.0 p.m., received 9.30 p.m.:—Bodies of following identified near Teb, and received proper burial: Morice Bey (Morice Bey had been for some years in the service of Egypt, and was esteemed by the European colonists of Alexandria as a man of considerable capacity and intelligence. He was the younger brother of Morice Pasha, formerly a Commander R.N., who succeeded to the charge of the maritime forces, lighthouses, &c., on the lamented death of McKillop Pasha, and was entrusted with the conveyance of Araby and the Egyptian condamnés of 1882 to Ceylon. There is a movement in Alexandria to erect a monument to his memory); Abdel Russik Bey; Dr. Leslie; Capts. Forestier, Walker, and, Rucca; Lieuts. Wilkins, Morice, Demarchi, and Smith Adjt. Major Palioka; Messrs. Donebann, Masconas, and Wells, and many Italian Police. Those of Consul Moncrieff, Major Yusef Bey, Lieuts. Bertin, Carrol, and Cavalieri not found. Further search will be ordered for them, and report sent if successful. Proceeded this morning to group of Arab villages south of Tokar; found abandoned guns and Gatlings, quantities of ammunition, and nearly 1,000 stand of Remingtons. Latter have been destroyed, and guns brought in. Rebels all retired to mountains. To-morrow, 10th Hussars, Naval Brigade, and Marines will return to Trinkitat for re-embarkation, leaving Royal Artillery, York and Lancaster, Irish Fusiliers, 19th Hussars, Mounted Infantry, and Gordon Highlanders only before Tokar, Royal Highlanders at Teb, and Rifles at Fort Baker and Trinkitat. Buller will proceed to Trinkitat and command at base. All but two wounded sent to base yesterday. All well. Remainder will follow to-day, if possible.”

“From Senior Officer at Suakim.—Dated March 1. Despatched 11 a.m., received 9.29 a.m.—Native messenger arrived with news of army from correspondent of Daily Telegraph. Pith of his report is hard day's fighting yesterday. Enemy fought courageously, but beaten on every point. Remained at Wells for night, and advance [to] Tokar to-day. Our loss is 10 killed and 40 wounded. Enemy's loss about 1,000. Am expecting official confirmation by steamer.

“From Admiral Hewett.—Suakim, March 1, 1884. 4.30 p.m.—Gen. Graham fought battle at Teb yesterday, driving enemy from entrenched position, capturing four Krupp, two howitzer guns, and one machine gun. Enemy's loss very severe; ours, four officers and 24 men killed, 142 wounded; Lieut. Royds, of Carysfort, very dangerously. Serapis left this morning for Suez, with all women and children. Everything has been arranged for conveying the wounded across the lagoon, and boats to take them on board the Orontes. Naval Brigade lost two men killed—J. Beard, of Briton, and T. Marston, of Dryad—and seven wounded. I intend returning to Trinkitat to-morrow morning.”

The following non-commissioned officers and men were killed:—

Royal Artillery.—6th Baty. 1st Brig., Scottish Division: 25,356, Gunner Angus.

“From Sir G. Graham, Tokar. Dated Suakim, 4th, 6 p.m., received 8.20 p.m.—Remains of Consul Moncrieff have been identified and received interment.”

“From Sir G. Graham, Tokar. Dated Suakim, 4th, 6 p.m., received 8.20 p.m.—March 3, 1884.—Garrison and Egyptian inhabitants of Tokar are being sent in to Trinkitat, transport being provided for by camels. Marines and Naval Brigade march to base to-day, also 10th Hussars. Shall withdraw remainder of force to-morrow to Teb, and concentrate to Trinkitat on 5th. Wounded doing well. No sick.”

“From Principal Medical Officer, Tokar Forces, dated Suakim, 4th, 5.35 p.m., received 7.50:—Wounded are on board Jumna and Orontes. Col. Barrow, 19th Hussars, spear wound of left arm and abdomen. Capt. Littledale, York and Lancaster, and all other wounded officers doing well.”

The following telegrams have also been received at the War Office:—1. From Sir G. Graham, Tokar, dated Suakim, 4th, 6 p.m., received 8.20 p.m.:—“Remains of Consul Moncrieff have been identified and received interment.” 2. From Sir G. Graham, Tokar, dated Suakim, 4th, 6 p.m., received 8.20 p.m.:—“March 3, 1884.—Garrison and Egyptian inhabitants of Tokar are being sent in to Trinkitat, transport being provided from my camels. Marines and Naval Brigade march to base to-day, also 10th Hussars. Shall withdraw remainder of force to-morrow to Teb, and concentrate at Trinkitat on 5th. Wounded doing well. No sick.” 3. From Principal Medical Officer, Tokar Forces, dated Suakim, 4th, 5.35 p.m., received 7.50 p.m.:—“Wounded are on board Jumna and Orontes. Col. Barrow, 19th Hussars, spear wound of left arm and abdomen, not out of danger. Capt. Littledale, York and Lancaster, and all other wounded officers doing well.”

The latest telegrams from what may fairly be termed now the seat of war, are as follows:—

“Suakim, March 7, Noon.—Gen. Graham is making preparations for an immediate advance upon Osman Digna's stronghold at Tamanhid. Another battle is believed to be imminent. Admiral Hewett concurs in the necessity for an offensive movement against Osman Digna. The precise composition of the expeditionary force has not been settled, but it will differ in no material feature from that composing the Tokar expedition.”

Having retired to Trinkitat to embark the bulk of the troops, the General and Admiral superintended the despatch of the people and soldiers found at Tokar, and transferred the base of operations to Suakim, to await events or orders and counter-orders from home and the good pleasure of Osman Digna. Possibly to warm him up to the scratch, the Admiral and the General prepared a stinging proclamation, in which Osman Digna was informed he was “a great scoundrel,” and that he would be treated accordingly if he attempted to fight. It is a curious document, with a good deal of local colour about it, but we fear it will not be more successful than Major Harvey's cautionary cartel in the sand before El Teb. Indeed, we are told that a chief who was coming in from the Amara tribe to-day, with 120 men and 40 camels, to Suakim, would not hear of it at all. “Mahmoud Ali, on his way here, stopped some messengers bearing Admiral Hewett's last proclamation to the tribes. He has pointed out to the British authorities that if pardon were offered before the rebels themselves asked for it, more trouble would follow.” It remains to be seen what Osman Digna will do. The latest news we have indicates a great secession from the ranks of his followers, but that the “scoundrel” remains obdurate, and puts his trust in cold steel, attributing the disaster of El Teb to the foolish weakness of the Arabs, who took to rifles and guns they could not use. It is quite obvious that if this troublesome person who will not admit he is a “rebel,” and does not acknowledge the right of England to appropriate Suakim in the name of the Khedive, and has abandoned the Soudan to which Suakim belongs, remains with a large force to molest the place when Graham goes away, the object of the expedition, which was not only the “relief” of Tokar, but the salvage of the Red-Sea ports, will not be effected, and, therefore, another expedition, not “primitive,” but fighting, will be directed to Tamanieb, which is said to be of an elastic distance from the coast, and north of the line taken by us to El Teb, and Sunday or Monday are named for the advance, and Tuesday for the possible battle, if he does not cave in.

One telegram yesterday evening announced that the tribes which had fought at El Teb, or what was left of them, had sent in a deputation to Suakim at 3 o'clock yesterday, and that apparently “fighting is at an end.” But Osman Digna only sent a contingent to the tribes at El Teb, and he is reported to have 6,000 men at one place, and another force at the foot of the hills to the north of his camp, where there are wells, so that it does not follow his men have submitted because the other tribes, whose leader has not been named, have sent in to make terms.

At Khartoum things look more hopeful, but we cannot say if the caravan, the arrival of which from Dongola is hailed by the Times' correspondent with such unction as a proof of Gordon's success, may not have been what a Dongola caravan often was, laden with articles for the slave market, and whether or not it is a sign of another revival of that erewhile persecuted emporium. Slatten Bey, a gallant European who commands an Egyptian garrison in Darfour, has, it is said, punished very heavily a body of untrue believers belonging to the Mahdi's following, and the Rabbabish believers in Gordon have given a beating to another detachment of his people, so that the Mahdi may after all be glad to lay down his spiritual authority and accept his Sultanate before Zebehr comes on the scene. We hope there will be no necessity for keeping English officers and men at Suakim or Khartoum, for in summer both are detestable.

The work of Baron Colmar von der Goltz, entitled, “The Nation Armed: Military Organisation and Modern Tactics,” has just been done into French by M. Jaeglé, and it is of interest to see what the French military critic thinks of it. “First of all,” writes one critic, “Baron von der Goltz starts from this principle, that war, being an act of social life, ought to undergo in its visible form all the modifications undergone by that condition. Not only in the way of railways, telegraphs, and various improved means of slaughter, but in instruction in political economy. He arrives at once, without any preamble, at the object of his work, which is to direct more attention to the art of leading armies, attention hitherto almost entirely absorbed by the art of directing the battle. If, therefore, the modern army is to be the nation in arms, it must be well trained, morally and physically, without which it will rapidly become one of those inert masses which a small force of well-armed and well-drilled men, led by a new Alexander, would drive before them, because they would have lost all value, and have been transformed into an innumerable mob of citizen shopkeepers.” “Never,” says the French writer, “was there a more stinging criticism penned of compulsory service than that traced by a German, who knows that his country owes its present splendour to its methodical application. But it is not the Prussian compulsory system which is run down by the German officer, but the compulsory system in France, because in France the decline of both society and State, if latent, is not the less real.” What Baron von der Goltz finds is that although French intelligence is not dead, a love of luxury and enjoyment has destroyed the sentiment of duty, the enthusiasm of self-sacrifice, and the love of the public weal. Baron von der Goltz is clearly of opinion that France is done to a turn, and is quite ready to be served up and devoured by the Teuton. There are many assertions in the work of the Prussian officer to which serious exception can be taken. The very patience with which France has submitted to compulsory service and all the hardships which it entails is a good proof of the existence of a sentiment of duty, &c. When the Reserves are called out for yearly training, the men leave the shop, the loom, the field, and, though at a great loss, cheerfully pay their military tribute. The number of defaulters is very insignificant. Before the Franco-German War, the general opinion in France, as one of their own writers has acknowledged, was that the Germans were all philosophers and dreamers, instead of a nation of soldiers. It may lead to dire consequences should Germany now fall into a similar mistake with respect to France, and under-rate her military qualities. “I do not believe,” says the French critic already referred to, “that the German nation desires to try another war against our regular masses, less solid, no doubt, than the regiments of 1870, but very much stronger than the armies of Gambetta.” In France doubts seem to be entertained as to whether the work of the German Baron should be looked upon as a threat, or as a sort of cry of despair on the part of an officer who sees all prospect of another war vanishing.

Even well-informed French papers continue to speak of the Black Watch as negro troops. An error of a similar nature was probably the cause of a French historian gravely declaring that at the battle of Waterloo the Duke of Wellington made one of his finest cavalry regiments drunk, and then launched it without bit or bridle against the enemy. We can only suppose that Michelet mistook “les Ecossais gris” for “tipsy Scots,” instead of Scots Greys, and thus is history often written.

Fighting appears to be going on at Bacninh, where the French are hammering away at the outer defences. We see, however, that the river has fallen so low that the lightest gunboats cannot ascend it, and it will consequently be impossible to employ the flotilla in attacking the body of the place. It is also said that it will be impossible to turn the Canal of the Rapides to any account even for flat-bottomed junks. Captive balloons are being used to keep up communications between the two corps into which the French Army is divided, between General Millot and General Négrier. In all probability, we shall have to wait several days before learning the result of the operations against Bacninh, as there will be a good deal of fighting, and many serious obstacles to be overcome before beginning the siege—fortified dykes, formidable redoubts, and a series of strong entrenchments, which, if properly defended, will not be carried without hard fighting and considerable loss. The French Generals, who are moving against Bacninh with a force of 15,000 men, expect to meet with a stout resistance from the garrison, which is set down at 20,000 men. According to the French papers, the Chinese are “full of audacity,” and have twice endeavoured to surprise the advanced guard of General Négrier; they evidently mean to contest every inch of ground.

This year the Russian Minister of War has only ordered 72,000 Berdan rifles at the Government small-arms factories at Tula, Ijeff, and Sestroretsk, instead of the usual number of 96,000, a circumstance which has given support to the report prevailing for some months past that Russia intends adopting a magazine rifle.

The increase which has taken place in the strength of the Volunteer forces in India during the past ten years is considerable and worthy of notice. In the years 1874-75 the number of Volunteers were 3,620, the estimated cost being 145,000 rupees per annum. For the coming year the entire forces are estimated at 12,000 men, at a cost to the State of 615,000 rupees. This sum is exclusive of the value of arms and ammunition, which are supplied by the Government without payment.

The Government of India have refused to make any alteration in the rules of the Bengal Medical Retiring Fund, under which the annuity of £300 each, offered annually in July to subscribers to that fund, are considered to have been declined by any officer who does not intimate his intention to accept an annuity before October 31, of the same year. Under these circumstances, any medical officer who, not having accepted the annuity before the prescribed date, wishes to retire from the service, will have to forego the annuity and wait until it is again offered in July of the following year.

The Archbishop of York has arranged to preside at a public meeting in aid of the Missions to Seamen, at Willis's Rooms, St. James's, on May 1. 32,440 seamen have been enrolled as total abstainers by this society during the last five years by its 68 chaplains and readers, who minister to the shipping in 48 seaports, at home and abroad.

THE ARMY IN 1884.

When Lord Morley was obliged to explain that the interesting figures which the Adjutant-General took out of his pocket at the "Artists'" annual dinner were ancient history, he implored the House of Lords to abstain from further discussion on the state of the Army until the publication of the "Preliminary Return" for 1883-84. That return will not appear till about the end of the month; but in the meantime, the report of the Inspector-General of Recruiting has been issued to Parliament, and may be studied by anybody at a cost of 4½d. It is one of the most remarkable documents ever issued from a public office.

For years past the waste of the Army has been a matter of deep anxiety. The report of Lord Airey's Committee was enough to cause well-grounded alarm, which the facts disclosed by successive annual returns increased. At last the deplorable state to which the Army had sunk so impressed Mr. Childers that, acting on the counsel of experts and the reiterated warnings of many a competent observer, he raised the standards of age and height. It was pointed out at the time that if with these increased restrictions the numbers were maintained, it might be taken for granted that the pay and the other inducements to join the Army were sufficient; but that if the numbers fell away, it should be understood that the attractions of soldiering were too small. As all the world knows well, the numbers did fall away—so much so, that acute distress was visible in every part of the Military machine. The moral, of course, was "higher pay;" but, ignoring that—ignoring the plainest lesson which all this muddling of the Army has taught us—the Government deliberately reverted to the system which a year before they had condemned in the most practicable way conceivable. To meet the persistent demands for men, the standard was further reduced to 18 years of age, to five feet three in height, and to thirty-three inches round the chest! Nor was that all. Special measures were taken to fill the ranks; bounties, penny pamphlets, postal-bringers, policemen, half-a-crown rewards, were resorted to, and with what result? Thirty-three thousand recruits says, Lord Wolseley. "Thirty-three thousand," echoes the Inspector-General of Recruiting. Now let us see what sort of recruits these 33,000 are, according to the official report.

First of all, we repeat what the report quietly ignores—namely, that abnormal as the present number of recruits is, it is only 4,000 more than the total of 1876 and only 5,000 above the results of 1878 and 1879. Then we have to remark that more than a third of these men have been taken from the Militia—a new version of the old farce of depleting the Reserves to fill the gaps in the first line. No fewer than 12,450 of the redoubtable 33,000 are Militiamen, and even officially this is described as "a very large drain." No doubt. And then what is the quality of these recruits? On this point, of course, the report is either vague or silent altogether. Lord Wolseley quoted what purported to be the returns of height and girth for 1883. We know now that the figures he produced had nothing to do with 1883; but it is certain that returns for that year exist. Why, then, are they not set forth in this report? Of the 12,450 Militiamen, however, we are told that 8,342 were "under 20 years of age," which may also mean 18. And if the figures regarding the rest are not forthcoming, we may gather some idea of their character from the answers of district commanders to certain questions put to them by the War Office. Says the latter: "What is your opinion as to the recruits enlisted for the Army during the past year as regards their physique?" The answers are significant. There is a certain proportion of "good," "good on the whole," "fair," "generally fair;" but, on the other hand, we have such significant statements as these: "physique slighter;" or "good, considering chest-measurement;" "all that can be expected;" "standard too low;" "physique not so good;" or "up to average," "just up to standard" (5 ft. 3 in.), "fallen off," "poor," "not to be compared to men of previous years," and, finally, "physique too small for carrying full kit." Of course, it would be wonderful, if out of 33,000 young Englishmen many were not fairly strong and big; but all the more difficult is it, therefore, to consider these answers from 76 regimental districts as satisfactory. The Times declares that it has gone through them, and finds that in 33 cases the reports are "very favourable." Very favourable from what point of view? From the altitude of five-foot-three, perhaps. But, granted that 33 reports are satisfactory—which is very doubtful—it comes to this: the rest are quite the contrary. Is it satisfactory to find recruiting-officers formally reporting that the standard is too low, that the physique has "fallen off," that the men are not to be compared to men of previous years, and that (in one district, at all events) the warriors of this country are too small to carry their own kits? To say that such a state of things as this is "in every respect satisfactory," is to talk violent nonsense.

The plain truth is that, notwithstanding all the desperate efforts to make up deficiencies during the past year, the army is many thousands of men below the establishment. The gap of 48,000 men to which we pointed as long ago as last November (and our estimate is practically confirmed by the present return)—this enormous gap, we say, has been only partially filled by taking 12,000 men from the Militia, by inducing some 6,000 regulars to re-engage (thus to a like extent denuding the Reserve), and by enlisting thousands of immature and feeble lads, the majority of whom must in the event of war be weeded out and left behind, as they have been weeded out and left behind before. And after all, the army, even according to this official return, was between seven and eight thousand men below its establishment number on Jan. 1 last. And when it is remembered that the establishment number itself is below the minimum fixed as necessary to the success of short service; that large allowance must be made for discharge, desertion, and other casualties; that many thousands of men must this year pass to the Reserves—considering these things, is it possible to say that the Army is in a satisfactory condition? Is it not manifest that the whole system is barely kept going by a succession of the most desperate makeshifts?—St. James's Gazette.

A SUGGESTION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—I have watched with great interest and satisfaction your earnest endeavours to throw light and suggestion on subjects touching our national well-being by preparation for any emergencies; and feeling that my own working has been in its small way as patriotically inspired; I venture to ask the favour of your giving admission to your columns a brief statement of one or two ideas connected with our defences that may seem, perhaps, as rough material out of which it may be possible to develope serviceable additions to our present systems, and build up, so augmented and strengthened, a volunteer defensive force as to add greatly to our security. There exists on our coasts a handy, hardy, and numerous class, the fishermen, few of whom are in the Royal Naval Reserve, for reasons I think I am right in saying of the Regulations of that service, which are, of course, framed in view of the duties the men would be called upon to perform. But the whole of these men, it seems to me, would be of the utmost use if brought into organisation for purposes of shore and harbour torpedo work, and to act as artillery and infantry. I am inclined to think practically the whole of these might be induced to join, were a bank chartered for the purpose of enabling the fishermen to purchase their boats and tackle, in the same way it has been found expedient to foster the acquisition of property by the masses in other directions, notably of dwellings, through the operation of building societies. This would really do nothing less than manumit these men, who in return for the difference in their favour between the interest payable to the bank, even added to the sum of gradual instalments of purchase money and what they now pay as shares to boat and tackle, would consent to enrol themselves members of the proposed force. The bank might also have power to do a great deal of good work, by undertaking insurances and other matters beneficial and needful to the class under consideration. We have 14,000 Yeomanry Cavalry, besides Volunteer Horse, standing very much out of connection with the Regular Cavalry, and it is an idea that very great advantage in many directions might ensue from having a service troop or squadron added to each of these regiments for more or less permanent and complete attachment to Line cavalry regiments. Many young men, I think, would jump at the opportunity to do some real work, who yet hesitate to enlist into the ranks of the Regulars, and would, under this scheme, become a new source of maintaining our Cavalry force in case of strain being put upon it; while the link it would form between the Yeomanry and the Line would probably tend to bring them all into greater uniformity. Much has been said about the expenses the Yeomanry are put to, but where the Government, as in England, does not possess a horse-breeding establishment, it occurs to the mind were the Yeomanry regiments to take up the breeding of cavalry remounts, they might benefit themselves and strengthen the Government, which has now nothing on which to depend directly for horses. I will not venture to tax your indulgence by writing much more, yet it is desirable to add I have done my best to advance these views, and very many others, without success, except in having sympathy from some who, should you publish and they read these lines, might think me forgetful did I not gratefully acknowledge their kindness and courtesy.—I am, &c., W. GREEN.

MILITIA OFFICERS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—I have observed in the Army and Navy Gazette there has been some little correspondence lately, apparently from an officer of the Regular Army, conceived in a bad spirit and worse taste, with the object, as it appears to me, of casting discredit upon Militia officers. I should not have noticed the matter, had not your paper commented upon it in a manner to give it an importance to which it is not entitled; and this is the excuse I offer to my old brother-officers for taking upon myself to answer the charges of your gallant and anonymous correspondent, who, if I am not mistaken, is some silly youth who, without brains enough to pass into the Army through the regular channel, has managed to creep in through the Militia, and is now dreadfully shocked to find the uninitiated fail sometimes to distinguish between him as he was and him as he is. For this he blames the Militia, and charges its officers with dishonourable conduct at the same time; and, contrary to the traditions of the English Army, which is to accept without murmuring whatever the Sovereign and her advisers consider necessary for the good of the country and in the interests of the service, he complains of the reforms lately introduced, and denounces them in the public Press as a hardship on the Regular Army. He deliberately accuses Militia officers as a body of wishing to palm themselves off as Linesmen, in not having the letter "M" on their uniforms, in sinking the number of their battalions by leaving them out on their cards, when advertising their marriages, "deaths," or the births of their children in the Times, and on the occasion of their being presented at Court, &c., and he demands that, since the uniforms have to be alike in all the battalions of territorial regiments, those of the Militia be more conspicuously marked—I was going to say branded—with the letter "M." Now as to there being any desire on the part of Militia officers to sail under false colours, I will take upon myself to give the accusation the most unqualified denial. I have had as much experience of the Militia as anyone, and I do not hesitate to say that nowhere will be found more genuine esprit de corps or more pride taken in their own branch of the service than among Militia officers, and I am quite certain the last thing they wish is to be thought ashamed of their cloth. When the other grievances are looked into, it at once becomes apparent that professional jealousies and prejudice are at the root; that drawing the professional and the constitutional forces into closer connection is distasteful; that the object, which has been to create a national Army for the better protection of the country, by bringing its different military forces under one system, is neither understood nor appreciated. If it were such, the petty grievance of similar uniforms, or the hardship of having occasionally to sit on a court-martial, or perform some other duty in company with Militia officers, would scarcely be seriously put forward, though a subaltern of the Line has, on those occasions, to rank junior to captains and field-officers of the Militia. And now, let me remind your correspondent that, in dwelling on such small matters as a hardship, he should not have omitted to mention that, in the matter of courts-martial, Line officers are always senior in their rank; that to serve on a court-martial in company with Militia officers, the prisoners must be Militiamen, for the simple reason that Militia officers cannot sit as members of a court to try soldiers. Surely, if there is a hardship, which I do not admit, it is on the side of the Militia, and I will quote myself as an instance. I had frequently to sit on courts-martial when I was a captain and hon. major to try men of my own regiment, junior to captains of the Army, some of whom were probably in the nursery when I was serving in the Crimea as a captain and an adjutant of a regiment, the Anglo-Turkish Contingent. Your correspondent should not forget to mention, at the same time, that every appointment in the Militia to which permanent pay is attached is now conferred upon officers of the Army only, however well qualified some in the Militia may be for the posts. He may also remember that there was a good deal of friction at the brigade depôts when the new order of things first came into operation; and I will ask him if he thinks it becoming in an officer to add to the difficulties of those under whom he is serving, by striving to create a bad feeling between the two branches of the service.—I am, &c., C. HOWARD CHAPLIN, Major,
Late 2nd Royal Surrey Militia.

Bordighera, Italy, Feb. 18.

Admiral Sir Astley Cooper Key presided on Saturday last at the fifty-third anniversary meeting of the Royal United Service Institution. The report stated that 205 new members had joined the institution during the year, bringing up the total membership to 4,627, whilst the number of corresponding members was 25. Seven essays had been received for the gold medal,—"On an outbreak of war, what is the best organisation for distributing the personnel of the Navy and the Reserves among the available war-vessels, and among a proportion of merchant vessels as an auxiliary to the Navy." Admirals A. P. Ryder and Sir Leopold M'Clintock and Capt. W. Arthur undertook the duties of referees. The subject for the military essay for this year is,—"Should the European army in India continue as at present constituted, or should it be converted in whole or in part into a local force?" Admiral Sir John Hay moved the adoption of the report, and congratulated the institution on its satisfactory condition. The funds were increasing, new members were being constantly added, and the library was now the best of its kind in Europe. Major-Gen. Sir Andrew Clarke seconded the resolution, which was carried. On the motion of Admiral Gore-Jones, seconded by Capt. Colomb, the recommendations of the Council with regard to vacancies in that body were approved of, and the retiring auditors (Lieut.-Col. Wethered and Messrs. T. G. Ridgway and E. P. Raitt) were, on the motion of Lord Chelmsford, seconded by Admiral Luard, re-elected. Gen. Sir B. Walker moved that the meeting confirm a recommendation of the Council to the effect that "any member of the Council appointed to a tour abroad shall be considered as vacating his seat at the Council." The reason for this change was the importance of always having the Council kept up to its full strength, and the desirability of electing to that body those gentlemen who had been selected to fill vacancies as they occurred. Admiral Sir Frederick Nicolson seconded the resolution, which was carried. The report of the referees on the Naval prize essay was then read. It stated that they had awarded the gold medal to an officer whose essay was signed, "Let reason go before every enterprise, and counsel before every action," and the secretary announced, amid much cheering, that the name of the writer was Capt. Charles Johnstone, late of her Majesty's ship Dryad. The essays of Com. Kingscote, Capt. Robert H. Harris, and Capt. Henry Cleveland were highly recommended. The chairman said he knew of nothing more satisfactory than that an officer, who had just been promoted for distinguished service, and who had acted as Capt. Johnstone had lately acted, should have received this gold medal. A vote of thanks was passed to the referees, and a similar compliment having been paid to Sir A. Cooper Key for presiding, the chairman, in reply, said Lord Northbrook had desired him to express to the members his warm interest in the institution, and his regret at being unable to be present. The usefulness of the institution would be understood when he told them that the subject of the Naval Prize Essay for which the medal had just been awarded was the very subject the Admiralty had had under consideration for the last year or two. The "Journals" of this institution were to be distributed to the Seamen's Library, so sensible was the Admiralty of the amount of valuable information which was gathered together in their papers. The meeting then terminated.

Count Munster, the German Ambassador, visited Plymouth during the week. Lieut. A. H. Smith-Dorrien, acting for Admiral Sir Houston Stewart, was present at the railway-station to meet the Count, accompanied by the German Consul. The German Ambassador was at once driven in Sir Houston's carriage to the Royal William Victualling Yard, Stonehouse, where the Admiral's steam launch was in waiting to convey him across to Cremyll. Here the Count was met by the Earl of Mount Edgcumbe, whose guest he was for the night at Mount Edgcumbe House. The German Ambassador then went on board the Olga, and, with Prince Henry of Prussia and some of the officers on board the corvette, dined at Admiralty House in the evening. Sir Houston and Lady Stewart gave a reception in honour of Prince Henry, for which a very large number of invitations were issued. A grand dinner was also given on board the Royal Adelaide, by the officers of that ship, to Prince Henry and the officers of the Olga.

OUR CRUISERS.—IV.

We now proceed to consider the question of the structural strength of ships, so far as to point out the failures in this respect of our State ships, and the reason of those failures. This knowledge it is extremely important to possess; it does not come by inspiration, and if a seaman has to acquire it for himself, it will probably cost more money and more health than will be at all pleasant in after years to contemplate. The following structural observations are founded on the rules of Lloyds' Register; not because we consider them perfect, but that as rules we consider them the best, and the ones that possess the most extended confidence among the shipping public. In pointing out the failures of the highest-classed ships, it is not from any mischievous spirit of picking holes in Lloyds' coat; the superior officers of Lloyds' know the truth of the following cases quite as well as the writer, but then they cannot wash their dirty linen in public. It is, perhaps, not too much to say that success in any new enterprise is only the result of a great number of failures. Except to a very select few, the following are two of the commonest notions now prevalent:—1. That as long as a ship is of the highest class, she is quite sufficient for any purpose. 2. That ships built of steel may be built of lightened scantlings, as compared with the minimum of what will pass the regulations in force for iron; and that this also is equally sufficient. To both these notions we have to offer our most emphatic and flattest contradiction. We must ask our readers to accept the two following propositions,—First, that, cœteris paribus, a steamer must be stronger than a sailing ship, and that the faster you intend to drive the steamer the stronger you must build her. How much stronger for extreme speed is not a point on which, at present, we have accurate knowledge. It is sufficient to say that of the whole of the extreme-speed Atlantic steamers, there are not three which, if they had to be built over again, would not be built stronger. As a case in point and to illustrate the latest and best practice, the two 8,000-ton, 19-knot, sea-speed steamers now building at Elder's, for the Cunard Company, have their frames and reverse frames both doubled in the engine and boiler space—spaced 30 in.—and the floor-plates carried a long way up between them. There is nothing in Lloyds' Rules to compel you to put in double frames. The second proposition to accept is this,—that no engine can go, if the ship is not strong enough to keep her shape. It is no part of the duty of the screw-shaft to keep the ship in shape; and if in a weak ship this duty comes to fall on the shaft, the shaft breaks, and then there is an end of it. It often happens that the bearings in a weak ship go out of line gradually, in bad weather, for instance, in which case, by means of a good look-out and stopping in time, you may save the shaft, but you have to stop. A few words of explanation are also necessary as to shipbuilders and their position in respect to their employers, such as the Admiralty or private shipowners. Shipbuilders build ships, but they also build—and the distinction is worth notice—what their employers believe will be ships, and which turn out to be rattletraps. We divide shipbuilders into the three following classes:—1. Men from whom, if you will let them alone, you cannot get a bad ship; at least, in all our experience, we have never known a bad ship turned out by them. 2. Those from whom you will get a good ship, if you pay them a good price, and look after them well, but who will build you, at a cheap price, a cheap and nasty ship, and this in spite of all your looking-after, and in spite of her being of the highest class of Lloyds' or any other registry. 3. Those from whom you cannot get a good ship, except by accident. The majority of builders are of the 2nd class; the 3rd class we do not believe to be numerous; they are supported by shipowners of the "vulpine class" (see Blue-book, Royal Commission on Tonnage, Q. 13,367-9), whose one aim is to make money, and who sail as near the wind as the fear of the jail will let them. One more explanation. Some ships built by men of Class 1 are built for a specific purpose and of exceptional type. Many of them fail for the purpose for which they were designed, because the design is wholly impracticable. The unarmoured ships in the Navy are examples of this. It is quite a common thing for it to be said at the Admiralty, "It is a failure of the contractor." Not that the officials have any idea they are doing the builder an injustice, as they sin through ignorance, not knowing that the design is in fault, and that they have produced the design in the same way that the German did the camel. H.M.S. Tourmaline is an illustration. On the miserable collapse of this ship, an Admiral was very ready to write to the papers, "failure of the contractor." It was nothing of the kind. In this particular case, we happen to know the contractor does good work. But neither Dixon nor any one else could build a ship in the way the Tourmaline was built, as we shall presently show. The Czar's yacht Livadia is another instance of a first-class failure. Who does not remember the amount of noisy buncum inflicted on us about this ship? Says one "eminent" man, Admiral Popoff may rest assured that he has initiated a great and valuable improvement in the form of ships; her length, 235 ft.; breadth, 153 ft.; displacement, 4,420 tons; indicated horse-power, 12,354; speed, 15·9 knots. The Atlantic mail steamer Arizona, 450 ft. by 45 ft.; displacement, about the double; indicated horse-power, 6,357; speed, 17·3 knots; or roughly, half as much speed again, double the size, and on one-half of the coals. As the truth about her has never been told, it is as well to tell it here. She did not rise or give to the sea like an ordinary ship, the sea struck her like a half-tide rock, and would have washed her to pieces in a very short time. In this case, the builder did his best to lick Admiral Popoff's notions into shape, and is not at all responsible for the failure of the design. We now proceed with our illustrations:—1. Steamship A, of 3,000 tons, built some 25 years ago for a public company; after the usual champagne lunch and mutual-admiration speeches of builders and owners, she started from the east coast of England to take up her station. She encountered a moderate head gale off the Lizard, and commenced to leak like a sieve. A few hours sufficed to show the captain that he would, if he wanted to avoid foundering, have to give it up. He put the stern of the ship to the wind and made for port, when immediately the leaks took up, and she was kept free with one pump. She was put into dry dock, and had to have structural additions to the extent of 25 per cent. of her original cost. In a few months the company "busted up," the ship never made a voyage in the service for which she was intended, and was sold by the liquidators. 2. Steamship B, of 3,300 tons, 376 ft. long, built about 30 years since for a most successful public company, and by a builder of the highest class. She nearly broke in two on her first voyage, and had to receive enormous structural additions. She then ran on her station for many years; the owners fortunately had a heavy subsidy. The cause of this ship's giving out was that the builders had cut the sheerstrake to reeve the paddle-beams. We had at that time no knowledge as to how to build a ship of such length; and for this knowledge we are indebted to E. T. Harland, i.e., the iron decks. With the single exception of the Scotia, we do not know one long ship built at that time that did not show signs of weakness. 3. Wooden barque C, on her first voyage classed A1, loaded with a light cargo of rail and pig iron. After two days the captain found himself with six feet of water in the hold, and the pumps constantly going, so he put into the nearest port. The writer of these articles was consulted by the captain as to his next step; a Lloyds' surveyor of great experience in these cases was sent for, and he recommended large sister-kelsons of pitch pine, which were added, and the ship has since gone along all right. 4. Wooden barque D, also A1, failed in the same manner, and was similarly treated. We have known this vessel for many years; at no time, in our opinion, was she fit to carry dead-weight cargoes. She was continually in trouble; the owner, after having lost about £6,000 with her, sold her at a sweeping reduction of 90 per cent. off her cost! It follows, then, that the owner of this ship regards the dictum, "As long as the ship is A1, it is sufficient," with considerable suspicion. 5. Steamer E, comparatively new, 3,100 tons, 3,300 indicated horse-power, built for a large company for a light trade, classed 100 A1. Found to be leaky on her first voyage. A surveyor, known as a most capable man, and of the widest experience, was sent to make a short voyage in her, to see if the allegation of leakiness was correct. The ship was sent back to the builders, and, after a long bow-wow, the experts decided that the ship as built was not strong enough to be driven at her full speed, viewing her large power relative to her tonnage. She was all right at 10 knots, but drive her at 12 or 13 she began to leak like a basket. 6. Steamer F, 2,500 tons, built some 20 years ago for a public company, and of the highest class in the Liverpool book. The ship immediately showed signs of weakness. The company failed. After lying idle for some years was sold to a private firm, who spent a large sum in strengthening her. She ran in an onerous trade for a number of years, and last winter foundered, with loss of life. The captain of the ship who rescued part of the crew told the writer that there was nothing in the weather that a good ship ought to have succumbed to. A short time previously we had seen her in dry dock, under treatment, having had to put back with her decks swept, and some of her frames broken. There was an inquiry as to the loss, and the magistrate decided that the owners were not to blame. There is no doubt that this loss may, in the words of Mr. Dawson, be ascribed to "bad weather bearing upon ships too weak for their work." 7. Steamer G, 5,100 tons, new vessel, classed 100 A1. This is a most interesting case, and shows to what an absurdity competitions between registries and the designs of amateurs can push the construction of a ship. She is a typical example of what the late W. J. Lamport called building down to the minimum of what will pass classification rules. In this case, the "designer" got to windward of the Registry; the rules have consequently been altered, and a ship could not now be similarly built. We have seen her in dry dock on two separate occasions, under treatment for general debility, and as she is engaged in an onerous trade, we have no hesitation in saying that, if fully laden, she is deficient for it. We do not say that she is dangerous, because, as in No. 1 case, the captain might turn his tail to it, or heave to. The remarkable part of the design is this, that Lloyds' have assigned a load-line L——R above the tops of the bulkheads; and we have walked from end to end of her on a deck some two feet below the assigned load-line without meeting any bulkhead. The builder of this ship is a man of high reputation. He told us he had less than £80,000 for this ship, a sum which is quite insufficient to build such a vessel sufficiently strong for the trade in which she is engaged. Notion the second, ships built of steel. A short time since we were introduced to one of the most eminent steel-makers, and we asked him if there was any chance of steel being made at the same price as good ship-building iron (it is now 50 per cent. dearer), so that we might have the same scantlings. He said no, but that it did not matter, because shipbuilders would now build you of steel, for the same price, a vessel of the same dead-weight capacity as the iron one,—i.e., with lightened scantlings. To this we replied that with our present knowledge, lightened scantlings in steel had so far failed; but the steel-maker was quite unconvinced, and retired from the discussion with an air of calm superiority. Two good things have been said about steel:—By Thomas Gray, of the Board of Trade—"Put as much steel in your ship as you would iron, and then you will have a good ship." By Alexander Logan, Superintendent Engineer, Cunard Company—"I am just afraid it's o'er soople," i.e., too elastic. We have examined in dry dock a great number of steel steamers, cases of debility have had extra attention from us, and we are quite clear in saying that all of them "built down to the minimum" are insufficient. We have in our mind's eye three steel steamers, new, over 5,000 tons, classed 100 A1. It is fair to say that the price paid for them was very low. Two out of the three have been in port in distress at the same time, and one of them has had to put back twice on the same voyage. The owners have been at considerable expense for structural additions to them since they were built. We think that these steamers are further illustrations of Mr. Dawson's statement,—"There can be little doubt that to a general deficiency of strength in our trading steamers, to meet such trials as were imposed by the weather of 1881-2, is traceable a large proportion of the extra losses." Further, all the successful steamers in the Atlantic, which is by far the most onerous trade, are built very much in excess of any classification rules; and it does not matter how far you go back. It is just as true of the Great Western, built in 1837, as in the ships now building for the Cunard Company. We have now tried to show that ships built down to the minimum are unfit for a high speed or an onerous trade; if, then, we can show that our cruisers are very much below this minimum, then, a fortiori, they must be entirely unfit for their work. Let us compare the Inconstant and Cunard steamer Russia, built at the same time, i.e., 1867-8. The frigate is 337 ft. by 51 ft., and 4,000 tons; the Russia 358 ft. by 43 ft., and 3,000 tons. It is hardly necessary to say the Russia was and is a thorough good ship. Her frames are spaced 21-in. frames, 6 by 4 by 10-16ths, reverse ditto, 4 by 3 by 8-16ths; double reverse bars in engine and boiler space, floors 10-16ths centre-plate kelson, and two intercostals each side, 10-16ths. Plating 12-16ths and 13-16ths, and garboard strake 16-16ths. The sea speed of the Russia was 13½ knots. The frames of the Inconstant are 42 in. apart, the plating 8-16ths; on this are fastened two 3-in. thicknesses of wood; this mixture of wood-and-iron plating or planking is not through fastened. The iron plating is fastened to the frames, the lower tier of wood is fastened to the iron plating, the upper tier of wood is fastened to the lower tier of wood, much in the same way that a bill-sticker sticks bills on a wall. The speed of the Inconstant in Sir Thomas Brassey's last book is given at 16½ knots. She has possibly done this for a few minutes. A very little consideration will show such a wide difference in these scantlings that both cannot be right. The Russia's are the result of experience, the Inconstant's of "inner consciousness." It is quite open to say the Inconstant's have been found to be sufficient. And the reason she has been found sufficient is, that she has never been tried. Drive the Inconstant for 24 hours into a head sea in bad weather, say in chase of the Elbe, or Fulda, or Werra, what then? The British public would experience some disappointment, and the recording angel a pretty heavy job among the big D's. Another humbug in the Inconstant is the balanced rudder. The plan was tried and abandoned 25 years before in the s.s. Great Britain. We now take the Iris. The details of the Iris are taken from Mr. W. H. White's lecture and drawings at the meeting of Naval architects, April, 1879. In this ship we are officially told that everything has been sacrificed to extreme speed. We wish we were as certain of the speed as we are of the sacrifices; in the matter of structural "slimness," she is certainly a chef d'œuvre. The Iris frames are 6 by 3½ by 7-16ths; reverse ditto, same by 6-16ths; spaced 48 in. amidships and 42 in. at ends, 83 frames a side. For the minimum of Lloyds' 100 A 1 the frames would be 5½ by 3 by 7-16ths; reverse, 3½ by 3 by 7-16ths; spaced 24 in., 148 a side, double reverse bars in bottom in engine and boiler space. Longitudinals in bottom. In the Iris the central kelson is 6-16ths in., and lightening holes are cut in it in alternate frames 24 in. by 15 in.; there are two longitudinals each side, 5-16ths in. thick. If built to Lloyds' there would have to be three on each side, the central one less than 10-16ths in., and the side ones 7-16ths in. Lloyds' would certainly not allow holes in a central kelson-plating. The Iris has garboard strake 10-16ths in., up to topsides 8-16ths in., topsides, 6-16ths in., single rivetted. Lloyds' would require, garboard 10-16ths, remainder 9-16ths and 10-16ths in. alternately, and the whole of it double rivetted. Again, no man of sense would have built the Iris without an iron deck 6-16ths in. thick. The Iris has stringer plates 8 ft. broad amidships, tapering to 4 ft. at the ends; but then there are a number of holes cut in these stringer plates to fill the coal-bunkers; five or six a side, if we remember rightly. Lloyds' would certainly not allow holes to be cut in a top-deck stringer to fill the bunkers. Not to weary our readers, we may say that we think we are within the mark in stating that the Iris is not within 20 per cent. of Lloyds' minimum. We have shown in the case of steamer E that this minimum is not sufficient for a high speed, still less than ever is it sufficient for an extreme speed. Sir Thomas Brassey stated in Parliament, when these swift cruisers were laid down, "that they were a mistake, and could render no service to the country proportionate to their cost." We should like to know Sir T. Brassey's opinion, now that he is a Lord of the Admiralty, on the Arethusa class, which are of similar design. We now take the Opal class, composite vessels. Nobody doubts that these vessels are failures; let us try to show why. There was no mystery and no difficulty in building such vessels,—many such, notably the China tea clippers, had been so built. But then the Constructive Department will not copy existing successful ships, and the taxpayer pays the piper. The ordinary frame-spacing of composite ships is 18 in.; in the Opal class they are 20 in. The Opal has no kelson-plate on top of floors, no vertical kelson on ditto, only two angle-irons instead of four, no rider plates on kelson angle-irons. Briefly, she has no backbone at all. Opal has two intercostal kelsons a side, connected to straps on the outside of frame, about 9 in. broad; one wash-plate, half-way between this and lower-deck beams, one 9-in. strap over stringer-plate on lower-deck beam; sheerstrake 30 in., but not connected with stringer-plate. A reference to Lloyds' book will show that a ship of this size should have a sheerstrake of 36 in., connected continuously by a heavy angle-iron to a 32-in. stringer-plate; diagonal straps 9 in. broad, arranged in pairs at an angle of 45°, crossing each other symmetrically, and connecting the sheerstrake to a 21-in. bilge-plate. In the Opal nothing of the kind exists. Tie-plates would also be required on the lower-deck beams, and diagonal ditto on the upper-deck beams. In the Opal class there are none. The reader who reads and understands the above will no longer wonder why the ships will not keep in shape. For a first-class example of incapacity and total ignorance of the very A, B, C of shipbuilding, we are inclined to place these ships in the front rank.

The military training of companies has already commenced here, in accordance with G.O. 30, of 1884. A syllabus of the course of instruction has been issued to all concerned:—First week, company drill; second week, hasty entrenchments, defence of posts, advance and rear guards, &c.; third week, reconnaissance, outposts, &c.; fourth week, camping, bivouacs, &c.

It is in contemplation to shortly reappropriate the South Camp, so that accommodation may be provided there for three infantry battalions on a war footing, instead of, as at present, for four weak battalions.

Thirty Lieutenants of Militia, who are candidates for commissions in the Line, will undergo competitive examinations here in military subjects on the 18th inst.

Surgeon-Major S. K. Ray, A.M.D., has arrived at the station for duty, and has been taken on the strength of the Division from the 1st inst.

The twenty probationary Surgeons at the Cambridge Hospital, having concluded the prescribed course of Army Hospital Corps drill, are now undergoing instruction in riding, under the direction of the General Officer commanding the Cavalry Brigade.

It was notified in Division Orders yesterday (Friday), that the following officers, having been examined for promotion, in accordance with the Queen's Regulations, sec. 4, para. 37, have been found qualified:—For the rank of Major.—Captains Cooke and Heathcote, Cameronians; Beatty, 39th; Jelf, R.E.; Bigg, R.A.; Tillotson, R.H.A.; Deputy-Commissary-General Bourne, Assistant-Commissary-General Shannon, and Deputy-Assistant-Commissaries-General Creagh, Collard, and McMurray, Commissariat and Transport Staff. For the rank of Captain.—Lieutenants Gordon, 15th Hussars; Helyar, R.A.; Dawkins and Wilbraham, 85th Light Infantry; Polhill-Turner and Preston, 2nd Dragoon Guards; McGrigor, 3rd Battalion, Rifle Brigade; Douglas, Wood, Ranken, Wise, Ussher, Ward, Grant, Young, and Lermitte, Cameronians; Barry, R.H.A.; Fowler, 85th Light Infantry.

CRITICAL POSITION at KHARTOUM.—LETTS'S NEW BIRD'S-EYE VIEW of the SOUDAN.—This beautiful picture, artistically printed in colours, shows the whole of the country from Alexandria to El Obeid, conveys a better idea of the relative positions of places and the characteristics of the land than anything published, and gives site of Graham's victory, as well as all recent battles, with dates. Size, 23 inches by 20, folded, 1s, post free; or flat, in protecting tube, 1s 4d.—LETTS (Limited), London Bridge.

Voyages of Discovery in the Arctic and Antarctic Seas and Round the World. By Deputy-Inspector-General of Hospitals and Fleets R. McCormick, R.N. (Sampson Low, Marston, and Co.)

These magnificent volumes contain the personal narratives of attempts to reach the North and South Poles, and also of an open-boat expedition up the Wellington Channel in search of Sir John Franklin and of her Majesty's ships Erebus and Terror, in the boat Forlorn Hope, under the command of the author. Quite irrespective of the time that has been already devoted to Polar explorations, it is abundantly clear that many other expeditions with similar intentions may be organised from time to time. It will, then, be well to learn from the experience of so high an authority as that of the author all particulars on such a highly important subject. Deputy-Inspector-General McCormick has been personally engaged in three of the most memorable expeditions of the present century,—one with Parry, in the year 1827; one with Ross, in his Antarctic voyage during the years 1839 and 1843; and another in command of a boat expedition in search of Franklin in 1852-3. The value of these experiences can scarcely be over-estimated, and now they are fully described and lucidly explained in the work under notice. If any justification was required for undertaking its publication, it is afforded by the recent renewals of interest in favour of personal research and discovery, which of late have been so strongly marked. Every attempt seems to have been made by the author to prepare a work sufficiently comprehensive to prove of practical utility to the many who are now, no doubt, cherishing the hope that at some future period they, too, may become familiar with the Arctic and Antarctic regions. The main point of the author is clearly stated; he wishes to be regarded by future explorers as the one who had placed on record an exhaustive treatise on an unfamiliar but wonderfully interesting subject. With this object before him, he has placed at the end of the first volume sketches of plans for reaching both Poles, North and South. He has also introduced five panoramas of the coast line of the new glaciated southern continent, which he and his party had discovered on their first voyage south, drawn on a large scale, with the Great Barrier and remarkable bergs, so as to give full effect to the appearance of that wonderful land. The earlier chapters of this work will afford much pleasure to the reader, although there is no important feature to call for particular attention. In the twelfth chapter, the first voyage towards the South Pole is described. On November 13, 1840, the explorers entered upon the first interesting portion of their expedition: to pass their summer amid huge packs of icebergs and a glaciated land. The author, however, writes almost enthusiastically upon the future for the next few months, describing it as exceptionally novel, full of interest, promising in the prospective of great discoveries, and the possibility, at least, of unfurling our flag on the ice-girt Pole itself. The notes on natural history are interesting. While roaming about the Auckland Islands, several albatross eggs were found. On one occasion the author saw a pair of albatrosses sitting near a nest without an egg. Only in one solitary instance did he find two eggs in the same nest, and these two eggs were of an exceptional shape, one being more rounded, and the other much more elongated, than in the normal form, and were evidently twins, and laid by the same bird, no unusual occurrence amongst mammalia having one offspring as the ordinary number. The author here differs decidedly from Cuvier, who had been under the erroneous impression that the albatross laid more than one egg; whereas, the opportunity that these islands afforded of examining so many nests during the season of incubation enables the author to assert definitively that, like the petrels, one egg is the normal number. The habits of these birds and their peculiarities are thus pleasantly described:—

> "The fine, white head and neck of the bird, appearing above the grass as she sits on her nest, would lead to its discovery at a great distance, even if she did not betray having had the egg beneath her, by so pertinaciously refusing to quit it till pushed off, bravely defending herself and her treasure with her beak, snapping the mandibles together with a sharp, ringing sound, making no attempt at flight unless drawn off by force, when she waddles off in the most awkward and grotesque manner, floundering with outspread wings amongst the long grass, often rolling over and over if any ruggedness of the ground obstructed her progress."

In the thirteenth chapter, the author returns to the subject of the albatross, and introduces him as taken in the act of wooing. There can be little doubt that such was the interesting ceremony that was witnessed from a lofty perpendicular wall of rock, which overhung a deep valley on the opposite side. The albatrosses were breeding in great numbers in the long grass covering the land; their beautiful white necks could be seen above the grass, as they sat in their nests, studding the hills in all directions. Now and then the male bird might be seen standing by the nest alongside of its mate, but more frequently the female is alone, and frequently sleeping. The author gives an amusing description of how these interesting birds carried on proceedings:—

> "A group of 13 had assembled together, evidently for the purpose of selecting their future partners; and so intently were they engaged in this ceremony, that my own approach was quite unheeded by them. It was quite a pantomime of billing and twisting of necks into various curvatures, without a note or sound escaping them. Several others were flying overhead as they arrived from the sea, rapidly cleaving the air with their huge pinions, anxious to join the coterie below them."

A rather amusing event occurred when descending from the ridge through the long grass. Several lestrises suddenly made a desperate attack on the solitary author, circling round his head, and darting with open beak at his face. This showed the close proximity of their nests, and subsequently one young one, covered with down of a yellow colour and squatted amongst the long grass, was secured, immediately followed by the finding of a solitary egg, which was regarded as a special prize. Shortly after this the author saw for the first time the beautiful and elegant white petrel (Procellaria nivea), its black beak and feet forming a striking contrast to its pure, unsullied, snow-white plumage. This was an important event, having regard to the interests of the ornithological collection. On January 11, 1841, land was reported ahead. At first it could just be traced, showing the faint outline of a somewhat conical summit. In an hour it had become almost obliterated, but before 9 in the morning it was sufficiently well defined and clear in outline to be made the subject of a sketch. In summing up the results of his attempts to obtain a satisfactory one, the author draws a striking picture of the grandeur of the magnificent panorama which gradually unfolded itself like a dissolving view:—

> "The northern side, which we were approaching, presented a very remarkable appearance,—a cluster of white, angular-shaped hummocks, or small peaks, in the background, resembling a vast mass of crystallisation, having a steep wall or escarpment of black rock like lava in the foreground next the sea. We tacked ship during the first watch, and at eleven got another view of the coast. Here were to be seen several curious birds, a stormy petrel, a gigantic petrel, a white petrel, a pintado, and some penguins. The latitude at noon was 71° 14′ 45″, and longitude 171° 15′, consequently we were beyond Captain Cook's farthest, and have discovered a new land of so extensive a range of coast-line, attaining such an altitude, as to justify from its general aspect the appellation of a 'Southern Continent,' in the highest latitude within the Antarctic Circle yet known, and we have now but Weddel's track to get beyond."

The first thing to be done was to take formal possession in her Majesty's name of the enormous southern continent which had been so recently discovered. After the flag was unfurled, hoisted, and the Queen's health drunk in a glass of sherry by the party which carried out the ceremony, three cheers were given for her Majesty, who thus became possessed of a continent in all probability exceeding in magnitude the continents of either the Old or the New World. It may as well be added that at present its productions are ice and guano. The author here describes a curious black rock, circular in its formation, and resembling a martello tower. In its face there is a beautiful cavern, with a fine display of columnar basalt; at one spot there are two very remarkable projections of rock, resembling human forms, which we at once named Victoria and Albert, as presiding over the new land we had just added to our dominions. At the close of this chapter the author expresses his regret that he should have occasion here to allude to the circumstance of a very injudicious order of Captain Ross's, one which was calculated to have prejudicial effects on the "collection." This order forbade the ships being left without a medical officer on board of each, however, near to each other or the land they may be. The author thus states his opinion on the subject:—

> "I do not hesitate to say that many highly interesting observations, both in natural history and geography and the collateral sciences, in a newly-discovered land, in so high a latitude as we have had the good-fortune to attain, and which may, perchance, never be visited again, have been lost to the world through this ill-timed order; and notwithstanding my having had some personal influence with Captain Ross, both of us having served together as youths under our mutual old commander and friend, Sir Edward Parry, I could not induce him to cancel any order he had once placed in the order-book, so strong were his prejudices, and as a sequence so difficult to reason with. One medical officer left with the ships, as I pointed out to him, would be a sufficient guarantee, in the remote chance of any accident happening on board during so short an interval of time."

We hope to give presently a supplemental notice of the second volume.

Our Schools and Colleges. By Captain F. S. Dumaresq de Carteret Bisson. (Simpkin, Marshall, and Co.)

In the brief notice of this comprehensive compilation, dedicated to the Duke and Duchess of Albany, which appeared in our last issue, we did not sufficiently emphasise the fact that the first volume was intended for boys, and the second for girls. The stupendous volumes indicate the laborious nature of the task which the author has undertaken and successfully carried out. It is asserted distinctly "that a mother, with such a book in her hand, would have the satisfaction of feeling herself capable of deciding definitely upon the serious question involved in the future education of her daughters." A sketch of the course of instruction for girls of two or three generations back serves as a basis of a comparison which shows how very different the condition of the next generation will be, if the present earnestness and zeal on the subject continue, and the work be carried out in a wise and efficient manner. "A little—very little—French, a little geography, a little arithmetic, a little writing, spelling, and needle-work, and a musical ability to rattle off 'The Battle of Prague,' were thought sufficient to justify the heads of seminaries in pronouncing their pupils sufficiently educated to take their places in society." The author's opinion of home education is given without any qualification. "It cannot be denied that with all its shortcomings home education is in many points far superior to any other, and with judicious care, may be made the very best. But the objection both then and now is the obtaining of a well-informed governess, who has received a sound education herself, and who knows how to impart it to others." As to private schools, he thinks that those having only a limited number of boarders offer the greatest social and educational advantages. Captain Bisson enters minutely into the dissection of rather difficult questions, such as these; and the introduction to Vol. II. presents a cheerful mode of imparting knowledge, which deserves trial and consideration.

Mr. Bacon, of 127 Strand, has published a large print map of the Soudan from official documents, which may be accepted as pretty accurate generally, but cannot be relied upon for the country due west of Suakim, and north of the ordinary caravan route from that place to Berber. We do not see the Wells or the head-quarters of Osman Digna marked, but the country south of Berber, along the Nile, and the Khartoum region is well defined. In a short time, this vast region will probably cease to exercise any influence over our general policy, but the shores of the Red Sea will always be interesting and attractive.

ADMIRAL WILLES.—A VINDICATION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Some time ago I read in your paper that,—"During the three years that Admiral Willes has held command of the China station, he has succeeded in giving offence not only to the officers of all foreign Navies serving on the station, but also to the principal European inhabitants and merchants with whom he has been brought into contact, and the advent of his successor is hailed with delight by all." Having served under the Admiral during a part of the three years to which you allude, I felt the injustice of your remarks, and felt sure that you were misinformed. As the Army and Navy Gazette can have no personal feeling in the matter, but simply wishes to record its judgment without partiality or bias on one side or the other, I beg to bring to your notice a leading article published in the Hong Kong Telegraph of Jan. 22, 1884, which gives a very fair expression of opinion on Admiral Willes's services during the time he has been Commander-in-Chief in China. The following is a copy of the article referred to:—"Vice-Admiral George Ommanney Willes, C.B., Commander-in-Chief of her Britannic Majesty's Naval squadron in China, must long since have realised the truth of Swift's well-known saying, that censure is the tax a man pays to the public for being eminent. We have not taken up our trusty goose-quill for the purpose of making ourselves the panegyrist of the gallant admiral; it is not even our intention to contend that his record of service is one that will achieve for his Excellency a niche in the Temple of Fame amongst Britain's great Naval heroes; but as we happen to know that Admiral Willes has been most unjustly maligned, abused, and vilified during the three years he has held the command of the British Squadron in Chinese waters, we feel bound, as a matter of justice and fair-play, to expose the hollowness, the utter worthlessness of the unscrupulous and anonymous charges impeaching his official character which have, from time to time, occupied so prominent a place in one or two of the home 'service' journals. In a copy of the Army and Navy Gazette, received by last mail, we read the following false, scandalous, and evidently inspired communiqué:—'During the three years that Admiral Willes has held command of the China station he has succeeded in giving offence not only to the officers of all foreign Navies serving on the station, but also the principal European inhabitants and merchants with whom he has been brought into contact, and the advent of his successor is hailed with delight by all.' There is not a vestige of truth in the assertion that Admiral Willes has given offence to the officers of all foreign Navies serving on the station; it is a mischievous and malicious invention to say that he has in like manner offended the principal European inhabitants and merchants with whom he has been brought into contact; and it is only one of those half-truths, which are far worse than a deliberate lie, to crown the feeble attempt at anonymous defamation, by stating that the advent of his successor 'is hailed with delight by all.' There is no earthly good to be gained by disguising the fact that Admiral Willes has not been so popular in the service as some of his less particular, less exacting predecessors. No useful purpose can be served by glossing over the self-evident truth that his Excellency's retirement and Admiral Dowell's advent will be hailed with delight by a number of Naval officers and dockyard officials, whose ideas of duty and discipline have been somewhat rudely shocked by the present Commander-in-Chief's exceedingly practical and business-like management of Naval matters generally. The whole history of the querulous complaints we have so frequently heard concerning Admiral Willes' régime on the China station is to be found in the foregoing sentence. Real men of action must be decided on what they will not do, and then they are able to act with vigour in what they ought to do. The management of our Naval affairs in China during the past three years has conclusively demonstrated that whether or not Admiral Willes be a man of eminent abilities, he has certainly established sufficient claims to be considered a man of strong character and of decided action. It has also been conclusively shown that he is an officer thoroughly competent to discharge the onerous and responsible duties entrusted to him by the Admiralty. When Admiral Willes strikes his flag in Hong Kong, he can confidently look for approbation from the country for the fulfilment of the trust reposed in him, on the merits of the good work he has carried out on this Naval station. He came here, and found chaos; he leaves everything in the most perfect condition,—a credit to himself and the service. Admiral Coote was, no doubt, a good sort of man, and his good-natured leniency contributed in no small measure to his popularity with his officers, especially with that race of heroes who consider the principal portion of a Naval officer's duty to be cricket, lawn-tennis, lady-killing, and some other less harmless amusements. But he was eminently unfitted in many important respects to properly carry out the extremely arduous labours connected with the management of our Naval affairs. Admiral Willes was made the sufferer for his predecessor's notorious neglect; but he has evolved regularity, discipline, and system out of hopeless confusion, and his successor will reap the advantage of his thankless exertions and receive the eulogiums he has so justly earned. What is the keystone to Admiral Willes's so-called unpopularity? It is easily explained. His Excellency is a sailor of the old school, a man of wonderful energy, and a strict disciplinarian. Fond of his profession and hard work, the Admiral appears to be of opinion that what is good enough for himself ought to be good enough for the officers and men under his command. Consequently, the ships of the Squadron have seen a vast deal more actual service at sea during the past three years than has been customary in these piping times of peace. The abolition of manifold abuses which had become the talk of the colony, and the introduction of numerous greatly-needed reforms into the Hong Kong Naval Dockyard may have affected the Admiral's personal popularity, but they also certainly conduced, and that in no minor degree, to the efficiency of the service. It may be urged that Admiral Willes carried his economical policy to extremes, and we do not say that such a charge might not be well founded; yet when it is admitted that an almost fabulous amount has been saved in coals, as compared with the expenditure under Admiral Coote and others, and a greatly increased efficiency has, nevertheless, been obtained both in men and ships, thinking persons will probably be disposed to consider that it is a policy which has answered well, and, judging from results, which might advantageously be emulated in other quarters. In one or two instances we have been unfortunate enough to differ from Admiral Willes on trifling matters of detail connected with the management of the British Squadron in these waters, and on such occasions have not permitted any feelings of delicacy or mock modesty to prevent our plainly telling that experienced and gallant officer what we consider his duty in the best interests of the Crown. For instance, when the people of Hong Kong awoke one fine morning, at a time when relations between Great Britain and France were rather 'strained' over Madagascar and other troubles, and found Admiral Meyer with a powerful French fleet in the men-of-war anchorage, while Admiral Willes and our Naval protectors were cooling their heels in the salubrious north, we did not hesitate to point out that his Excellency would be much better employed, under all circumstances, had he deferred his summer tour until the political atmosphere wore a somewhat brighter hue. The Admiral may have committed an error of judgment in being so far away from the base of his operations at such a time, although it must be confessed that he is fairly entitled to the benefit of the doubt even on that point. Some rabid partisans have attempted to saddle Admiral Willes with some measure of responsibility in connection with the riotous outbreak at Canton a few months back, in consequence of there being no gunboat at that point when the riot commenced; but for this, as was clearly proved long ago, the naval authorities were in no way to blame. In what other respects has the Commander-in-Chief incurred odium and unpopularity? He objected to his sailors running the risk of catching infectious diseases in Nagasaki, and so excited the ire of the disinterested tradesmen of that interesting seaport. In other ports, both in China and Japan, Admiral Willes may possibly have offended certain classes of people by presuming to think and act for himself in matters connected with the Squadron, and in using his judgment for the best interests of the Admiralty. And no doubt all these disinterested persons will rejoice when his Excellency departs for fresh fields and pastures new. It would be almost impertinent to enter into the question of the Admiral's social connections. So far as we can learn, he is greatly liked in the social circles of this colony, such as they are, and regarded in his own house as the soul of lavish hospitality. We know that his liberality in all cases of deserving charity, especially in connection with Naval men, has been generous in the extreme; we know that he is well spoken of by nearly all who have the pleasure of his acquaintance; we know that he is a steward of the Hong Kong Race Fund, and the first Admiral, in modern days at least, ever elected to that honour; and we trust that the Army and Navy Gazette, which has been so ready to disparage Admiral Willes, will have the fairness to note the above plain, unvarnished statement of facts." I think the above article speaks for itself, and having condemned the Admiral in your paper, it strikes me as only fair and above-board that you should give your readers an opportunity of seeing that there are two sides to this question, and that everybody does not agree with your correspondent on the subject.—I am, &c.,

GEORGE L. ATKINSON, Commander, R.N.

2 Bryanston Place, Bryanston Square, W., March 3.

[We have, as Captain Atkinson asks, and as we would under any circumstances have done, had we seen it, inserted the article from the Hong Kong Telegraph, though the terms which our uncourteous contemporary uses with regard to an expression of opinion, which may have been erroneous, but was not "inspired," in our journal, might have exempted us from any obligation to notice it. We know nothing about Admiral Willes, except what is known to the service, and if the Hong Kong Telegraph be right, the officers—"the race of heroes" alluded to and others who do not take the view of the Admiral's popularity with which the lavish hospitality of the Admiral and the other merits set forth have "inspired," the writer—are very much to be pitied. Certainly, it appears to be admitted he did offend a good many people, pour le bon motif, but we are far from saying that is a proof he was wrong in what he did.—ED. A. & N. G.]

NON-EXECUTIVE PAY IN THE NAVY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—It is unfortunate that any comparisons between the pay, rank, and position, social or otherwise, of officers serving in the different branches of the service should at any time be made by individuals anxious to show that their particular department is worse off or better off than another branch. Hence it is most deplorable that a writer in your issue of Dec. 29 should have seen fit to throw down the apple of discord, by contrasting a very optimistic view of the prospects of the Paymasters' branch with a doleful tale of the woes of the Engineers. There can be no real comparison, if only from the very nature of departmental duties, modes of entry, &c., differing in toto. A paper war appears to be the result of his action, for on one side "R.N." and "A Brehon" rush into the fray, while "An Engineer Officer" is quite as eager to meet and demolish their arguments. These unseemly encounters are, in the interests of both branches, much to be deprecated, as a good deal which had been best left alone can be said on each side, while no definite benefit to either can possibly be the result. I would, however, point out that "R.N." has undoubtedly overlooked the fact that in the table, paymasters' pay was not carried out beyond the age of 55, while he has hit two most serious blots in it,—firstly, the omission from it of the pay of inspectors and chief inspectors of machinery, explained somewhat lamely by engineer officers that as they are not "heads of departments on board ships, the same as paymasters," their pay was not inserted; and the more serious blunder (for statistical purposes) of comparing the length of service of all the chief engineers on the list with that of all the paymasters, to arrive at an average, it being well known that the majority of the paymasters, who have little or no junior service to count, have been indebted to the now-vanished system of death vacancies, whilst the other lucky ones have owed their rise to gallantry and war services. Why the engineer branch has not been equally fortunate, is no business of mine to inquire, but I must insist that to institute a fair comparison (if such a thing is possible, which I take the liberty of disbelieving), it is absolutely necessary to eliminate such officers of either branch as owed their early promotion to either cause, otherwise it is, undoubtedly, misleading and incorrect. Personally, I would draw attention to the fact that in the table published Dec. 29 last, 20 paymasters are represented as being of and above the seniority of 1856, while by the Navy List of Dec. 1, 1883, I can find but 12; and the writer does not appear to have been much happier with the chief engineers, only 11 being of and above the seniority of 1871, to 33 as shown by him. I must reiterate, and cannot too strongly do so, that there is no comparison possible between any two branches of the Naval service, and that any attempted ones are odious in the extreme, and that, if the object of the compiler was to demonstrate to an indifferent public that (as "An Engineer Officer" implied) "the engineer is the worst paid officer in the service," he surely might have chosen some department having a definite market value like his own, instead of painting in rose-coloured tints a stagnant and unfortunate branch of the service. What engineer and accountant officers should do, is to work hand in hand and all together, to have the great grievance common to both redressed (I allude to the present grossly unfair system of counting "junior service," a modification in which would be only just), and awake to the fact that recriminatory correspondence and imperfect comparisons have only the effect of making the enemies of both grin at the vain attempts of each to batter down a brick wall of obstinacy with their unhappy skulls.—I am, &c.,

PAYMASTER.

P.S.—Since writing the above, I have gone into the average ages of paymasters of various years, and I find that in every year I have analysed, the average age has been understated in the original table referred to, and in some cases as much as four years. As my basis of age is not conjectural, but taken from the actual dates of birth, I leave you to imagine how much of the rest of the table can be fully relied on, especially as to rates of pay actually received by each officer, &c.

EXAMINATIONS FOR PROMOTION.

"An Instructor" writes:—"The results of the last examinations for promotion have just been made known, and another batch of unfortunates have heard their doom. It may be presumed that no change will be made in the nature of these examinations, unless, as is probable, they become more difficult; but there is one point respecting those last held which we may hope will be altered on another occasion. I refer to the date on which the winter examinations are held. Last examination, in accordance with the Queen's Regulations on the subject, was held on Jan. 2, the day after New Year's Day. Surely this date must have been fixed by someone whose only idea of enjoyment is either to be examined themselves or to examine someone else, especially to examine someone else. Now, what does it entail? It makes it necessary for those about to be examined either to forego all the pleasures of the Christmas and New Year season, or to indulge in these at the expense of lessening their chance of passing most materially. Allow me to hope that you will use your powerful influence towards altering the date to, say, a week before Christmas at the next winter examination."

THE RECRUITING OF 1883.

The Annual Report of Major-Gen. Bulwer, C.B., the Inspector-General of Recruiting, contains, as usual, full details of the causes of the increase and decrease of the Army during the past year. As is well known, the conditions of enlistment were materially changed. In the month of April, the minimum age at which recruits became eligible for the Regular Forces was virtually restored to 18 years, instead of 19, to which latter limit it had been raised in 1881. This applied to the whole service. Further on, in June, important changes were sanctioned in the case of certain branches. Thus, in the Artillery, the chest measurement of gunners was reduced from 35 in. to 34 in. In the Infantry of the Line, in cases where the officer commanding the recruiting district and the medical officer were jointly agreed, sanction was given to finally approve men between 5 ft. 3 in. and 5 ft. 4 in. in height, and with a chest measurement of from 33 in. to 34 in., provided they appeared likely to make efficient soldiers. Men after completing three years were allowed to extend their colour service to 12 years, with the privilege of re-engaging in their last year for a second period, making 21 years in all, with pension rights. A bounty was offered to men belonging to regiments in India with more than three and less than seven years' service to prolong their stay with the colours to 12 years. In the Foot Guards the standard of height was lowered from 5 ft. 8 in. to 5 ft. 7 in. An option similar to that in the Line was given to men to re-engage, so as to complete 12 and ultimately 21 years; and a new kind of enlistment was instituted, under which men might engage for three years with the colours and nine in the Reserve, with the choice at any time within the three years of completing seven years, or subsequently 12 years, and 21 years with the colours.

The effect of these changes upon the recruiting of the Regular Army was very great. The total number of recruits, which had been 25,622 in 1880, 26,258 in 1881, and (no doubt in consequence of the new restrictions) so low as 23,802 in 1882, rose to 33,096 in 1883. Most of the chief branches of the service shared in this great increase. Comparing 1882 with 1883, the Cavalry sprang from 2,057 to 3,036; the Foot Guards from 626 to 1,727; and the Infantry of the Line from 15,279 to 22,464; the Artillery showing but a slight increase, from 3,983 to 4,022. These figures do not, however, fairly represent the contrast of the results of the new changes. For during the first four months of the year the old and restricted conditions of service were more or less in operation. Speaking roughly, recruits were obtained at the rate of 2,000 a month in 1882 and the first four months of 1883, while since that time they have been coming in at the rate of over 3,000 a month, and they are now joining at the rate of 800 a week. The increase has therefore exceeded 50 per cent. Further illustration of the popularity of the Army under the new and more elastic conditions may be drawn from the numbers offering to join the service. In 1880 they were 46,108; in 1881, 47,444; in 1882, 45,423; while in 1883 they amounted to 58,273. These numbers are unprecedented in time of peace. It is satisfactory to learn that all districts have contributed to the increase, and that "recruiting is beginning to improve again in Ireland," owing, no doubt, to the revival of the Irish Militia as an active force.

The most noticeable fact connected with this increase relates to the Brigade of Guards, where by far the largest option as to the duration of his period of active service is given to the intending soldier. In the return it appears that the recruits for the Guards have increased threefold —from 626 to 1,727. But it would be more correct to say that the yield has been fully quadrupled—that is to say, from 626 a year to 2,500, counting from last June, when the new conditions took effect; so that whereas on May 1 the Brigade of Guards was 940 below its establishment, it wanted but 252 men to complete on Jan. 1.

Gratifying and instructive as are these results, they have not yet sufficed to fill the gaps in our ranks, mainly caused by the measures of 1881. Upon this important point the Inspector-General observes:—"It was calculated by the actuaries that the number of recruits required to meet the wants of 1883, including the abnormal deficit, would be 39,242. The alterations alluded to above, to stimulate recruiting, were not adopted till April, and, therefore, notwithstanding the successful recruiting, the total numbers required last year have not been obtained. The actual deficit of Jan. 1 this year was 7,627 non-commissioned officers and men. With a fixed Parliamentary establishment there will always be a nominal deficit at this period of the year, owing to the discharge to the Reserve of men who have begun to arrive from India, and whose places can only be filled gradually by the process of recruiting. After careful consideration of the returns rendered, it has been calculated that the requirements of the Army, at the present establishment, to meet the normal want of 1884 will be 30,700. This, coupled with the deficiency of last year mentioned above of 7,627, will bring the total number required up to 38,327, or a weekly average of about 737 men. Since the beginning of the year the weekly average has been over 800, and should recruiting continue to be as successful as hitherto, there is every reason to hope that the numbers required will be obtained."

The facts above quoted do not admit of controversy. Unprecedentedly large numbers of soldiers of some sort have been and are being obtained. That is undeniable. Not so, however, the question of their quality and physique. Bearing in mind what we are frequently told by the older race of officers regarding the puny immaturity of the British recruit of the day, and the modifications in the standard restored last year, the question of physique becomes of the first importance. It would certainly seem that unfit youths are not permitted to pass into the service from any want of care on the part of the superintending or the medical officers. The rejections show this, for they are but inconsiderably less in proportion than those of former years. For each year since 1880 this proportion is respectively, per 1,000, 407, 432, 424, and 399. Upon this point, however, the remarks of the Inspector-General are so valuable that we must quote them in extenso:—"The discretionary latitude given to medical officers of districts and commanding officers during the past year allowed them to pass men between 18 and 19 years of age, if likely to make efficient soldiers, for any branch of the service; and further, to take men for the infantry between 33 and 34 in. in chest measurement, and between 5 ft. 3 in. and 5 ft. 4 in. in height, who, in their opinion, were also likely to make efficient soldiers. The number of men admitted under this discretionary power cannot be given exactly yet, but, roughly stated, it may be said that about 10,000 have been so taken, of which about 7,000 were between 18 and 19 years of age. As stated before, however, I have no reason to believe that this discretionary power has, as a rule, been exercised otherwise than with both judgment and care, and, by means of it, every man who offered himself during the past eight months whose condition held out a good prospect of his becoming an efficient soldier has been passed into the service. The fact must not be lost sight of that until very recently the age of 18, and the chest measurement of 33 in., were the minimum fixed standard at which, if found qualified, men were finally approved, and necessarily passed into the service. During 1883 final approval at this standard depended on the joint assent of the commanding officer and medical officer. The reports of the general officers commanding and officers commanding regiments, batteries, and battalions are on the whole favourable. Some commanding officers speak in most satisfactory terms of their recruits, others complain that the men are in some instances young, and in some under the minimum standard required. With regard to the age, there is no doubt that lads at the age of 18 are young, and require time to develope, but it is a fault on the right side. It is hardly fair to judge of these men, or of the men slightly under the minimum standard, until it is seen how they develope. It is sometimes stated that some of the men are younger than they profess to be. Though there are no doubt cases of this sort, yet where there is no means of actually testing the age the man gives on attestation, it becomes a matter of opinion. It is safer to be guided by the medical judgment than by any other. Again, though it is necessary to have a minimum standard, there are many cases in which men slightly under the standard will in reality become better men than some others over the standard. For this reason it is desirable that, whatever standard is fixed, some discretionary power should be given jointly to the commanding officers and medical officers on the spot. These officers are not infallible, but they are of standing and experience, and are certainly not likely to pass men wilfully into the service who in their opinion will not with time become efficient soldiers. It is difficult to deal with generalities, but in all cases in which complaints of individual recruits are brought to notice a medical board is held and due investigation made, with a view to discharging those who are actually unfit. It seems to me but just and fair, not only to those commanding officers and medical officers who are intrusted with carrying out recruiting throughout the country, but also to the great body of recruits themselves, to treat every man who after careful examination has been passed into the service as a good man, or in a fair way of becoming so, until there is evidence to the contrary."

The statistical tables embodied in the Report more than justify the general conclusions thus drawn. The total number of recruits objected to by commanding officers during the year was 379. The remarks of the general officers commanding districts upon the recruits inspected by them are thus epitomised:—In the Northern District, Cavalry, "In all respects satisfactory;" Artillery, "Not so good as in former years; rather too young;" Infantry, "Most of the recruits I inspected were enlisted before the relaxation of the standard." In the Western District, the remark is "Fair;" in the Southern, "Satisfactory;" Chatham, "Generally of good physique;" South-Eastern, "Satisfactory, especially for Cavalry;" Woolwich, "Satisfactory, on the whole;" Aldershot, "In most cases fair, but many apparently younger than stated;" Scotland, "Satisfactory, on the whole; young, but improving;" Jersey, "Young, but likely to make efficient soldiers;" Dublin District, "Very fair, except for 1st Batn. King's Royal Rifle Corps;" Belfast District, "Generally good;" Cork District, "Quite as satisfactory as those of former years." No reports appear to have been made from the Eastern or Home Districts, nor from Guernsey—a fact to be regretted, more especially in the case of the Home District, where information as to the effect of the relaxation upon the Brigade of Guards would have possessed much interest. There are, however, exports from all the regimental and auxiliary artillery districts upon many points of interest relating to recruiting, so far as they bear upon the physique of the recruit. We save gone through them, and find the following results:—In 33 cases the reports are very favourable, in 27 more they are also favourable, but with here and there a qualification, such as, "Small, but stoutly built;" "Small, but healthy;" "Fair physique, though young." In five regimental districts the description may be called indifferent. Thus, in the 5th, "Physique moderate;" in the 13th, "Physique not so good;" in the 22nd, "Physique too small for carrying full kit;" and in the 38th and 64th, "Indifferent" is the expression. In 11 cases the reports are still less satisfactory. In the 7th, 57th, and 91st the remark is, "Standard too low;" in the 8th and 40th, 15th and 28th, "Physique poor;" in the 33rd, "Physique fallen off;" and in the 50th, 51st, and 65th, "Physique inferior." It is to be noted that the proportion of men discharged as invalids in their first year's service was in the five years preceding 1883, 13·8, while in that year it was but 8·8 per 1,000; and it is somewhat remarkable that a slight majority were found among those who had enlisted at 20 years and upwards. We have dealt at such length with this all-important question of physique, that we are enabled only to glance slightly at some of the other interesting points which are dwelt upon in the report. The tendency towards localisation seems to be developing; thus it is noted that 43 districts have been able to supply their regiments with upwards of 50 per cent. of their recruits, and 15 of these have supplied upwards of 80 per cent. of the numbers required from their own sources. It also appears that the number serving in each infantry regiment who were born in the regimental district to which their regiment belongs have in some cases considerably increased. Of the Militiamen (12,450) who volunteered for the Regulars, 6,389, or 51 per cent., joined the local regiments. It is a very noticeable circumstance that the number of enrolled Volunteers enlisted in the Army from the regimental districts, as compared with previous years, has increased from 405 in 1881, and 680 in 1882, to 1,392. Upon this fact Gen. Bulwer remarks:—"The Volunteer force is essentially national and popular, and the more men it contributes to the Regular Army, the more the Army will be known and appreciated by all classes."

The option given to men to re-engage—in fact, to turn their short service into long service, as it existed in the pre-Cardwell days—does not, as yet at least, seem to have been largely adopted. In India, indeed, where a large bounty (120 rupees) was offered, 6,335 men prolonged their service; but where this exceptional inducement did not exist, only 929 men at home and 143 in the Colonies took advantage of the privilege. This appears to be a fair measure of what may be expected in the future, and Gen. Bulwer thinks it is "not unreasonable to suppose that the great bulk of men who have not risen above the rank of private, and who probably do not wish to rise, will, as a rule, prefer, on the completion of their colour service, to take their deferred pay, and try their chance in civil life, instead of remaining in the ranks." It may, perhaps, be taken as a sign that a long military career is generally distasteful, that the Guardsmen, who have the option of a very short (three years) or a long term of colour service, have almost unanimously chosen the former. Possibly the shortening of the term may have something to do with the decrease in the number of desertions, which is described as the smallest since 1870. It is satisfactory to note that the number of discharges for misconduct has also decreased.

The 1st-Class Army Reserve numbered 34,589 men on Jan. 1, and the net estimated increase during the year would be about 8,000. This does not include men entering the newly-formed Supplemental Reserve, of whom a large number may be expected to continue their liability to military service.

Regarding the Militia, we have only space to say that the increase in the rate of recruiting for the year appears to correspond very closely with that in the Regulars. Between the trainings of 1882 and 1883 the number was 32,049, as against 23,432 and 26,120 in the preceding years respectively. This is exclusive of re-enlisted men; and although the increase is, to a considerable extent, accounted for by the reopening of Militia recruiting in Ireland, the increase in Great Britain itself is substantial. The quality of the recruits, as reported upon by the inspecting officers, is summarised thus—24 very good or very satisfactory, 92 good or satisfactory, 34 very fair or fair, one "promising set," one moderate, six indifferent, and six "other causes." The desertions from the Militia have largely increased, from 6,942 in 1882, to 11,330 in 1883. This is a fact much to be lamented, but it would appear that the new system of drilling men on enlistment has had a favourable effect as regards the number of absentees from recruit drill and first training. But the effect of the change cannot yet be fairly estimated, and there can be no question that there is much difference of opinion regarding its effects among competent judges.

EXPLOSION OF A CARCASE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—I have only just read, in the Army and Navy Gazette of the 19th ult., the remarks on the accident at Woolwich Arsenal caused by the explosion of a carcase shell. I was present when the somewhat similar accident to which reference is made in your article took place, during an inspection, at the Royal Marine Artillery fire-barn, on Southsea Common; and although then, as now the accident was pronounced to be unaccountable, it is not difficult to show that it was perfectly capable of explanation. The laboratory serjeant, doubtless, wishing to produce a more startling effect than usual with a smoke-ball, substituted for the ordinary paper casing a 13-in. iron shell. The composition being filled in moist, with alternate layers of powder (for the purpose of clearing the fuze-hole from the débris of the burnt composition), naturally contracted in drying, and so left a space between it and the inner surface of the shell, whilst it gradually hardened into a substance much resembling lava. When the priming was lighted, the fire, instead of igniting the composition, flashed round the vacant space, and exploded the several blowing charges, when the resistance offered by the hardened composition, which could only escape by the fuze-hole, being greater than that of the shell itself, a violent explosion was the consequence, attended with the melancholy results you have mentioned. In this case, the fragments showed that the walls of the shell had been reduced to a minimum of strength by several, large, pear-shaped cavities hidden within its structure.—I am, &c., G. G. ALEXANDER, Nervi, Italy, March 3. Major-General, late R.M.A.

"Checkmate" writes:—"Would you kindly allow me space to give a hint to officers of regiments which would appear, just at this time of deep distrust, to be appropriate? I would strongly recommend every regiment to place its plate in the hands of trustees, to be selected from old officers of the regiment, in order to prevent further robbery and spoliation. This plan has already been commenced to my knowledge, and I would suggest its adoption by every regiment in the service, without delay."

London Amusements.

Signor Salvini, supported by his own Italian company, would have been perhaps seen and heard to much greater advantage at a theatre smaller than COVENT GARDEN, but his magnificent voice and his intelligent rendering of every character he assumes, would secure the admiration of all earnest students of the dramatic art under even less favourable circumstances. His impersonation of King Lear, though deficient in pathos, was replete with proofs of a scholarly study of the Shakespearian text, and in some passages his power was to be recognised as strongly marked as in his forcible embodiment of Othello. On Friday and this evening (Saturday), the great Italian tragedian added to his repertory "La Morte Civile" and "Macbeth," both performances being novelties in England. This engagement will terminate on April 5.

"Breaking a Butterfly," at the PRINCE'S THEATRE, is a free adaptation by Messrs. Henry A. Jones and Henry Herman of the Danish play of "Norah," by Hendrik Ibsen. The version was prepared for Madame Modjeska, whose impersonation might have given the piece a greater popularity than it is now likely to attain. Miss Lingard plays with intelligence the girlish wife of the bank manager, whose position is imperilled by the thoughtless and almost innocent forgery of his young spouse. Mr. Kyrle Bellew distinguishes himself by showing some unsuspected dramatic power as her self-sacrificing husband; and Mr. G. W. Anson does his best with a part quite out of his usual line. As a villainous clerk, Mr. Beerbohm Tree is not very appropriately placed, and Miss Helen Mathews and Mrs. Leigh Murray have only shadowy characters allotted to them. The second act is most dramatically effective, but it is hardly likely that the play, though possessing many features of interest, will command the sustained attention of the playgoing public for any lengthy period.

At the GAIETY, a slight farce called "Polly's Birthday," ascribed to Mr. Charles Fawcett, now precedes Mr. F. C. Burnand's amusing three-act burlesque drama of "Camaralzaman." A pretty laundress, who with three lovers chooses the youngest one for her husband, is the chief personage in this airy trifle, and her sparkling song, excellently rendered by Miss Fanny Robino, becomes the prominent feature of this unpretentious prelude. Other parts are amusingly sustained by Mr. Arthur Williams, Mr. Dallas, and Mr. Monkhouse, but scanty opportunities are afforded them of displaying the humorous powers they are severally known to possess.

To the GLOBE has been transferred Mr. G. R. Sims's lengthy farce of "The Member for Slocum," originally brought out at the Royalty. Mr. Shine is now the embarrassed Onesimus Epps, and with Miss Fanny Brough as Arethusa, Miss Carlotta Leclerq as Mrs. Jeffs, and the other characters entrusted to competent hands, the piece goes off in its present form with success.

A three-act farcical comedy, called "Nita's First," was tentatively performed on Tuesday afternoon at the NOVELTY THEATRE. There is some humour, though not of a very refined kind, in the piece, written by Mr. T. G. Warren, but the plot, bearing upon the mysterious parentage of a baby, is curiously similar to that of "Confusion," now running such a successful career at the Vaudeville. Mr. Charles Groves, Miss Fanny Brough, and Miss Victor have the best parts assigned them, but it must be added Mr. Warren, the author, Miss Susie Vaughan, Miss Clara Jecks, and Miss Stella Brereton helped very successfully to ensure for the entertainment a favourable reception.

The OLYMPIC has been closed during the week to prepare for a revival of "The Two Orphans" on Monday next. The COURT THEATRE was closed on Wednesday night to allow of a dress rehearsal of Mr. W. S. Gilbert's revived three-act drama of "Dan'l Druce," in which Mr. Hermann Vezin will resume his original part, and Miss Fortescue will appear in a more exacting character than was associated with her engagement at the Savoy Theatre.

The new EMPIRE THEATRE in Leicester Square will be opened on Easter Monday with the opera bouffe of "Chilpéric." The company will include Mr. Herbert Standing, Mr. J. P. Powers, and Mdlle. Camille D'Arville. M. Bertrand superintends the ballet department.

The Standard understands that the Secretary of State for War has expressed to Lieut.-Gen. F. Stephenson, C.B., commanding the Army of Occupation in Egypt, his entire satisfaction with the expeditious manner in which the regiments detailed for duty under Major-Gen. Sir G. Graham were dispatched from Cairo to Suakim. Special commendation is accorded to Major-Gen. the Hon. J. C. Dormer, C.B., Chief of the Staff at Cairo, and to Surg.-Gen. J. Irvine, M.D., principal medical officer in Egypt, for their services in this direction.

THE publication of the Report of the Inspector-General of Recruiting for the year 1883 has been anticipated with anxiety, on account of the very contradictory statements that have been made as to the state of the Army. Lord Morley, in answering a question put to him by Lord Galloway in the House of Lords some time ago, stated that General Bulwer's report would, when it appeared, dispel all doubts as to the state of the Army. That it will do this is pretty evident, but not in the way Lord Morley expected. The two great requirements of Armies, of course, are men and organisation. With the question of organisation we have not now to deal; the subject treated upon in the Report before us is that of men. We say that the public have looked forward with anxiety to the issue of the present Report. We wish we could add that the Report is of a nature to relieve that anxiety. General Bulwer starts by giving a table showing the progress made in the field of recruiting since 1880. The numbers obtained have been successively 26,622 in 1880, 26,258 in 1881, 23,802 in 1882, and 33,096 in 1883. "This," it is pointed out, "is the largest number of recruits which have been raised in any one year in time of peace, and it will be seen that nearly every branch of the service has been benefited by the increase of numbers." Now, in face of such statistics and arguments, how, it will be contended, can anybody be so foolish as to assert that our present system of enlistment is not the success that its originators and supporters claim for it. At first sight, it will appear as though the case of the "pessimists," "grumblers," "discontented few," or whatever name they may be called by, was clean played-out. But figures are at all times misleading, and in the present instance they certainly must not be relied upon too implicitly. "Thirty-three thousand men in one year," says the Adjutant-General, "and yet the 'pessimists' are not happy!" But it is as well for us to remember who the "pessimists" referred to are. They are the whole body of General, Staff, and Regimental Officers. And the contented ones,—who are they? The officers charged with administering the affairs of the Army, who have been for years past speaking and writing in favour of our present system, and representing that system to be the acme of perfection. Who are most likely to speak without prejudice? To such a query there can be but one reply. To begin with, General Bulwer is somewhat uncertain as to what the establishment of the Army really is. The General gives the deficit on January 1, 1884, as 7,627 men, whilst the total strength of the Army on that date is shown on another page to be 173,529. Now, the establishment voted by Parliament, as provided in the Army Estimates for 1883-84, is 183,760 non-commissioned officers and men. From this it is obvious that the deficiency is not 7,627 men, as General Bulwer makes out, but 10,231. It will be said, no doubt, that it is only a difference of 2,604 men, and that the number is not a very large one. True, but it is as well to be accurate in an official document. Speaking a fortnight ago at Fishmongers' Hall, the Adjutant-General took pains to impress upon his hearers that it did not matter in the least to what year the figures he had quoted on a previous occasion referred, so long as they were figures, and fairly represented the stamp of men who were entering the ranks of the Army. Those who take the trouble to peruse the latest Recruiting Report will find on page 2 some such sentences as the following:—"The only change made during the year in the conditions of enlistment for service in the Cavalry of the Line, has been the special permission given to enlist men between 18 and 19." "In April, special permission was given to enlist men between 18 and 19 for the Royal Artillery, and in June the chest-measurement for gunners was reduced from 35 in. to 34 in." "The considerable deficiency in the Brigade of Guards led to special measures being adopted. In April, permission was given to take eligible men between 18 and 19. In June, the standard was reduced from 5 ft. 8 in. to 5 ft. 7 in." "To meet the exceptional requirements for the Infantry, special measures had to be taken, and in cases where the officers commanding the recruiting districts and the Medical officers were jointly agreed, sanction was given to finally approve men between 5 ft. 3 in. and 5 ft. 4 in. in height, and with a chest measurement of 33 in. to 34 in., provided they appeared likely to make efficient soldiers." It is clear from the above quotations that, far from it not mattering what year the figures in question referred to, it made all the difference in the world. The fact is not disguised by General Bulwer that the standard of age and chest measurement was reduced in 1883, because men were not forthcoming of the stamp obtained in 1882. Lord Wolseley gave the 33,000 recruits obtained in 1883, the benefit of the higher standard of height and physique of the much smaller number secured under different circumstances in 1882. Strange to say, in the report before us, we look in vain for any particulars as to the physical fitness of the men enrolled during 1883. This may be an unintentional omission, but as Lord Morley, when apologising for Lord Wolseley in the House of Lords, promised that these details should be furnished, it seems like a breach of faith to withhold them. Whilst on the subject, it may be as well to point out that Lord Morley lately excused a speech of the Adjutant-General, on the ground that the British soldier had been calumniated,—had been called a boy, a weakling, and a stripling; whereas, in Lord Morley's opinion, he was every inch a man. Hence, Lord Wolseley had done well in defending him against his calumniators. But was Lord Morley right in saying that individuals over 18 years of age, only 5 ft. 3 in. in height, and 33 in. round the chest, are men capable of doing men's work? If so, what is looked upon as a man in the Army is only regarded, strange to say, as a boy in the Navy, for the Admiralty are now advertising for healthy boys, sixteen to sixteen and a half years of age, measuring 5 ft. 3½ in. in height and 32½ in. round the chest, to be rated ordinary seamen when eighteen years of age. Until these boys have reached that age, they for the most of the time remain on board the training-ships, and are only called upon to do boys' work. The boys now being taken for the Army as men, though two years older than the boys who are entered for the Navy, do not actually come up to them in physique. The so-called man is enlisted for the Army at eighteen, when only 5 ft. 3 in. The boy for the Navy must, at sixteen years of age, be 5 ft. 3½ in. The so-called man must be 33 in. round the chest; the boy, two years, or two years and a half, younger, 32½ in. Why should Lord Morley take offence at our recruits being called boys? The Lords of the Admiralty would feel mortally offended if their boys were called men, and yet they are twice the men for actual fighting purposes which the "Morley-Wolseley soldier men" are. These are facts which the advocates of boy-soldiers would do well to ponder over, for the question may some day be asked, "When is a man not a man?" A great deal of capital has been sought to be made out of the 33,000 fish brought by one means or another into the military net during the last twelve months; but on examination this bright and encouraging picture presents its dark side. We have shown above of what sort of stuff the "men" are made. And even to secure these sweepings—for such they are—the Militia has had to be drawn upon to the extent of 12,450. Indeed, the drain on the Militia is acknowledged by General Bulwer to be "very large." The document is the most convincing proof that, in a military sense, we are in a most unsatisfactory state, and that no amount of minor chopping and changing will repair the injury that has been done, by the tinkerings to which the Army has been subjected during the last thirteen years.

LAST year, Commodore Simpson and Captain Matthews, of the United States Navy, and Colonels Crispin and Baylord, of the Army, with Lieutenant Jacques, of the United States Navy, as secretary, visited this country, went through its arsenals and gun factories, and were initiated in all the details of our ordnance system by officials of the Department of Ordnance and Stores at the War Office, and by Admiralty officials at our Dockyards. They then visited France, Germany, Russia, and Italy, returned to the United States, and prepared their report, which has been recently presented to the House of Representatives. The American Board arrived at the conclusion that the system in England and in Russia is not to be recommended. In England they assert that all ordnance matters are in the hands of a few civilians, and artillery officers, their friends; and that these form a ring, into which it is next to impossible for an outsider to penetrate. With regard to the German system, the members of the Board are of opinion that the works of Mr. Krupp at Essen are practically the sole source of supply. With regard to France, the members of the Board are unanimous in their opinion that the present practice in that country is theoretically perfect, and has proved to be practically efficient. Under all these circumstances, the members of the Board accept the French ordnance system as the proper one for imitation, and they recommend its adoption by the Government of the United States, and that in the following manner:—They suggest that if Congress shall conclude to arm the country, a certain sum should be fixed as a permanent yearly appropriation to be expended in the purchase of steel. They do not recommend the establishment of a Government foundry, properly so called, but advise that steel manufacturers should be called upon to provide the material, which would be worked up in two gun factories—one for the Navy and one for the Army—under the control of the Government.

THE death of Admiral Sir Sydney Dacres, following so closely on that of Vice-Admiral Glyn, brings Vice-Admiral Sir Francis M'Clintock on the Full Admirals' List. Rear-Admiral Charles L. Waddilove shifts his flag to the fore, and Captain George Tryon, C.B., A.D.C., is advanced to flag-rank. These death vacancies will cause the following alterations in the promotions due to "age retirements." On April 1, when Rear-Admiral H. S. Hillyar retires, Vice-Admiral Somerset will shift his flag to the fore, and Captain Heneage will attain flag-rank. Admiral Sir F. L. M'Clintock will have to retire on July 8, when Vice-Admiral the Lord John Hay will shift his flag to the main, and Rear-Admiral Sir William Hewett, V.C., his to the fore, Captain Sir Walter Hunt Grubbe advancing to flag-rank. On October 19, Admiral Sir R. Macdonald retires, and Vice-Admiral E. Bridges Rice, Rear-Admiral Algernon Lyons, and Captain John Rowley are promoted. Admiral Henry Chads, if not previously promoted to Admiral of the Fleet, will be retired on October 27, when Vice-Admiral Augustus Phillimore, Rear-Admiral Thomas Brandreth, and Captain Richard Wells will be promoted. Admiral E. Bridges Rice will retire on October 30, when Vice-Admiral G. O. Willes, Rear-Admiral T. B. Lethbridge, and Captain Thomas le Hunte Ward will be promoted, leaving Captain William Arthur senior Captain of the Navy, to be advanced to flag rank on March 27, 1885, on Admiral Sir E. Inglefield retiring, or sooner, should another unexpected vacancy occur.

Commander Rolfe distinguished himself the night before the fight, as, according to the special correspondent of the Daily Telegraph,—"About 11 o'clock, Commander Rolfe, having got permission, stole out of the camp alone to observe the enemy. He returned about midnight, and reported having seen Arab pickets a mile and a half in front. He passed two of their dead by our shells, and saw six men asleep. Creeping among the bushes to the top of the ridge, he was able to see the enemy's camp fires in the hollow close beside the wells." This was performing dangerous work indeed. When we were blockading Whydah, in 1876, he left the Active with Commodore Hewett's secretary, and the two made their way through swamp and lagoon to Lagos, with a view to ascertaining whether, in the event of our going to war with Dahomey, it would be possible to take that country in flank. Commander Rolfe's recent exploring trip in the Soudan was of an even more venturesome nature.

The replies made in Parliament to the questions put to the Government regarding the treatment of the Marine Battalion sent to Malta in the Poonah, and there trans-shipped to the Gilsland for conveyance to Alexandria, as detailed in our last issue, will be found in another column. The authorities required a ship to carry "somebody," and to effect this they went into the market, and as a result chartered the Gilsland. That charter was, no doubt, in conformity with Government precedent, subject to the usual pains and penalties, and requiring the usual fittings, &c., to be put in for arms, officers' accommodation, &c. Another part of the charter says that she shall be inspected and finally approved of by a Board, consisting of Naval and Military officers, who shall report upon her, a copy of which report is to be forwarded to the Director of the Transport Service at the Admiralty. Now, was the Gilsland inspected; and if so, what was the report? And, secondly, if she was not inspected, she ought to have been. This, however, is only one point. When hired by the authorities, was she actually utilised by the authorities without any troop fittings whatever, i.e., directly after returning from some coal-carrying trip or cattle-carrying cruise? If so the treatment is aggravated. Lord Lewisham will not rest satisfied with the reply which was given him, and which was not to the point, and uncourteous, and will no doubt return to the charge after the Admiralty refusing to reply when Captain Price rose and called for the "Report on the Gilsland," Mr. Campbell Bannerman's silence proving that there has been neglect of duty in the case.

The Italian Minister of Marine has decided to build all ships and torpedo-boats in Italy. He has ordered the construction of 18 new torpedo-vessels capable of navigating the high seas, to have a mean speed of 21 knots an hour, and carry coal to enable them to keep the sea. For some time past over 1,500 workmen have been employed day and night on the Lepanto, and it is hoped to have this ship in commission within the next two years. A new dock, 250 metres long, is to be built at Spezzia.

A correspondent states:—"A good deal of scandal and some surprise have been occasioned at one of the garrisons where the Royal Marines are stationed at the circumstances under which a Field Officer of that corps has recently been placed on the Retired List. The scandal was caused by the somewhat unusual necessity which existed for calling in the barrack guard to interfere in the matrimonial squabbles between this officer and his spouse. Of course, an affair of this nature could not be hushed up, and the officer in question was requested by his Colonel to send in his papers. But how to do it? Naturally he did not wish to resign; he was not eligible for retirement. He was, therefore, sent to the adjacent Naval hospital for medical survey; but, apparently, the Principal Medical Officer there did not sufficiently grasp the salient points of the case, as the officer was found medically fit to 'go anywhere and do anything.' Strange to relate, about a fortnight after this a notice appeared in the Gazette, to the deep astonishment of the officer who had surveyed him, that he had been placed on the Retired List, 'having been found medically unfit for further service.' I think, in the interests of the service, that if this officer had been guilty of an act to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, he should either have been tried by court-martial, or compelled to resign, instead of being 'shelved' upon grounds which had no existence in fact."

Captain Colomb's Naval War-game is again all the rage at St. Petersburg and Cronstadt. Several clubs assemble twice a week to play the game. It is significant that in nearly every instance the enemy is an English squadron, and the names of vessels and officers taken from our Navy List.

We are not aware whether the operations in Egypt have disarranged the Admiralty programme respecting the reliefs of ships on foreign stations; it certainly ought not to have, because the addition to the Naval force in Egyptian waters has been an infinitesimal one. We would especially direct the attention of their Lordships to the Tourmaline, which was commissioned as far back as September, 1880, and for which, up to the present time, no relief has even been named. This vessel is at present serving in the East Indies, a station which is not regarded by even the most sanguine Naval officer as the most salubrious one, and it would therefore seem desirable to hasten forward another corvette to take her place, as even were one commissioned immediately, she must complete more than four years in commission. It is this insensibility on the part of the Admiralty to the comfort and happiness of both officers and men which renders the Naval service unpopular on board ship, whether it be in the ward-room or on the lower deck.

The largest German fleet ever witnessed will be assembled in the harbour of Zoppot, near Dantzig, on June 30. On this occasion 28 ships-of-war will assemble. In addition to the large armour-clads, there will be four corvettes, four gun-vessels, eight torpedo-boats, and two despatch boats. The corvettes Blücher, Hansa, Vineta, Elisabeth, and Nymphe, the old sailing frigate Niobe, the brigs Rover and Undine, the gunboat Hay, and the torpedo-vessel Ulan will also take part in the cruise. The German Government have at the present moment stationed in China the men-of-war Prinz Adalbert, Stosch, Leipzig, Iltis, Nautilus, and Wolf; the Freya, Albatrosz, and Hyena in Australia, and the Marie at Panama.

The severe protective tariff of Russia necessitates the employment of 20 steamers and 112 sailing cutters in the Baltic Sea to keep down the contraband trade.

In the Dominion Parliament, much attention is being paid just now to the consideration of the question of the navigation of Hudson's Bay, which, at certain periods of the year, is anything but safe to navigate. Hence Mr. Royal moved on February 11 for the appointment of a Select Committee to consider the advisability of fitting out a surveying expedition, as there is strong evidence to prove that Hudson's Bay is navigable for from three to five months of the year. The debate lasted some time, most of the speakers being in favour of Mr. Royal's motion, and Sir John Macdonald, fully recognising on behalf of the Dominion Government the importance of the subject, assented to the appointment of the Select Committee. He further stated that his Government were already considering the advisability of sending a vessel this spring to examine the Straits. He was of opinion that a steamer should be fitted out and allowed to winter in the Bay, so that when frozen in, its crew could start to different points of the coast to make investigations. The undertaking will be one of some expense, but there is no doubt that the Dominion Parliament will vote the money, when the Admiralty will most probably be applied to for the loan of additional hydrographic surveyors.

The German Admiralty have resolved to proceed at once with the introduction of submarine torpedo batteries for coast defence, the trials recently made having given satisfaction. A sum of 857,000 marks is the first instalment for which Parliament will be asked. At present, it is only the intention to protect the shores of the Baltic in this way; the mouths of the Jade and the Elbe are to follow. The originator of the scheme is Captain Count Schack, and the first battery, placed in the mouth of the Kieler Förde, and with which the trials were made, was supplied by the well-known firm of explosives manufacturers, Messrs. Schwartzkopf, of Berlin. The following is an outline of the construction of the batteries:—Two pontoons, similar to those used by pioneers for floating bridges, are connected by an arched framework formed of the beds for from four to six torpedoes, and carrying a platform for the men serving the battery. The torpedoes used are ordinary, self-acting, fish torpedoes; are held down in their beds by their own weight also under water, and are connected by wires with a station of observation on shore. The battery is towed out to the position where it is to be placed, sunk by opening valves in the pontoons, after the manner of floating docks, and secured taut by four anchor chains, several feet above the bottom, according to the depth of the water. The torpedo batteries are to serve only defensive purposes, by closing entrances to harbours, estuaries, &c. Their armament is designed to await an enemy, and they thus somewhat resemble land mines. On a hostile vessel approaching, the torpedo is set in motion by electricity, and launched against it, the steering apparatus having been adjusted before sinking the battery. As will easily be understood, the adjustment of the apparatus is liable to be disturbed from various causes, and the greatest possible care has to be exercised in setting it. By themselves, torpedo batteries are not efficient protection; but their moral effect must be very great.

That the custom of imbibing alcoholic spirits to excess is dying out in both the Army and Navy, there can, we think, be but little doubt. But every now and then we are painfully reminded that it is not entirely eradicated. Another young Naval lieutenant has, we regret to learn, had his service career brought prematurely to a close, "by consuming alcoholic beverages to such an extent as to incapacitate him from the performance of his duty," as, rather than appear before a court-martial, he has accepted the option which was offered him of resigning his commission. His captain, who commands one of our First Reserve ships, is well known in the service as a strict disciplinarian; but as this was this young officer's first stumble, he may veritably consider himself born under an unlucky star, as we venture to asseverate that in three-fourths of her Majesty's ships, a simple reprimand and "logging" would have been considered ample to meet the merits of the case.

We understand that there is some talk at the Admiralty of abolishing the life appointment of Visitor and Governor of Greenwich Hospital, vacant by the death of Admiral Sir Sydney Dacres, G.C.B.

The Austrian Government has determined to increase its torpedo-vessels of the Zara class, built at the Government yard at Pola and by the Stablimento Tecnico in Trieste. These vessels are of about the same dimensions as the German Albatrosz class, and are all built of steel. But although their machinery works up to 2,600 indicated horse-power, they can only be driven at a speed of 14 knots, which is very slow for torpedo-vessels. Besides these, Austria possesses 14 torpedo-boats, most of which are of new design. Two Yarrow boats were purchased in England in 1881, and at this moment four similar boats, of slightly larger dimensions, are being built in Pola. This yard had four torpedo-boats ready finished in 1880, from designs made by the engineer Pegan, and these were designed for a speed of 18 knots. It is proposed to condemn the old wooden armoured ships Salamander, Ferdinand Max, Hapsburg, Lissa, and Kaiser, and to build in lieu of them armour-clads of modern construction, in the course of the next eight years. The Austrians prefer building a fleet of torpedo-vessels and boats, to constructing ships which may be rendered useless by the rapid strides of torpedo warfare.

Lieutenant Maximoff, deputed to conduct trials with petroleum fuel on board the torpedo-boat Batoum, has sent in a very favourable report.

The annual meeting of the Royal Naval Club at Portsmouth was held on March 9, and was largely attended. By the report, the finances of the Club are in a flourishing state. A quantity of land at the back of it has been purchased for the sum of £1,400, upon which it is proposed, when the necessary funds are available, to extend the Club premises, so that at no far distant date this, the only purely Naval Club, promises to be in all respects worthy of the senior service. Captain P. H. Colomb, R.N., the Chairman of the Committee, having resigned, owing to his approaching departure from Portsmouth, Captain W. Codrington, C.B., was elected in his stead. The retiring members of Committee, Colonel Le Grand, R.M.L.I, Major Hersey, R.M.A., and Mr. R. Donaldson, Assistant-Paymaster, R.N., were also re-elected. During the past year twelve members have been removed by death and sixteen have resigned, but there have been 67 new entries. This is a gratifying fact, but at the same time we are of opinion that the Club is not supported to anything like the extent it ought to be by the Naval service generally.

In the Morskoi Sbornik is a full account of the port at Batoum, to be constructed at a cost of half a million sterling, illustrated by numerous plans.

Nearly three months of the current year have now elapsed, and only one Assistant-Paymaster has reached the goal he has been striving for for over 15 weary years. The unfortunate officer who now adorns the head of the Assistant-Paymasters' List is compelled to view day after day, week after week, and month after month going by without apparently bringing him any nearer his promotion; while he cannot but feel that every day makes it more and more impossible that he can ever reach those higher rates of pay which he, no doubt, often reads in the Admiralty Instructions, and which, we presume, are placed there by their Lordships for the use of the Secretary of the Admiralty, when asked inconvenient questions as to the pay of the Accountant Branch of the Navy. They do not seem to serve any other practical utility, as it is quite impossible, under existing regulations, that the present senior Assistant-Paymasters can ever reach them. What the feelings of those who are a dozen or so down the List are we cannot tell; it must to a large extent, we suppose, depend upon the expectations of their character, and the character of their expectations.

We hear that the Russian Admiralty have assigned the sum of 200,000 roubles, or £20,000, towards carrying out a series of experiments at one of the dockyards on the Neva on the resistance of water to models of vessels of various types of construction.

The special correspondent of the Standard at Suakim, Mr. Cameron, a man of great ability, has been struck with the "neglect and apathy" of our Naval authorities in matters of the most vital importance when the efficiency of our ships is concerned. Telegraphing last Sunday from Suakim, he makes the following statement in regard to the English ships under Sir William Hewett, V.C.:—"There are now in Suakim harbour Russian, French, and Italian sloops-of-war. All these ships are furnished with the electric light and other modern scientific appliances. We have the Euryalus, Carysfort, Briton, Dryad, Dragon, all large cruisers, and the Sphinx and Decoy, gunboats. Not one of all these ships has the electric-light apparatus, and all are deficient in the scientific appliances with which the foreign vessels are supplied. Comment is needless, but the remarks here as to the neglect and apathy of our authorities in allowing all other nations to be so far ahead of our own are general and bitter."

The retirement of Admiral Lesovsky from the Russian Navy, accompanied by a flattering letter from the Czar, acknowledging his eminent services, deserves more than a passing notice. Lesovsky was the officer who set on foot the secret-cruiser operations in America which provoked such a scare in England in 1878. He was then Minister of Marine, and was notorious for the dislike he entertained towards Admiral Popoff, nominally his subordinate, but in reality, through the influence of the Grand Duke Constantine, his equal, and in some respects, his superior. Between Lesovsky, who advocated cruiser warfare as the best adapted against this country, and Popoff, who favoured ironclads, there was no love lost. Up to the middle of the Turkish War, Popoff had it all his own way. The clamour against the Grand Duke Constantine and Admiral Popoff then caused the Emperor to pay more heed to Admiral Lesovsky, who was entrusted with full power to carry out his own project of operations against our merchant shipping. How he secretly fitted out the Cimbria, and sent her with 600 men and 60 officers from Port Baltic to the United States, is too well known to be repeated here. After the conclusion of the Treaty of Berlin, he was sent to the Pacific to control the 18 men-of-war that were concentrated in the China Seas to bring about a pacific solution of the Kuldja difficulty. The squadron effected its purpose, and the Admiral was paying a visit to Vladivostock before returning home, when his vessel was caught in a storm, and during the tempest he was thrown violently on deck, and broke his thigh. Since then he has been practically a cripple, and his recovery being hopeless, he has at last been relieved, at his own request, of all his duties in connection with the Russian Fleet.

Experiments are being made in France with two new pieces of ordnance. The heavier, invented by General Dard, of the Marine Artillery, weighs 78 tons. It is asserted that this gun has an effective range of 18 kilomètres, and that at 4,600 mètres its projectile can pierce the heaviest armour-plate yet made. It is further claimed for the Dard gun that it has none of the faults of the Armstrong heavy ordnance; that little or no strain is put on the ship, and that those working the gun are not liable to deafness. The second piece of ordnance tried is of lighter construction, weighing 6,000 kilogrammes, say 5 tons. It is constructed of steel, in eight pieces, which are screwed and unscrewed as required. This gun is said to have a range of 18 kilomètres, and to be able to pierce any armour-plate at 14 kilomètres. It is also stated that every French Army Corps is to be provided forthwith with a battery of these guns, the inventors of which are the directors of the Ternois Foundry. Where is the "Hope gun;" of which we read such enthusiastic accounts in a contemporary last year? It seems our only chance of being able to meet the Dardanian ordnance.

Sir Herbert Maxwell will, on going into Committee of Supply on Army Estimates, move, "That, in the opinion of this House, it is desirable to retain distinctive uniforms for the Territorial Regiments; that the proposed discontinuance of the feather bonnet, which has been worn by the Highland regiments for upwards of a century in many victorious campaigns, is especially to be deprecated; and that, in view of the unsatisfactory materials issued from the Clothing Department to the Highland regiments, the provision of all Highland articles of clothing be entrusted to the regimental or battalion authorities, as was formerly done by the Colonels-in-Chief, when regiments were clothed by them." It is impossible Sir H. Maxwell can think the Government will consent to this latter proposition.

We learn from India that Colonel A. G. Ross, 1st Sikhs, who lately returned from furlough in England, has been sent on special duty to Hong Kong, to enquire into the condition of some Sikh lascars, belonging to the Royal Artillery. There is said to be nothing of a political nature connected with his mission; although, doubtless, at this juncture, when a strain may any day be put upon our Chinese defences, it is very desirable to see that all our screws are tight.

General Saussier, who was in command of the 19th Army Corps, lying in Algeria, has been appointed to succeed General Lecomte as Military Governor of Paris. This appointment may possibly attract notice on the other side of the Rhine, in consequence of an article in a French paper which was published a couple of months ago, and which foretold the above nomination, saying at the same time that, in the event of a war with Germany, the command-in-chief of the French forces would be confided to General Saussier. Some astonishment was then expressed that, under such circumstances, the gallant officer should be detained in Algeria. It is probable that General Saussier will be succeeded in the command of the 19th Corps by General Davoust, who bears the highest reputation, and is said to be gifted with all the French military virtues, even to rashness.

The Government of Canada has under consideration the general improvement of the Militia force of British Columbia. Among other steps to this end is the increase of the fortifications in the vicinity of Victoria and Esquimo in Vancouver Island, the establishment of a school of gunnery at Victoria, and the formation and maintenance of a permanent battery of artillery in the same city. It is not, however, the intention of the Government to form a Naval brigade and torpedo corps in the province.

Lieutenant-General Brialmont, Aide-de-Camp to the King of the Belgians, who has for many years resided at Antwerp, lately celebrated his 96th birthday. He is still hale and hearty. General Brialmont, like General Schramm, who died recently, made all the campaigns of the Empire, and was in the disastrous retreat from Russia.

A note in one of our French contemporaries informs us that General Dumont's Committee, after a careful study of various repetition and other rifles presented to it, has come to the conclusion that in the hands of a well-instructed soldier the present Gras rifle can be fired with sufficient rapidity to answer all purposes. The facility of blazing away no doubt tends to a useless and dangerous waste of ammunition, and this consideration may have influenced the decision of the Committee as much as anything else.

The full programme of the manœuvres and military operations to take place during the coming summer and autumn in Germany has been published. From it we learn that those operations will be on as vast a scale as hitherto. The 7th and 8th Army Corps will carry out autumn manœuvres before the Emperor, including review, corps manœuvre against a marked enemy, each corps for itself, and finally field manœuvres, lasting three days, against each other. The infantry and cavalry of the other army corps will operate in divisions and brigades, as in former years. Siege operations lasting five weeks will be undertaken at Coblenz.

The 3rd Regiment of Dutch Hussars has been celebrating the 70th anniversary of its creation, in the shape of a réunion at the Hague of present and past officers. The regiment was raised as a "Belgian National Regiment" in 1814, by Count Van der Burch, under the authority of the reigning Duke of Saxe-Weimar, who was at that time Commander-in-Chief of the army in Brabant. The regiment distinguished itself greatly at Quatre Bras, where it lost nearly one-third of the strength engaged.

A French paper bitterly complains that the War Minister gives orders to Germany to the extent of £400,000 annually. The journal in question furnishes full details of the orders given—orders for piping and steam-engines. The writer says that one order was for fittings for the war-vessel Le Foudroyant, the plans of which ship remained for some months in the hands of the Germans. This last order could hardly have emanated from the War Office. Seeing the crisis through which French industry is at present passing, the conduct of the French Government in giving such extensive orders abroad is sharply censured. The French War Minister, by the way, has decided against the destruction of the enceinte round Paris, which some of the Democratic party decided to see taken possession of by the municipal authorities, for the purpose of constructing dwellings for the poor on the site now occupied by fortifications. The enceinte is of doubtful utility in a military point of view, but its removal would cost almost as much as its construction did. We also see that General Campenon has been pleased to allow Captain Berthau to undertake the organisation of the military forces of Japan, and that officer will doubtless take a good working staff with him. The appointment is significative at a moment when the relations between France and China are somewhat strained.

THE ARMY ESTIMATES.

The Army Estimates for the year 1884-5 were laid on the table of the House of Commons on Monday night. They show a net decrease of £44,700; but when the Supplementary Estimate for the current year is included, there appears a net increase of £326,200. The number of men of all ranks provided for is 140,314, or 2,682 more than in the present year. The several increases in the Votes for the effective services are as follow:—Regimental pay and allowances, £109,900; Militia, £4,000; Army Reserve, £65,000; Volunteers, £5,700; Commissariat and Transport, £3,400; and War-Office charges, £34,000. Decreases upon other Votes are shown as follow:—Provisions, forage, and transport, £227,000; warlike stores, £114,500; medical establishments, £11,000; works and buildings, £18,200; clothing establishments, £1,500; and miscellaneous effective services, £9,400. The sum taken in aid of Army Estimates to meet the expenditure for raising and training the recruits, and for the non-effective services of the European Army serving in India, amounts to £1,130,000. Whilst the total expenditure upon the effective services (exclusive of the appropriations in aid) is diminished from £13,008,500 to £12,818,100, the aggregate of the Votes for the non-effective service is increased from £2,966,800 to £3,112,500, the gross estimate for effective and non-effective services (inclusive of the appropriation in aid) being £18,575,416, as against £18,837,376 for 1883-84—exclusive of the Supplementary Estimate of £547,900, less £177,000, the amount of the appropriations in aid. The amount included in the Vote for warlike stores estimated to be produced for the Royal Navy during the years 1884-85 is £500,000, being a slight decrease as compared with 1883-84. This vote includes an additional sum of £37,450 to be spent on steel ordnance, but large decreases on all the principal items of material and stores. The principal decrease (£227,100) which appears in the Vote for provisions, forage, fuel, light, and transport, is spread over nearly all the items comprised in the Vote, the largest diminution being in the charges for transport. The increase of £65,000 in the Vote for the Army Reserve is accounted for by an increase in the number of the 1st Class from 31,000 to 40,000, the number of the 2nd Class being slightly less. The total establishment of the Volunteer Force is fixed at 249,412, inclusive of the permanent staff, and the capitation grant of 30s. is provided for 202,526 efficients. A special capitation allowance of £2 10s. each for 17,932 proficient officers and serjeants, and of 10s. each for 485 officers passed in tactics, is also provided. The increase in the Militia Vote arises upon the item of "bounty and expenses of enrolment."

THE NAVY ESTIMATES.

The Navy Estimates for 1884-85 were issued yesterday. The total sum required is £10,811,770, being a net decrease on the previous year of £87,730. There is an increase of £35,500 for seamen and marines' wages, and of £52,000 for naval stores. The principal decrease is £69,000 for victuals and clothing. Among the other increases are £6,300 for the Admiralty Office, £12,200 for dockyards, and £19,300 for new works and buildings. There is a decrease under the head of machinery and ships built by contract of £12,600, and of £29,700 for miscellaneous services. We shall deal with these Estimates at greater length on a future occasion.

NOTES FROM ALDERSHOT.

[FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.]

Detachments will proceed this morning to Portsmouth, and embark on board the Tyne:—Captain Lindsell, for Malta; one serjeant and 49 rank and file, Royal Engineers, for Gibraltar; Captain Powell, 35th Regiment, and one serjeant, one corporal, and 47 rank and file of the 42nd Royal Highlanders, for Egypt; one corporal and 10 privates, Commissariat and Transport Corps, for Gibraltar.

The mounted portion of the I Battery, B Brigade—four officers, 65 non-commissioned officers and men, and 61 horses—will march on the 26th inst. to Exeter.

One officer, 16 men, and 22 horses of I Battery, B Brigade, R.H.A., will march on the 24th inst. to Guildford, where the men and horses will be handed over to B Battery, A Brigade, R.H.A., on the march from Exeter to Woolwich, and proceed with the latter battery to Woolwich. The officer will return to Aldershot.

In order to facilitate the training of the Infantry battalions, in accordance with General Order 30 of 1884, it has been ordered that the company struck off duty for military training will not attend divisional, brigade, or regimental parades unless specially ordered to do so. The divisional instruction in field-cooking, carried out here annually in former years, will now be discontinued, and each company during the fourth week of the training, after sufficient instruction has been given in the details, will march from its quarters one morning soon after daylight, with camp equipment, fuel, and uncooked rations for the day's consumption, and proceed with military precautions to the ground selected for the day, where tents will be pitched, dinners cooked, &c.

OUR CRUISERS.—(CONCLUSION.)

We gave in our last article on this subject some examples of deficient structural strength in our ships-of-war. The Arethusa class appear to us little or no better than the Iris; the shell-plating of the one we went over is only half-an-inch thick. The iron deck over engines and boilers has, doubtless, a protective value; in the matter of structural strength, it is of next to no value. Had the engines been vertical, and the iron deck incorporated into and made a part of the top deck, it would have been of great value. Of the Comus class, it is unnecessary to go into details. Even Whitehall spectacles can see that a vessel with a measured-mile speed of 13 knots is about as useful to protect our commerce as a cow would be in chase of a greyhound. Under the wooden sheathing they have 5-16ths in. steel plating and iron frames 42 in. apart. To potter about in peace time, and afford a little sea experience to our officers and men, is the work for which these vessels are adapted. They cost about £136,000 each, or £64 a ton. A 16 to 17-knot sea-speed mail-steamer can be built for half the price. The engines of our State ships are all made by private makers, and are not made in the dockyards. None but makers of the highest repute are employed by the Admiralty. The London makers—Penn, Maudslay, Rennie, Humphreys—are not shipbuilders. The Scotch makers—Napier, Thomson, Elder—are shipbuilders as well as engine-makers. It occasionally, but rarely, happens that the order for the engine is given to a London maker for a ship built in Scotland. The Northampton, built by Napier and engined by Penn, and three of the first batch of "C's., built by Elder and engined by Humphreys, are examples. All State engines are built to rigid plans. "Any weight that can be saved in the hull or engine can be utilised for coal or for armament, or in other ways." This is the phantasm they are always in chase of. If a private shipowner wants to build a steamer, he knows pretty well before he begins the following four things, and if he is in doubt, plenty of builders will guarantee them:—1st, the cost; 2nd, how much she will carry; 3rd, how fast she will go; 4th, how much coal she will burn. In the State ships, no one knows any of these things. For instance, the Admiralty send out tenders for engines for a ship, let us say the Iris. Do Maudslays guarantee that the ship shall have a sea speed of 18 knots, on eight tons of coal per hour, at her load draught? Nothing of the kind; they would soon engineer themselves into the poor-house, if they attempted such a thing. They know that "a stroke of 3ft. (connecting-rod 5 ft. 9 in.), 95 revolutions, crank pins and shafts 15 in. to 18 in.," are so utterly and wildly impracticable, that no one but a "Naval Constructor" would ever dream of such a thing. All that the engineers guarantee is that the engine shall indicate so many horses-power,—that is, that they shall make so many revolutions a minute—nothing else; as to coals, speed of ship, weight carried, the engineers reserve carte blanche for themselves. On the third trial (Times, December 18, 1877), the engineers got the power they wanted; in fact, 88 horses more, five revolutions less, coals $10\frac{1}{3}$ tons an hour, the ship short of her draught 20 in., and the speed 16 knots. Great was the weeping and wailing thereupon, as she had been built for $17\frac{1}{2}$ knots. Even "the Department" had a "mauvais quart d'heure." The then First Lord, Mr. W. H. Smith, went on board, and asked if they could explain this horrid blunder. The reason was that the screws were expending half their force in churning the water, and not in driving the ship, and that the whole thing from beginning to end was a simple abortion; but this information was not likely to be given to any First Lord by the men who surround him, and are responsible for the blunder; it would, we think, be "unofficial." After six months spent in trials, the ship at 20-in. short draught, by decreasing the diameter and increasing pitch of screws, she was got to go 18·6 knots, or a knot more than the calculation. It is true that the 18·6 knots was only a question of a few minutes, and then the crank-pin brasses had to come on shore; but this also is "unofficial." A sea trial by one of the most competent officers in the Navy gives her sea speed and coal endurance as follows, ipsissima verba:—"I should call 16 knots for a week roughly her true water speed and run under fairly good conditions." This is official, and any one having the run of the Whitehall papers can refer to it, but it will be quite in vain to look for it in any published account. A practical man would know that the same result could have been attained with a vertical engine of half the power with twenty or thirty tons of coal a day less, and at an expense of £90,000, instead of the £244,594 the Iris has cost. After all, the Iris is nothing but a despatch-vessel with a torpedo armament, of limited coal endurance. One of the principal failing points in Admiralty design is too short connecting-rod and stroke. Iris is given above; one of the Arethusa class has 3 ft. 3 in. stroke and 6 ft. 6 in. connecting-rod, for 375 nominal horses-power. Some of this class have 4 ft. stroke. In a mail-steamer of 500 nominal horse-power stroke would be 5 ft., connecting-rod 10 ft.; in a similar successful steamer of 375 horse-power, 4 ft. 6 in. stroke, 9-ft. connecting-rod. In the Alaska, the stroke is 6 ft., connecting-rod 12 ft. These are the result of experience, and is the cheapest and best way to get what you want. In the Navy it is thought essential to have the cylinders horizontal, and the engines as much as possible below the water-line. It is quite impossible for a man to get about and look after the engines of the Iris, they are so jammed up. The high-pressure cylinder is socketted into the low-pressure one, and to tighten up the outer gland of the high-pressure piston rod, it is necessary to go through a man-hole in the low-pressure piston. It is much to be wished that the man answerable for the design had the job of doing so. We have gone at some length into the details of the Iris, as the faults are there emphasised, but the plan is the same all through. For instance, Opal class, 350 h.p., 33-in. stroke. The craze after lightness, or, as the late Mr. Carlyle would have called it, "slimness," is alike in all. The speed of our mail steamers in the Atlantic trade has in ten years increased from $15\frac{1}{2}$ to 18 knots, and how has it been attained? By lightening the scantlings? by shortening the stroke? by getting rid of the bed plates, and building up the engine stools on the raw hull of the ship? by cramping up the engine, till it has become like the celebrated button-hole with the two tailors at work on it, one on each side? by hanging one cylinder on to another, like Mahomet's coffin, as in the Cordelia? "Busy as the Devil is, not the smallest." The very reverse of this is what has been done, and therefore we are met face to face with the fact that the Admiralty plan is in direct opposition to the experience of all the ablest men in the kingdom. Both cannot be right. Of late years the engines of our unarmoured ships have been built without bed plates; a sole is cast on the lower part of cylinders, and this in the Iris rests on a 5-16ths in. plate, which lies on the stools. The guide rods for piston cross-head are not bigger than a man's wrist. Not even a land engine would work without proper bearing surfaces for piston cross-head, much less would it in a marine engine with the ship tumbling about. Underneath each engine of the Iris is a central kelson 6-16ths in., lightened, two intercostals a side 5-16ths in., flat plate of inner bottom 5-16ths in., two bracket frames more than half-a-hundredweight away, four feet apart, and three hanging knees with gussets 5-16ths in. Three a side continuous angles $2\frac{1}{2}$ by $2\frac{1}{2}$ by 5-16ths in. on longitudinals. Short pieces 3 by 3 by 6-16ths in. to connect longitudinal to shell. Two on each side of ship, short angle-irons on inner edge of brackets, 6 in. by 3 in. by 6-16ths in. Compare this with the strength under engine of the Gallia, built in 1879, one of our most successful Cunard steamers, built by J. and G. Thomson. Frames, 6 in. by 4 in. by 10-16ths in.; spaced, 21 in.; double reverse bars, $4\frac{1}{2}$ in. by $3\frac{1}{2}$ in. by 8-16ths in.; floors, 29 in. by 11-16ths in.; intercostal central kelson, and two intercostals a side, all 11-16ths in.; intercostals connected to skin with two short angle-irons. Central girder, 30 in. deep, 16-16ths in. thick, with four continuous angles; size of frames, standing on foundation plates on floors, 12 in. by 10-16ths in. First and second side girders, 12-16ths in.; four continuous angles on each side, girders connected to intercostals. Similar foundation plates under first side girder; plate under engines, 14-16ths in.; plating of shell of hull, garboard strake, 15-16ths in.; next, 14-16ths in.; remainder, 13-16ths in. There is not a quarter of the strength under the more powerful engines of the Iris that there is in the Gallia. The horse-power of the Iris is 1,000, of the Gallia 700; sea speed of the Gallia, $15\frac{1}{2}$ knots. A few words must be said as to naval boilers. Many of them have very short lives—four or five years—and from their design they are very wasteful of fuel. It is owing to the anxiety to keep them below the water-line that they are so small. The boilers in "C" class are 8 ft. 3 in. diameter; in Opal class, 10 ft. A boiler in a mail steamer lasts 10 years, and for the power of these corvettes would not be less than 14 ft. diameter. In extreme-speed Atlantic steamers, the boilers are 16 ft. diameter. The first thing that strikes an observer in a Navy boiler is the greediness of the designer for heating surface; consequently, they are deficient in steam and water space, prime readily, and are easily burnt. But if they can be got to go for six hours, under the most favourable conditions, Whitehall is satisfied, and goes home to its pudding with an easy mind. Sir T. Brassey calmly announces the speed of the Iris to be 18 knots. The Iris in sea-trim has never been driven at 18 knots, even for one hour; for the simple reason that the attempt to do so would only break her down. Does any mortal suppose that the Iris in moderately bad weather—and how long have we to wait for this in the North Atlantic in winter?—could be driven alongside the Alaska, which has a sea speed of 18 knots, even for one hour? No! not even a member of the "Royal Corps of Naval Constructors," in his dreams. We know that the Elbe, Fulda, Werra, Erus, Eider, Normandie, Stirling Castle—all British built, but foreign-owned steamers—will assuredly, the next pinch that comes, be turned loose on our commerce. The sailing dates are advertised of these ships; take any of our unarmoured ships, and try how it will go with one of these for 24 hours, in moderately bad weather, to the westward; and by all means let the fullest publicity be given to it. If they will not go with them—and it is certain that they will not—then, what is the use of our State ships as protectors of our commercial marine at sea? They are nothing but a sham and a mendacity. A short time since, a gentleman who has built and engined some of the finest ships that swim, said, "The fact is, that if the engines and boilers of these State ships were taken out and put on the quay and sold, no one would give anything for them except to break up." Before any real oversight can be exercised, the Blue-book must be closer kept. During the last few years, under the care of Mr. Hamilton, the Dockyard Blue-books have been much better kept, and are much easier of reference. But now, unfortunately, Mr. Hamilton has gone to Ireland. The amount spent on each ship in the previous year should be published when the Navy Estimates are brought forward in April. The men who spend more money in repairing an old wooden ship than a new iron one can be bought for, ought to be hauled over the coals. We have no doubt that this is again the case in the Myrmidon, just gone to the Red Sea, and that two or three years hence, when all interest in the matter has evaporated, the thing forgotten, and the Government changed, it will doubtless appear in the Dockyard Blue-book. There is no difficulty about it, every private builder knows within a few weeks what a ship has cost him. If it is a repairing job, the builder knows in a few days. If the magnitude of the transaction be urged as an excuse, we may point out that they are not nearly so large or so complicated as those of the North-Western Railway. The accounts of this Company are published within six weeks of the period to which they refer. Britain is at the head of shipbuilding nations, why are our best builders not asked to join the Board of Naval Constructors? For many years no First Lord knows, or has known, anything practically about shipbuilding, and it is not necessary that he should; but it is, we apprehend, of the last importance that the First Lord should have the best men in the country at his back as advisers, and that this is of much more importance than perpetually stumping the country with the cry "That the British Navy is the finest in the world." Mr. Harland and Mr. Pearce are admitted on all hands to be quite at the head of shipbuilders in this country. Why are they not asked for their opinions? Who cares a pinch of snuff whether they are in Parliament or not? We augur that much would follow from this step. That what has been elsewhere called the "chopping-block theory," and the present structural strengths, would have but a short shrift, that our unarmoured cruisers would have vertical engines, rational boilers, and protected by 4 in. or 5 in. armour, which the experience of the Shah v. Huascar and Alexandria have proved the value of; that the cost would be diminished by one-half, that there would be a training squadron of sailing-ships, "en permanence," and that no officer would be eligible for Lieutenant that had not served four years at sea in these ships, that in a few years our unarmoured ships would be doubled without extra cost; and that beyond a small margin to provide for ill-health and casualties, there would be no long spells on shore or on half-pay, as there would be plenty of ships to put the men in. These would be some of the results of the measure.

THE STAFF COLLEGE.

"The Staff is to an army what steam is to a locomotive. The machine itself may be of the highest order; the engineer who directs it may be a man of first-class talent; but without the motive-power of them, it is merely a huge collection of well-polished material." Such is the dictum of Lord Wolseley, and he is well borne out in his opinion by the experience of the Franco-German War; the contrast which the operations of this campaign brought to light in the working of the Staff of the opposing armies must have struck the most cursory reader, and led him to inquire into the cause. On one side, friction and mistakes were reduced to a minimum; on the other side, they attained a maximum almost without parallel. The "material" was equally good on either side, as evidenced by the determined fights of Wörth, Mars-la-Tour, and Gravelotte; but the "motive-power" was as deficient on the French side as it was sufficient on the side of their enemy. The French learnt many lessons in that terrible war, and the practical result of some of these lessons was the establishment of a Staff College for the training of officers for the Staff on principles similar to those which obtain in Germany and England; and the abolition of the "Staff Corps," a body of officers who filled various important offices on the Staff, and who never had and never could have the smallest experience of regimental duty. In the British Army, the qualifications for Staff employ are either a Staff-College certificate or the fact that the officer has already held a Staff appointment on active service. The recognised method by which an officer who is ambitious of distingushing himself in the service can place his foot on the first rung of the ladder which all are desirous of mounting, is to go through the Staff-College course and obtain the much-coveted certificate. An officer who has determined to enter the lists for this distinction, and has completed five years' service, exclusive of leave of absence, must, in the first instance, be strongly recommended by his commanding officer and by a regimental board of his brother-officers "as one whose services on the Staff are likely to be a credit to his regiment;" in addition to this, his commanding officer is called upon to answer an exhaustive list of questions as to the officer's character, disposition, habits, &c. The candidate for Staff service is then attached for a month to the Staff of the General commanding his district, and if he acquits himself creditably in this preliminary canter, his application to be allowed to compete at the ensuing examination for entrance into the Staff College is forwarded to the Horse Guards, and he is duly entered for the race. The candidate who is successful in reaching the required standard at the entrance examination (held once a year), and in passing among the first 20 competitors, is ordered to join at the Staff College in the following February. The course at the College lasts two years, with a subsequent course of four months at Aldershot. The enemies of progress have cast many a stone at this institution, some of them have struck the mark, and many of the caustic gibes which have been indulged in at its expense have been too well merited; howbeit, the unsparing criticism of foes and the untiring and earnest work of friends have, between them, brought the Staff College into a state of such thoroughly workmanlike efficiency that the most obstinate disciples of the old school, of whom "there are some few remaining," are fain to confess that there is "something in it" after all; while those who really love and study their profession, hail it as the means of developing as far as possible in time of peace those manifold qualities which are so essential in actual war. The enemies of study in our Army are fond of pointing at the late Gen. Sir Pomeroy Colley, as an instance of a brilliant theoretical soldier who came to signal grief in practice. It is not a grateful task to discuss the failings of a gallant officer who died in the service of his country, but since the disaster at Majuba Hill has so often been brought forward as a warning to those who place their faith in "Staff College men," it is only fair to point out for the benefit of the perverse and uninitiated, that the course of action pursued by Colley was in direct contravention of all rules. It is, however, a mistake to suppose that the course at the Staff College is essentially theoretical; on the contrary, it is almost entirely practical, and of late years, owing to the unwearying efforts of the Commandant and his Staff, the system has undergone many and great improvements. The constant practice in reconnaissances of the most varied and extended nature must in itself be of incalculable benefit, and anyone who has seen the work done by the officers in this subject during the second year of their residence at the College cannot fail to be struck by the excellence and extremely practical nature of the work. One of the most striking features of the system is the prominence given to sketching on horseback, and the facility attained by the majority of officers in this apparently difficult art is really astonishing. There is, in addition to all this, and to a great extent as a preparation for it, an exhaustive course of strategy and tactics, and the most careful theoretical and practical training in Staff duties and military administration. These form the more important features of the course at the College. A sound knowledge of French is considered essential; other languages may be taken up at the option of the individual, and we note that at the last examination of officers obtaining their certificates at the conclusion of the course, no less than four passed in Russian. It would not be out of place here to offer a suggestion, that as there must be many officers in the service who are good linguists, but who for one reason or another never go through the Staff College course, it would be desirable to throw open the final examination in languages to all officers of the Army who may wish to obtain a certificate in any particular languages with which they may be conversant; and then the authorities would be enabled to keep a record of the linguistic attainments of every officer who has any pretensions to shining in that line, and select those qualified for any service, requiring knowledge of any special language. The struggle against the red-tape and officialism of the War Office, though it has been crowned with a certain amount of success, is by no means over, and it would be well if those who have the necessary weight and influence would institute an inquiry into the number of hours which each officer is compelled to waste in learning purely theoretical mathematics. It is well known at the Staff College that in the case of the large majority of officers, the greater part of the first year's work has to be sacrificed to mathematics, the result being that ambitious and zealous officers have their energies sapped and valuable time wasted in endeavouring to discover whether the "moon's lower limb" will be visible above the horizon on a certain night at an hour when all sober people should be in bed, or, perhaps, in estimating the amount of friction called into play on the faces of a wedge in some abnormal and ridiculous situation. It would be quite as profitable to estimate the amount of friction, under normal conditions, between the Horse Guards and the War Office. It appears to us that a sufficient knowledge of mathematics should be required at the entrance examination, and any additional knowledge of practical astronomy for surveying purposes should be imparted by the Professor of Surveying. We observe that Col. Richards' valuable work on surveying, &c., contains all the astronomy which it is necessary for a Staff officer to be acquainted with. It will scarcely be believed that the instruction given in electricity and magnetism as applied to telegraphy, mining, and military purposes generally, and the use of meteorological instruments, is purely theoretical, and in the form of lectures; no attempt has been made to issue printed notes on these subjects; the result, of course, is that the value of the lectures is almost entirely thrown away, as it is evidently impossible for the officers under instruction to think of anything except writing as hard as they can throughout the lecture. The absurdity of highly-educated men being thus sunk to the level of copying clerks is so manifest that it needs no comment. There appears to be no reason why these blots should not be removed from an otherwise excellent system; but at present there seems little hope of any alteration being made. We believe, however, that it is intended to sever the connection between the Educational Department and the Staff College, and bring the latter under the immediate control of the Commander-in-Chief. We feel convinced that such a change will be for the benefit of the service, and much appreciated by those more immediately concerned. We cannot avoid paying a well-deserved tribute to what we believe to be one of the most useful, as it undoubtedly is the most successful, institution at the Staff College: we refer to the Staff College Drag Hunt. Nowhere could one find any institution which so thoroughly promotes friendly emulation, hard-riding, and steady nerve, and at the same time gives such a complete refresher to body and mind. Those who have been fortunate enough to witness the annual "point-to-point" race of the members of the Staff College Drag Hunt will confess that they have seldom seen a more sporting race, or one that has been entered for with better pluck and keener relish. So long as a "Staff College man" can be well to the front in the hunting-field and on the cricket-ground, there is little fear of his becoming a mere theorist. Theory and practice at the Staff College go hand-in-hand, and neither is subservient to the detriment of the other.

BRITISH-BUILT SHIPS-OF-WAR.

When the Chinese Imperial Government and the Governor of Canton some years ago ordered the construction of five ships-of-war by German shipbuilding firms, the majority of the Continental Press gloried in the fact that "enlightened" foreign Powers had at length perceived the fallacy of providing themselves with ill-constructed English vessels. Some German papers even went so far as to assert that the entire foreign shipbuilding trade of the Thames, Clyde, and Mersey would, within a very few years, be transferred to the Oder, Weser, and to Kiel. As nearly three years have elapsed since the first appearance of these patriotic effusions, it may not prove uninteresting if we examine the extent to which their prognostications have been verified up to date. Commencing with the year 1880, we find that the Argentine Government have had nine vessels-of-war built in England since that date, viz., two ironclads, one cruiser, one large paddle steamer, and five despatch-boats, the aggregate displacement of the whole being 11,762 tons. Brazil has built two ironclads in England, the displacement of which is 11,370 tons. The Government of Bulgaria purchased a paddle-wheel yacht in France, the tonnage being about 1,000. Chili will shortly receive an Elswick-type cruiser of 3,000 tons from England. China has ordered in Germany two ironclads and three unarmoured cruisers, of an aggregate displacement of 21,555 tons. Two cruisers were constructed in England for the same Government,—displacement, 2,700 tons. Besides these, three gunboats, with a total displacement of 1,960 tons, were supplied from Newcastle. The Greek Government have purchased two gunboats and a torpedo depôt ship in England,—tonnage, 2,054. The Haytian President purchased a 1,000-ton steamer in Philadelphia. For the Italian Navy, a cruiser of 3,065 tons was built in England, and a cruiser of 1,500 tons was constructed in the same country for Japan. Portugal is likewise having a corvette of 1,100 tons built on the Thames. Roumania has added six gunboats to her small river flotilla, one of which, of 110 tons, was built in Austria, and the remaining five, of 629 tons, were of English design. Russia has added to her navy a 3,150-ton corvette, built in France, and four English-built auxiliary cruisers, having a total displacement of 12,000 tons. Siam has purchased two gunboats, of together 1,000 tons, in England. Spain has also supplied herself from the latter country with two corvettes, having a displacement, together, of 2,304 tons. The Republic of Uruguay, lastly, is having a small gunboat of 270 tons constructed in Austria. From the above, it will be seen that, of the 46 vessels-of-war built for foreign Governments since 1880, 36, with a displacement of 54,444 tons, were constructed in England; five, with a total of 21,555 tons, in Germany; two, with 4,150 tons, in France; two, with 380 tons, in Austria; and one, of 1,000 tons, in the United States. It will, of course, be understood that this list refers only to such vessels as have been built by private firms for foreign navies, and that ships built by private contract for the respective home Governments or Colonies are not included in the same. It is reported that the Greek Government have just concluded a contract with Messrs. J. and G. Thompson, of Glasgow, for the construction of two ironclad vessels. Should this rumour prove to be correct, the tonnage of foreign vessels-of-war ordered in England will be considerably augmented. These facts and figures form the best argument to refute the absurdities published on the Continent regarding the decay of the British war-ship building trade. With the exception of China, no foreign nation has as yet ordered regular fighting ships in Germany, and the belief is generally current that the construction of the above vessels was undertaken by the respective builders more for advertisement than for profit, as the lowness of the contract prices would seem to preclude every prospect of the latter.

THE MILITIA.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—I should like to ask the War-Office authorities, through the aid of your valuable paper, if they are aware of and are making arrangements to meet the deficiency of officers in our service. If something is not done at once, it will not be improbable that several officers will obtain leave from the coming trainings simply on account of not submitting to pay the extra expense, which naturally must fall upon all who unfortunately belong to regiments which have not their proper complement of officers. The expense usually attending a Militia training is not light, even in regiments which are fully officered, what with mess waiters, hire of furniture, &c., stationery, the proverbial ball (if you get off with only one), large inspection lunch, civic entertainment, and, perhaps, a picnic, but worst of all, probably, the expense of having to hire nearly all your band, if your training takes place in a rural and thinly populated neighbourhood. An eight-company regiment ought to have 25 officers; now, possibly, 14 or 15 may be nearer the number, and of these you may calculate that certainly 3 will be absent each training from various causes. Thus you have 12 to pay what 25 ought to divide, the only cure for which is either leave of absence or retirement. Who would, under these circumstances, belong to a regiment stationed in an unfashionable quarter, when they can get commissions in one having its full complement of officers? The only remedy would appear to be either to give increased pay in some cases, or fill the regiments up with officers. Something ought to be done, and at once, as weakly-officered battalions mean inefficiency and decay. It is hardly necessary to point out that weakness as regards officers means something like double the work to do; but this even is not all, for courts-martial boards take officers from their companies and the whole system is impaired. As to the deficiency of rank and file, such an extraordinary state exists in one district I know, that it is perhaps useless to allude to the subject further than give an illustration,—a regiment which for upwards of a quarter of a century has never once trained its full quota of men,—generally a hundred or so short,—yet would you, Mr. Editor, believe it, that with a full knowledge of this, which they either had or ought to have had, the authorities have brought into the district two other regiments, on the principle, I presume, that what is not sufficient for one man must be enough for more! Perhaps some school-board official who is "well up" can supply an answer to what would be to most people a puzzle.—I am, &c.,

THE ROYAL MARINES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—The appeal of the Member for Stirling District to the corps of Royal Marines, on Friday evening, can only be described as both undignified and feeble. Having carefully read and re-read Mr. Campbell-Bannerman's reply to Capt. Price, I fail to deduce therefrom that the exigencies of the public service were advanced by the transfer of the Marines from the Poonah to the Gilsland. On the contrary, it would suggest itself to me that whilst the battalion of Royal Marines were en route to Malta, it was decided to send a Line regiment to Egypt, but that the departure of this regiment was retarded, in consequence of the military authorities declining to allow their troops to embark in the Gilsland. If such was not the case, why was not a wing of the regiment sent on in the Gilsland, leaving the remainder to follow in the Poonah with the Marines? The country knows well that the Royal Marines are ever ready to submit themselves to any inconvenience to which "the exigencies of the service may expose them," and that they are, moreover, ready to acquiesce in "any action which may be governed by the consideration of the interests of the public service." In this, case, however, it would appear that the interests concerned were the interests of a battalion of the Line, whilst the country was exposed to the risk of losing 400 of its finest troops.—I am, &c.,

A FORGOTTEN PAGE OF HISTORY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—The British public appear surprised at the reckless gallantry of the Desert Arabs, but the actions of El Teb and Tamati are not the first in which our troops have been engaged in close and deadly conflict with the Arab race. By a strange coincidence, also, it was the 1st York and Lancaster (then known as the 65th Regt.) that took a prominent part in the sanguinary fighting. I shall briefly describe the incidents, which afford a singular resemblance to the events that have occurred in the neighbourhood of Suakim during the past few months. In 1821, the Ben-Bor-Ali Arabs, who inhabit the country near Ras-ul-Had, in Arabia, having committed some excesses, a force of 600 Bombay Sepoys, with eight guns, manned by European artillerymen, and about 2,000 troops of the Imaun of Muscat, under command of Capt. (the late Gen.) Perrinet Thompson, of the 17th Dragoons, the Political Resident in the Persian Gulf, landed on the Arabian coast, and marched inland, to inflict chastisement on the Arabs. On Nov. 8, the opposing forces came into conflict, and the Arabs broke into the British square, and a terrible scene of slaughter took place. Six out of eight officers engaged and 270 men were slain, besides the loss suffered by the forces of the Imaun, who was himself wounded while endeavouring to save an artilleryman, for which act of gallantry the Governor-General of India presented his Highness with a magnificent sword. The Bombay Government speedily despatched an expedition, under Sir Lionel Smith, consisting of 1,700 Sepoys and 1,300 European soldiers, including the 65th Regt., the 1st Bombay Fusiliers, a troop of Horse Artillery, and an Indian Naval Brigade, with guns. On Feb. 10, 1821, the Arabs made a night attack on the British camp (similar to what was attempted with ill-success on Wednesday last), in which our loss was one officer and 16 men killed, and three officers, including Brigdr. Cox, and 23 men wounded. On March 2 took place the decisive action, when the Arabs sought to repeat their tactics of charging the British square, broadsword and target in hand. But the 65th and 7th Native Infantry, forming the right brigade, on whom the main attack was directed, proved steady, and repelled the Arabs, who, out of less than 1,000 warriors, left 500 on the field, the British loss being 29 killed and 173 wounded. Thus history has repeated itself in a close and striking manner. —I am, &c.,

Kensington, March 14.

In a lecture delivered at the Parkes Museum, March 13, on "The Organisation and Management of Field Hospitals," by Dr. Henry Veale, deputy-surgeon-general, attention was called to the importance of every department of the Army being always prepared to take the field. The present system of affording medical aid to the sick and wounded in the field was explained. The defects of the regulation plans were pointed out, as well as the advantages of the plan proposed. Alterations were recommended in the scale of medicines for such hospitals. Subdivision of the whole Army Medical Department into general and field hospitals, &c., has been recommended. The hospital service at Ismailia in 1882 was described, and Dr. Veale argued that the campaign was as great a success for the medical service as it was for the Army at large.

We would ask our naval friends to give a look to-day at Spong's exhibit of a novel rowing invention at the "Sportsman's Exhibition,"—face-to-bow rowing. It may prove to be something more than curious.

The Army.

1st Life Guards. The Holy Trinity Magazine, published in Windsor, says:—"It has been proposed that there should be a cemetery for the Household Cavalry at Windsor. The poor fellows who have died in these three regiments lie, most of them scattered about, in nameless graves in Brompton Cemetery. The Chaplain to the Brigade here has offered, if a piece of ground be acquired, the use of Holy Trinity Parish Church for funerals until, in due course, a chapel be erected. The Rev. Arthur Robins will take all such burials without fees, and there will be, moreover, during his time, no charge whatever on this head for monumental stones or crosses. Last year, about this time, or a little earlier, Mr. Robins had some communication on the subject with Col. H. P. Ewart, C.B., then commanding the 2nd Life Guards, who was corresponding with the Woods and Forests Department. We understand that one acre of ground, or thereabouts, and that would be enough for this particular God's acre, was obtainable at Spital, at a cost of some two or three hundred pounds. We don't know where the hitch is, or what may be the difficulty, but we have heard nothing of the matter since. The thing ought to be done. It can be done at a comparatively insignificant cost; and Mr. Robins's offer to the Household Cavalry Brigade really means the gift of a free funeral to every soldier dying in these regiments. We believe if his Royal Highness the Colonel-in-Chief, whose whole heart is in his command, will take the matter up, a cemetery such as there should be for the Bodyguard at Windsor will soon be an accomplished fact, for nothing that it is right to do in his hands ever fails to get done. No one would be more kindly anxious than the Prince of Wales that the soldiers of these regiments, who in life, in the true esprit de corps, pull all together, in death should not be divided."

17th Lancers. The regiment, under the command of Major the Hon. Pleydell Bouverie, left Mhow on Feb. 2 for Lucknow. Sir Robert Phayre, K.C.B., commanding the division, and Lady Phayre, all the staff officers, and a number of ladies and gentlemen assembled at the railway-station. Sir Robert Phayre's farewell orders run as follows:—"On the departure of the 17th Lancers from Mhow to the Bengal Presidency, it affords Lieut.-Gen. Sir R. Phayre unqualified satisfaction to express to Col. Boulderson and the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men how fully he values the official support which he has always received from them, and how highly he estimates the admirable discipline, soldier-like bearing, and good conduct which have characterised the regiment whilst under his command for the last three years. It is not only, however, in a public sense that the departure of the regiment is regretted, but in a social one also; and it affords Sir Robert Phayre great pleasure to assure all ranks that they carry with them the cordial wishes of the station for their future welfare."

19th Hussars. Later accounts from Egypt state that Lieut.-Col. Barrow, C.M.G., who was dangerously wounded at El Teb, is making good progress. Major Smith has arrived home from Egypt on leave on medical certificate.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

Major R. Wace, Superintendent of the Cossipore Shell Factory, near Calcutta, has just raised a battery in that place which is to be known as the Cossipore Artillery Volunteers Battery.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

A General Order by the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, just issued, states that the following changes in the organisation of the Royal Engineers will come into effect on the 1st of next month:—The C Troop and the 22nd and 34th Companies, R.E., will be formed into one body, under the name "Royal Engineer Telegraph Corps," which will be composed of two divisions, as follows:—1st Division, the officers, men, horses, and equipment hitherto forming the C Troop; and 2nd Division, the officers, men, and equipment hitherto forming the 22nd and 34th Companies.

Lieut.-Col. R. J. Bond has been appointed to the Committee on the organisation of the Field Companies and Pontoon Troop at the Horse Guards, of which Lieut.-Col. A. G. Durnford is president. Major S. Waller and Capt. J. E. Blackburn attended at the Horse Guards on Wednesday last from Aldershot to give evidence.

Major W. Fitz H. Spraight has been appointed a Deputy-Assist.-Adjt. and Qrmr.-Gen. on the Staff of the Army of Occupation in Egypt during the absence of the Expeditionary Force in the Soudan.

Major S. Waller will shortly be appointed to succeed Capt. P. S. G. Reid, about to retire, in charge of the War Department Lands (4th Division), at Aldershot.

5th Northumberland Fusiliers. The Marquis of Hartington, replying to Earl Percy on Friday, said he had already stated that 85 captains failed to pass out of 257 who were examined in the last examination for promotion in the Army. Of the five captains in the Northumberland Fusiliers, one was an adjutant in a Line battalion, one in a Militia battalion, and two in Volunteer battalions. If an officer found that his duties as an adjutant interfered with his preparation for examination, he was afraid that there was no alternative for him but to resign his adjutancy. It was not the fact that the marks had been given more sparingly, or that the minimum for passing had been raised since 1880. Failure to pass did, in some cases, render officers of long service liable to be superseded by their juniors.

6th Royal Warwickshire Regiment. The drafts for the 2nd Batn., after being inspected by Major-Gen. the Hon. R. Monck, left Chatham on Saturday last, and proceeded to Portsmouth, where it embarked on board the hired transport Nuddea, for Bombay. The marching-out strength was 5 non-commissioned officers, 2 buglers, and 161 privates, with Capt. Mayne, Leinster Regt., and Lieut. H. Smythe. Her Majesty has approved the appointment of Col. J. N. Colthurst, half-pay, late of the regiment, to command the 13th Regimental District at Taunton, in succession to Col. R. Montgomery, whose term of service expires on the 15th inst.

9th Norfolk Regiment. Col. Daunt, C.B., half-pay, late 2nd Batn., has been appointed to command the 28th Regimental District at Bristol, in succession to the late Col. A. S. Dickins. Col. Daunt was created a Companion of the Bath for his services in the late Afghan War.

13th Somersetshire Light Infantry. It is not surprising, remarks the Allahabad paper, that the 2nd Batn. have reached Burmah in a deplorably weak condition. Before the corps was moved from Kamptee, we pointed out how thin it was in point of numbers, and how much the health of the men had suffered by attacks of fever and cholera, in which respect the battalion has been singularly unfortunate. If it was fit to move anywhere, it was to a hill station, and not to a place like Rangoon, where the climate is bad and the duty heavy. The regiment there, to begin with, has to furnish a strong detachment to Port Blair, and when this had been done, the unlucky Prince Alberts landed in Rangoon, we understand, less than 300 strong.

19th Yorkshire Regiment. Major Dickenson, 1st Batn., has been ordered to Richmond by the 27th prox., for the purpose of taking up the duties of his appointment as Adjt. of the 4th Batn., in succession to Major Gipps, whose period of Staff service will expire very shortly. A quadrille party was given by the Serjt.-Major and Serjeants of the 2nd Batn. in the gymnasium, Curragh Camp, on Monday, in honour of the twenty-first anniversary of the Princess of Wales's wedding-day, and to commemorate the formation of the battalion in 1858. Over 250 invitations were accepted. Amongst the guests were Col. and Mrs. Davidson and nearly all the officers. Colour-Serjt. W. Heap had the management, Serjt. Fitzgerald being M.C.

29th Worcestershire Regiment. Qrmr. Brogden has been granted leave from India to England for six months, on medical certificate.

34th Border Regiment. Lieut. Hodgson is a candidate for the Indian S. C., and has been appointed to the Meywar Bheel Corps, on probation.

42nd Black Watch (Royal Highlanders). Major W. Aitken, killed in Thursday's action, had been in the 42nd Highlander since Dec. 1861, when he joined the regiment as an ensign by purchase. He served with head-quarters in India until 1868, was subsequently with his regiment at Aldershot, and filled the duties of regimental musketry instructor for some time prior to his promotion to his company. With the Black Watch he took part in the Ashantee campaign, and was present at the actions of Amoaful and Ordahsu, and the capture of Coomassie (medal and clasp). He also served with the regiment in the Egyptian campaign of 1882, and was present at the battle of Tel-el-Kebir (medal with clasp and Khedive's star). He was promoted captain in 1874, and Major in July, 1881.

48th Northamptonshire Regiment. Capt. Browne has been appointed Deputy-Assist.-Adjt. and Qrmr.-Gen., Dublin District, in succession to Major the Hon. W. F. Elliot, 93rd Highlanders, removed to the War Office.

ROYAL MARINES.

The Deputy-Adjt.-Gen. and Assist. Adjt.-Gen., Royal Marines, and the commanding officers of the Divisions and depôt, are authorised to act as justices of the peace for the purposes of enlistment, under section 94 of the Army Service Act of 1883. This course will faciliate attestation, as it is always known where either of the before-named officers may be found.

The Deputy-Adjt.-Gen. has notified that non-commissioned officers are not to be permitted to exchange more than once in each grade on the Foreign Service Roster.

Lieut. A. G. Vincent, R.M.L.I., has embarked in H.M.S. Lord Warden, vice Lieut. F. H. Northesk Wilson, whose name has been removed from the list of officers, R.M.

The following were the questions and answers in Parliament as to the recent trans-shipping to the transport Gilsland of the R.M.L.I. "at sea":—Capt. Price asked whether it was the fact that the battalion which left England in the Poonah were transferred at Malta to the Gilsland, on board which ship the accommodation was very inferior; whether the Royal Marines were put to this inconvenience in order to embark the 38th Regt. on board the Poonah; whether the same thing did not occur in 1882, when the Marine Battalion embarked for Egypt in the Orontes were transferred to another ship at Gibraltar, in order to make room for a Line regiment; and what was the reason for submitting the Royal Marines to this kind of inconvenience?

Mr. Campbell-Bannerman: Before replying to the hon. and gallant gentleman, perhaps he will allow me to express my belief that his question cannot have been inspired by any member of the corps of Royal Marines, who, I feel sure, would be the last to complain of any inconvenience to which the exigencies of the public service might expose them. The facts of the case are these,—The Poonah was chartered to convey 500 Marines to Malta only. The Commander-in-Chief in the Mediterranean had ordered 256 Marines to be sent from Malta to Alexandria, and the Gilsland was taken up at Malta for that purpose. Before the Poonah arrived it was decided to send a battalion of the Line from Malta to Alexandria, and the Poonah was engaged for that duty, as she could take the whole battalion and other drafts, while the Gilsland could only accommodate 400. The Gilsland was accordingly got ready to leave Malta with the Marines immediately on their arrival. Before their arrival Lord John Hay ordered all the 500 Marines to Alexandria, and the Gilsland therefore proceeded at once with all she could carry, viz., 400. The Poonah followed with 944 soldiers, without dividing the battalion. The hon. member refers to the case of the Orontes in 1882. That vessel conveyed 800 Marines for the Mediterranean station, with orders to transfer them to the Tamar at Gibraltar, because the Orontes was required to convey thence to Malta or Egypt the Berkshire Regiment, with its transport animals, —a duty which she was capable of performing, but for which the Tamar was not large enough, although she had ample accommodation for the Marines. From this detailed explanation the House will see that in both instances our action was governed by a consideration of the interests of the public service, to which I am certain that no Royal Marine, whether officer, non-commissioned officer, or private, would desire his personal convenience to be preferred.

Viscount Lewisham asked, with reference to the Gilsland, whether it was a fact that the Military authorities at Malta refused to permit a certain body of soldiers to proceed in that ship, in which the Marines were afterwards sent?

Mr. Campbell-Bannerman: No, Sir; we have heard nothing of any such occurrence; and it is in the highest degree improbable that the Military authorities were consulted as to the embarkation of soldiers in the Gilsland, because, from the first, express directions were given by the Admiralty that she should convey Marines.

60th King's Royal Rifle Corps. Lieut. Fortescue, 3rd Batn., has been appointed an acting Deputy-Assist.-Adjt. and Qrmr.-Gen. on the Staff of the Army of Occupation at Cairo during the absence of the Soudan Expedition.

65th York and Lancaster Regiment. The Morning Advertiser says:—"The late Capt. Ford, a son of Major-Gen. Ford, of the Madras Army, was born in March, 1848, and entered the service in Nov., 1865, as ensign by purchase in the 11th Regt., from which he passed in the following year into the 7th Fusiliers. He was a subaltern in the Ceylon Rifles from 1870 until the reduction of the regt. in 1873, and was then brought into the 56th, serving with the Pompadours at Kurrachee and Aden, and on home stations until selected for a company in the 65th Regt., in May, 1880."

70th East Surrey Regiment. Major Gregson completes his period of Staff service as Deputy-Assist.-Adjt.-Gen. at head-quarters on the 24th inst.

92nd Gordon Highlanders. Gen. M. K. Atherley, col. of the regiment, died on Tuesday, in the 80th year of his age. He was the second son of the late Mr. Arthur Atherley, formerly M.P. for Southampton, and entered the Army in 1823. He obtained a lieutenancy in 1825, became capt. in 1828, and was promoted to major in 1846, lieut.-col. in 1849, and col. in 1854. He attained the rank of major-gen. in 1864, was advanced to lieut.-gen. in 1872, and became a gen. in 1877. Gen. Atherley had held the colonelcy since 1880.

93rd Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders. Major the Hon. W. F. Elliot has been appointed Deputy-Assist.-Adjt.-Gen. at the head-quarters of the Army, in succession to Major Gregson, 70th Regt., whose period of Staff service expires on the 24th inst.

Medical Department. The Medical Press and Circular says:—"As the efficiency of the Army depends upon the zeal and ability of its regimental lieutenant-colonels, so undoubtedly does that of the Medical Department upon the excellence or otherwise of those senior executive officers who hold the most responsible charges of our military hospitals. Now, what is their position? In the nine years previous to 1873, the average annual strength of medical officers was 1,048; during the last nine years, since the introduction of unification, 880, or 168 less. The Government having thus gained largely at the expense of the comfort and health of its medical officers, the least it may be asked to do is to remedy those evils which they justly complain of. Dr. Boileau, in his admirable set of tables, has shown that previous to 1874 the rank of deputy-surgeon-general was obtained at an average age of 48·5, and 25 years' service, while many officers were promoted much earlier. Of late, things have come to such a pass that a large proportion of the brigade-surgeons can never hope to reach the rank, or the senior surgeons-major that of brigade-surgeon, until they are nearly 50 years of age and 30 of service, a sharp contrast to the recommendation of the War Office Committee, of which the late Director-General Sir William Muir was a member, that in the interest of efficiency this rank should be reached at 22 years' service, and that of deputy-surgeon-general at 48 years of age."

Pay Department. The following changes of station, promotions, and retirements have taken place during the past month:—Majors Luke, Unattached List, to the 42nd Regtl. District, Perth; Beaumont, 68th Regtl. District, Newcastle, to Unattached List; Nott, 2nd Batn. 10th Regt., to Unattached List; Coppinger, 1st Batn. 24th Regt., to Unattached List; Aked, 2nd Dragoon Guards, to Unattached List; Capt. Bromfield, 1st Batn. 10th Regt., to 31st Regt.; Mansergh, 5th Dragoon Guards, to Egypt; Creighton, Unattached List, to 6th Regtl. District, Warwick; St. John, 31st Regt., to Unattached List. Promotions.—The following pymrs. and hon. capts. to have the hon. rank of major in the Army: Lawrie, Kitson, Dawson, Aked, Kneller, Ward, D'Aguilar, Fenton, Brown, Ballard. To be staff pymrs.: Majors Thornhill, vice Muskett, retired (Jan. 16); and Compigné, vice Large, retired (Jan. 21). Capt. Armstrong has been placed on temporary half-pay, on account of ill-health. Major Baron has retired on retired pay (Feb. 27), with the hon. rank of lieut.-col.

The Auxiliary Forces.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

Volunteers who have gone through a course of instruction in stretcher-drill and field-dressing, and have passed a satisfactory examination therein, will, in future, receive a certificate from the Volunteer Ambulance Department. Two Volunteers from each company who have so qualified will be selected by the commanding officer of the corps, on the recommendation of the medical officer, to be the stretcher-bearers of the corps, and to wear the Geneva badge on the right arm; and they will be entitled to wear the badge from year to year on certificates by the medical officer of the corps that they have attended not less than four ambulance drills during each year, ending Oct. 31.

The Gazettes.

Reviews.

Voyages of Discovery in the Arctic and Antarctic Seas, and Round the World. Second Volume. (London: Sampson Low and Co.)

The second volume of this work, of which the first was noticed in our last issue, opens with a description of a voyage made to the Wellington Channel in search of Sir John Franklin and the crews of the Erebus and Terror on April 21, 1852. The author gives an interesting description of the Esquimaux and of Disco, with its bold, black rocks and wonderful bergs. Not a few readers will be glad to read the ménu of a Disco breakfast. The pièce de résistance was eiderduck; another dish consisted of the inner skin of the whale preserved in vinegar, presenting a curious piebald appearance, the strips or ribbons into which it was cut being half black and half white; a third dish was a pudding of cod-fish and currants; then came coffee-biscuits and a cordial, with ginger-gin. The two waitresses—Marie and Sophie—evidently made a favourable impression on the author. Altogether, the reader will find no difficulty in coming to the conclusion that Disco is by no means a bad place to live in, and that the Governor has a very pleasant time of it. The illustrations with which both the volumes of this work are embellished are very far indeed superior to the best of those we are accustomed to see in any other country. The author's next experiences of Arctic exploration were in a boat expedition up the Wellington Channel in the year 1852, in the Forlorn Hope, in search of Sir John Franklin, and the narrative, supplemented by the author's remarks on the loss of Sir John Franklin, completes to the reader a meritorious work on a most interesting subject.

Messrs. W. Collins and Co., Limited, of Bridewell Place, E.C., have sent us some Pachyderm Stationery, which seems very smooth and pleasant to write upon.

Grant's Morella Cherry Brandy has obtained a medal and first-class award at the Calcutta International Exhibition. First-class medals were also obtained by the firm in London in 1871 and Melbourne in 1883.

The Egyptian Gazette says:—"From the moment we decided to intervene in Egypt against our will we decided as the cardinal point that that interference should be as little as possible. We may have been right or wrong, both in the idea and in the way we carried it out, but that was the main idea, and every act is consistent with it. We found it was necessary to destroy the forts of Alexandria. We did so, but declined to land troops. We found it was necessary to land troops and bring Arabi to reason. We did so, but declined to undertake the government of the country. We found it was necessary to undertake the government of the country, but we declined to interfere with the Soudan. We found it was necessary to interfere with the Soudan, but we determined not to send troops, and we have sent them. What next? The finger of Fate seems to be pointing us further and further down the road that we have honestly striven to avoid; hounded on by those who would have been the first to reproach us had we pursued a less honest policy, who would have proclaimed us criminals in the one case, as they proclaim us fools in the other—what course shall we adopt?"

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

TEWFIK BEY AND MORICE BEY.—Any of our readers who may be desirous of subscribing to the fund for the relief of the destitute widow and children of the gallant—nay, heroic—defender of Sinkat—Tewfik Bey—who fell, sword in hand, heading the sortie of his famished garrison, and proved himself as brave and as true a soldier as ever stepped, can send his subscription to our office, whence it will be forwarded to General Dormer, at Cairo (duly acknowledged). We shall be happy to receive and forward subscriptions to "the Morice Bey memorial," which it is proposed to raise for the erection of a suitable monument to the devoted officer, who illustrated in his death at El Teb the best qualities of an English soldier.

Army & Navy Gazette.
LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 15, 1884.

VERY recently the Pall Mall Gazette published, under the head of "General Gordon's Religious Opinions," long extracts from a work published some three or four years ago, in which letters, &c., were reproduced,—or rather, were printed for the public,—which, it is as well to let the public know, were not intended for their inspection. And that we have authority for saying so, those who read the letter which follows, may judge for themselves. The letter was, as our readers can see, written in answer to some remarks in this Journal in 1881, when General

Gordon was in the Mauritius, in reference to a notice of the book from which the "opinions" quoted by the Pall Mall Gazette were taken, and it was addressed to the old friend who was, General Gordon believed, the writer of these remarks. We have omitted some proper names. It will be observed that General Gordon did not wish his religious opinions to be concealed, but we think he would be a little surprised to see them put before the public as they were. Here is the letter:—

Mauritius, Dec. 21, 1881.

MY DEAR ———,—I happened to see your article in Army and Navy, Nov. 22 (or Oct., I think), and I cannot help thinking that what you wrote respecting ———'s book and my letter is very just. I mean that it was not fair to those who were kind enough to go with me to print passages which detracted from their efforts. Speaking now, when these things are past, I can conscientiously say that when I wrote thus I did so when worried and troubled, discontented, &c., and that it was more my fault in dealing with them, than their want of helping me. I never saw the book; I never read over the letters. Had I done so, I certainly would never have let them appear; indeed, one or two passages which I have seen in reviews are positively nauseating to me. Of course, I am in difficulty with respect to ——— and ———, who looked over the book. I do not excuse myself in any way. I wrote what was written, and the only thing I can say is that I impressed on those who were selecting portions of the correspondence was not to hurt any one's feelings; that egotism was to be cut out. I will not say I did not wish my views on religion to be concealed, and consequently I did not look with disfavour on the publication; but that I could wish to be praised, or to court praise at the expense of those brave fellows who were with me, is what I did not wish. However, I can do nothing now, and must be content to leave matters as they are, though should you think it right to use this letter, you can do so. This little paragraph is what my opinion is, and you were quite right in what you say about my being employed. The Duke knows I have told him so frequently, and that I have never sought it. Though I may put it in a queer way, I say that were I Prime Minister, I would not risk employing myself. "Unstable as water, thou shalt not excel," and I do not want to excel. I am afraid that this is a very egotistical letter, but I have now finished it. This place is very interesting, and must be important again, for we can never consider the Canal more than a second-rate communication; it can be so easily stopped. Gen. Murray, over 70, is a fine, old, shrewd man, and I hope he will stay on. If I get promoted, I am going to Syria, and may try to go to Nineveh. If more men wrote as you do, they would be more respected. Praise undeserved is censure in disguise; self-conceit is self-deceit, and who wants to be self-deceived?—Yours sincerely, C. E. GORDON.

[In a later letter, Col. Gordon says, "When one knows the little one does of oneself, and any one praises you, I, at any rate, have a rising in the gorge, which is a suppressed 'You lie!'"—ED. A. & N. G.]

Of course, there is irresponsibility in using the letter, "should you think right to do so," but we think no one will or can read it without rising from the perusal with, if possible, increased respect for the Christian Paladin who penned it.

The appointment of Major-General Elliot to the Curragh will afford employment for long pent-up energies and much soldierly experience; and it is far better that he should have waited till this for his chance, than that he should have wasted his time as military attaché in the salons of Paris. It is now nearly thirty years since, as Scarlett's best man, he went into the thick of that diagram of dragoons (as a red speck, duly illustrated in Mr. Kinglake's account of the cavalry actions of October 25, 1854), and came out with some tangible and visible marks of the rencontre. Even then he was possessed of actual campaigning knowledge, and had taken part in hard fighting; but any one who sees the erect figure, stalwart frame, and clear-cut features of the gallant sabreur to-day might well doubt that the Major-General could have served in India in the Sikh wars, or that he had done his devoir as staff officer at Balaclava. At present he promises to emulate the example of the veteran who directed the charge of the Heavies on that memorable day, and who is still to be seen shaming by his alertness and springiness, which seem little affected by the years which have elapsed since he first smelt fire with the Russian army in front of Varna in 1829, for that, we believe, was the Earl of Lucan's introduction to service, the exhausted energies of the young fellows of seventy who can just crawl up and down the steps of the Senior.

Among the resources of civilisation which the Mahdi or Zebehr Pasha will find at Khartoum, there will be apparently an excellent photographic establishment from which the London Stereoscopic Company have obtained very excellent likenesses of Major-General Gordon, with fac-simile of his signature. He is in the full uniform of a Turkish Pasha, with a tarboosh on his head, the Medjidie and the Osmanie, the Crimean medal, Legion of Honour, &c., all arrayed very distressingly low down on his left breast, or rather on his side, below the proper level, with the exception of his Cordon; but his features and his look are admirably given, though the lines in his face appear to have been softened down or rubbed out,—a fine, thoughtful brow, with a somewhat dreamy eye.

"More good news for the Army!"—the suggestion in the Times that the British Government should take charge of the "road" from Suakim to Khartoum, especially in the summer! Suakim would be lively enough in the dog days, and Siout will be most refreshing during the Khamseen, but when to these delicious stations there is added a chain of posts along the Desert to Khartoum, it will be difficult to restrain the rush of volunteers from the Service generally for duty in Egypt. "That way madness lies."

Perhaps the least said and the most done in consequence of the Russian occupation of Merv, the sooner the consequences will be mended. But if Russian interests, of which Russia must be the best judge, leads her to accept the suzerainty of the Turcomans, we may be pardoned to look after our own interests on the frontiers of India and towards Persia. There are a certain number of people here and in Egypt who think we ought to turn out all Egyptian officials and put Englishmen in their places, only on larger salaries, and possibly that might be called receiving the submission of the Egyptians. All that would be needed would be the consent of the Great Powers; and as to the Sultan there would be no difficulty, as arrangements would be made for acknowledging his Caliphate at Cairo, and escorting the Holy Carpet to Mecca and back by the British troops on the proposed frontier road to Suakim. The Russians act on very different lines, and, as it seems to us, with more success in the way of their march. They use "natives" as far and as much as they can.

The commands of the 1st and 2nd Infantry Brigades at Aldershot will be vacated by Major-Generals Walker and Willis, on the 31st inst. It is stated that Major-General T. C. Lyons, C.B., will get the command of the 1st Brigade.

It is quite proper that facilities should be afforded to the Volunteers for working alongside of the Regulars, and learning something of brigade and division drill; but we fail to see why what is conceded to the Volunteers should be systematically denied to the Militia. Since the discontinuance of the Autumn Manœuvres, our Militia battalions, with the very rarest exceptions, have been absolutely cut off from any chance of supplementing their annual individual trainings by any more advanced exercises, and we cannot wonder that even those of their officers who once were zealous are listless and disheartened. Why should they study tactics which they can never have a chance of practically applying? They know too well that the annual march-past is the limit of their duties; can we blame them if "Surtout, point de zèle," becomes their motto. The day may come when we shall regret that our Militia was permitted to moulder into undeserved decay.

A circular memorandum has recently emanated from Army Head-quarters on the subject of "courts-martial," addressed to General Officers Commanding at home and abroad. The large number of men tried by courts-martial during the past twelve months, and the severity of the sentences awarded, is the text of this lengthy, but interesting document. Owing to the altered conditions of service during recent years, a reduced scale of punishments is recommended, except for determined desertion and aggravated insubordination, and it is pointed out that the proper amount of punishment to be awarded in any case is the least amount by which discipline can be maintained.

Captain the Hon. F. W. Shore has been appointed Aide-de-Camp to Major-General Sir C. G. Arbuthnot, Inspector-General of Artillery, vice Captain Foote, who has vacated that appointment.

We regret to perceive in the leading journal one of the dangerous, irritating, and useless articles in which our newspapers from first to last are too apt to indulge, when they perform their favourite part of Universal Monitor to the world. At the very moment that our troops, under Graham, were about to engage with Osman Digna's tribesmen on the western shore of the Red Sea, the French columns, under Negrier, were victoriously driving the Chinese Tonquin rabblement out of Bacninh—with an ease and celerity which our heavy losses must cause us to regard with something like envy—the Times takes to lecturing France as to her ambitious projects, and incidentally rakes up a most dangerous matter,—the charges of cruelty which we know from our own experience will be made by foreign correspondents against any army, aided by savage auxiliaries, and engaged with a barbarous enemy. Those who know what the Swazis did in Sekukuni's valley, the Punjaubees and Brazier's Sikhs did at Lucknow, and the like, will be ready to admit that questions of the kind, especially when they are raised in an ill-natured way, and as a kind of exercise in the comparative anatomy of races had better be left alone. It is a dreadful fact, but it is a fact, nevertheless, that civilised Christian troops fighting inferior races, who do not understand any rule of war, except killing, and who accept and give no quarter, imitate their enemies. A wounded savage fires on a soldier, or wounds him with a dying thrust, and therefore there are no more wounded left to linger in their pain, and there are no prisoners. There are no such trophies of war as prisoners in an African campaign. Why should the Times gird at the French because they have followed, perhaps rather intently, as is their wont, the customs of war in like cases? The French are warned, too, against extending their operations in Tonquin by the same voice which is clamouring for the creation of a British province at Khartoum, under an English Major-General, and the establishment of a line of British posts from Suakim across the Nubian Desert to the Nile!

"57. The Commander-in-Chief has much pleasure in publishing the subjoined extract from a letter, dated January 1, 1884, from the Agent to the Governor-General, Rajputana, to Brigadier-General Gillespie, C.B., commanding Bikaneer Field Force:—'As I am leaving the camp of the Bikaneer Field Force to-morrow, I wish to place on record my sense of the admirable manner in which the force have performed the services which they have been called upon to undertake. Organised as this force was at almost a moment's notice, and marching through a country full of difficulties to transport and discomforts to men, they have, perhaps, in their own eyes achieved no tangible military ends. But the total absence of complaints from the villages of the territory through which you have passed has rendered this march a subject of admiration to the country people, of congratulation to myself, and may be fairly a subject of pride to yourself and the officers and men under your command. This state of things, I know, is attributable to the exertions of yourself and the officers of the Bikaneer Field Force, and I trust you will allow me to convey my thanks to you, and through you to the officers and men under your command.'—By order of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief. Adjutant-General's Office, Poona, dated February 8, 1884."

Mr. Labouchere will, in Committee of Supply on Army Estimates, Vote A, move to reduce the number of men on the Establishment of the Regular Army by 2,687. Strange are the ideas of the modern Radical!

The war-games played at Aldershot this winter, under the rules framed by Lieutenant-Colonel Prior, Royal Scots, have been a great success. As the object of the war-game is to give practical lessons, we think it would add to their reality if the cavalry patrols used in them were commanded by cavalry non-commissioned officers. Four would be enough for each game, as there would rarely be more than four cavalry patrols out at one time. We are of opinion that the character of the parades of the Army will be greatly affected by these games, the tactical knowledge of officers of all ranks being very much improved. Should this be the case, the thanks of the nation will be due to General Sir Beauchamp Walker, Director-General of Military Education, who was mainly instrumental in effecting their introduction.

Lord Eustace Cecil is to move an address for return of the age and length of service of the soldiers in each regiment engaged at the battle of Teb (in continuation of similar returns with regard to the troops engaged at Tel-el-Kebir).

Under the new Regulations and Orders for the Canadian Militia, candidates for commissions and certificates will be required to qualify for a corps of the city at one of the military schools established in the Dominion. The certificates will be issued for "long," "short," and "special" periods. It is not intended that the new Regulations shall apply to Manitoba, as there is at present no military school established in that province. The Dominion Government is stated to be negotiating with the Imperial authorities for the purchase of the Royal Artillery Park at Halifax, Nova Scotia, to be used as a school of gunnery.

Lieutenants H. C. Freer and J. W. Sears, 38th Staffordshire Regiment, are posted to the Militia of the Dominion of Canada for service. These two officers were graduates at the Royal Military College at Toronto, and received their commissions from that institution, and it was on this ground that their services were applied for.

A special course of "training" for Cavalry is to be instituted.

Lord Napier of Magdala formally opened on Saturday the United Service Warrant Officers' Club, an institution which promises to supply an undoubted want. The club-house is conveniently situated in New Coventry Street, Leicester Square. It is most comfortably fitted up. To staff serjeants employed in the Home District it will be a great boon, and the members of the Permanent Staff of the Auxiliary Forces will find it a convenience also. But it will be to Warrant officers visiting London during the furlough season that the club will be especially valuable, for a number of bedrooms are provided at reasonable rates, and they will be able to enjoy the comforts of a first-class hotel at the lowest possible tariff. Such an institution well deserves to be encouraged; it is calculated to advance the interests of her Majesty's service in many ways, and the promoters have earned the gratitude of all ranks by their exertions to establish on a sound basis a club which foreign officers visiting London will have pointed out to them as evidence of that professional fellowship which is yet a characteristic of the British Navy and Army.

Gunners—John Edwards, to the Vernon, additional; A. H. Churchill, to the Indus, additional, for the Rapid, vice Edwards; C. G. Crabb, to the Cambridge, additional, for the Foudroyant, vice Churchill.

COASTGUARD.

Chief Officer — Walter Gorman, to the Hercules, additional (Brook Station), vice Reed.

Chief Boatmen—William Lee, St. Margaret's Bay, to be chief boatman-in-charge, Yantlett Creek, vice F. Cole, promoted; W. Harding, Carnarvon, to be chief boatman-in-charge, Rhyl, vice R. Johns, pensioned.

Commissioned Boatmen—Robert J. Johnson, Mulroy, to be chief boatman, Tarbert, vice J. Dalby, invalided; Robert Powell, Garrison Point, to be chief boatman, Burnham, vice S. Fisher, promoted.

ALBACORE, Lieut. and Com. Smythies, returned to Devonport from experimental cruise on March 11, and went into harbour.

ALEXANDRA, Capt. Rawson, arrived at Suda Bay, Crete, on March 10.

AUDACIOUS, Capt. Hugo Pearson, flagship of Vice-Admiral Sir William Dowell, but at the time still flying the flag of Vice-Admiral G. O. Willes, was with the Linnet, Merlin, and Vigilant at Hong Kong on Feb. 5.

CARYSFORT, Capt. Walter Stewart, left Suakim on March 11 for Suez, with sick and wounded on board.

CONDOR, Com. Jeffreys, arrived at Alexandria from Malta on Feb. 28.

CONSTANCE, Capt. Doughty, left Coquimbo for Vancouver on Feb. 16.

CROCODILE, Capt. Carr, left Suez on March 10.

EURYALUS, Capt. Hastings, C.B., flagship of Rear-Admiral Sir William Hewett, V.C., was at Suakim on Feb. 27, with the Briton, Dryad, Ranger, Sphinx, Decoy, Coquette, Carysfort, Jumna, Orontes, Hecla, and Humber. The Tourmaline was at Madagascar. The Osprey was to leave Zanzibar on Feb. 25 for Madagascar. The Arab was on passage from Trincomalee to Aden. The Dragon left Bombay on Feb. 14 for the Persian Gulf. The Philomel was in the Persian Gulf.

FLY, Com. Hope, left Hong Kong on Feb. 5 for Canton. The Sapphire was at Nagasaki on Jan. 31; would leave for Kobé on Feb. 1. The Kestrel was at Tientsin, and will proceed to England in the spring. The Cockchafer was at Chefoo on Jan. 18, and remains there. The Albatross was at Hankow on Jan. 23, and remains there. The Espoir was at Chinkiang on Jan. 24, and remains there. The Curaçoa was at Chinkiang on Jan. 26, and remains there. The Champion was at Shanghai on Jan. 30, and remains there. The Midge was at Wenchow on Jan. 22; she was to proceed to Ningpo on Jan. 26. The Foxhound was at Foochow on Jan. 30, and remains. The Cleopatra was at Amoy on Feb. 2, and remains. The Swift left Hong Kong on Feb. 5 for Swatow, and was to return by Feb. 11. The Tweed was at Canton on Feb. 4, and was to return to Hong Kong on Feb. 6. The Daring was at Hoi How on Jan. 21, and was cruising between Pakhoi and Hoi How. The Pegasus was at Penang on Jan. 18, and was to remain until the first week in February, and then goes to Singapore. The Zephyr was at Singapore on Jan. 29, and remains. The Flying Fish was at Hong Kong on Feb. 5, and would leave on Feb. 9 to survey near Haitan Straits. The Magpie was at Penang on Jan. 25; since ordered home.

FORWARD, Lieut. and Com. Furlonger, left Malta on March 4 to rejoin the Channel Squadron at Suda Bay.

HEROINE. Capt. Blackburne, remains at Coquimbo.

HIMALAYA, Capt. Palliser, arrived at Gibraltar on March 11 from Halifax, and was to sail the same day for Malta.

MALABAR, Capt. Harris, arrived at Malta on March 10.

MINOTAUR, Capt. Fellowes, flagship of Vice-Admiral H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, with the Channel Squadron in company, arrived at Syra on March 13, the Achilles being ordered to Suda Bay.

MONARCH, Capt. F. G. D. Bedford, at Alexandria. The captain and officers gave a dance on Feb. 28, which was very well attended. The weather was most favourable for an entertainment of this description, and it was with regret that the guests found themselves compelled as the shades of evening came on to take leave of their hospitable entertainers.

MYRMIDON, Com. Carpenter, arrived at Malta on March 10, and left next day for the Red Sea.

OPAL, Capt. Brooke, was at Simon's Bay on March 12, and will remain till the Commander-in-Chief returns in April.

SWINGER, Lieut. and Com. Marx, arrived at Adelaide on March 9, and was to leave for Sydney on March 23.

SYLVIA, Capt. Wharton, may be expected to arrive at the Cape of Good Hope about April 22, when Capt. Wharton will return home, to take up his appointment as Hydrographer to the Admiralty.

ROYAL NAVAL COLLEGE, SESSION 1883-84.

CHRISTMAS TERM.—J. K. Laughton, Esq., M.A., R.N.: Nine Lectures on Naval History, from 12 to 1 on Wednesdays, beginning on Wednesday, Oct. 10. Staff-Com. Martin, R.N.: Twenty Lectures on Meteorology, from 9 to 10 on Saturdays, beginning on Saturday, Oct. 6.

EASTER TERM.—J. Allington, Esq.: Five Lectures on Leading Features of Torpedo Boats; Buoyancy and Water-tight Subdivisions of Ships; Stability of ships, from 12 to 1 on Wednesdays, beginning on Wednesday, Jan. 9. Capt. Leefe, R.M.A.: Six Lectures on Minor Tactics, from 11 to 12 on Saturdays, beginning on Saturday, Feb. 23. W. E. Hall, Esq.: Five Lectures on International Law, from 12 to 1 on Wednesdays, beginning on Wednesday, Feb. 27.

MIDSUMMER TERM. — Staff-Commander Martin, R.N: Severn Lectures on Practical Astronomy, from 11 to 12 on Saturdays, beginning on Saturday, April 26. T. S. Oborn, Esq., R.N.: Thirty-two Lectures on Navigation and Nautical Astronomy, from 9 to 10 on Mondays, Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Fridays, beginning on Tuesday, April 1. R. Sennett, Esq., R.N.: Five Lectures on the Present Condition of Marine Engineering, from 4 to 5 on Tuesdays and Thursdays, beginning on Tuesday, April 29.

Officers of all ranks, in any department of the public service, are permitted to attend these lectures. Those officers who are not Students of the College are requested to sign their names, with rank appended, at the entrance of the lecture-room.

Acting sub-lieutenants who obtain first or second-class certificates in pilotage are to be exercised on board ships they subsequently serve in either as sub-lieutenants or lieutenants in navigating duties occasionally. They will receive an addition to pay whilst so employed.—Portsmouth Times.

The Admiralty have selected Com. L. Fanshawe, late of the Valorous, to succeed Com. J. E. Greenhow, at the Duncan (Royal Naval Barracks). Com. Greenhow, who will vacate his appointment on the 17th inst., has held the appointment since March, 1881.

Garrison Point Fort is about to be increased by the mounting of several additional 12-ton guns.

Class II. of the Army Reserve will not be called out for exercise during the year. This suspension of training will not affect the issue of the necessaries allowance.

In reply to a memorial to the War Office on the part of the Corporation of Portsmouth, in favour of the continuance of Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar in the command of the Southern Division, the Marquis of Hartington states that to do so would not be in accordance with the regulations of the War Office, and would not meet with the approbation of other general officers.

The collection of Naval and Military "Photo-Mezzotint Portraits" of Mr. Fradelle, of Little Argyll Street, is worth a visit. In addition to many officers of the Navy, Army, and Auxiliary Forces who have made a name for themselves, distinguished Members of the Lords and Commons, the Ecclesiastical Body, the Bar, the Medical, Artistic, and Literary professions have sat for their portraits. Lord Northbrook and Lord Wolseley head their respective services at Mr. Fradelle's.

HOW TO AVOID THE INJURIOUS EFFECTS OF STIMULANTS. —The present system of living—partaking of too rich foods, as pastry, saccharine and fatty substances, alcoholic drinks, and an insufficient amount of exercise—frequently deranges the liver. I would advise all bilious people, unless they are careful to keep the liver acting freely, to exercise great care in the use of alcoholic drinks, avoid sugar, and always dilute largely with water. Experience shows that porter, mild ales, port wine, dark sherries, sweet champagne, liqueurs, and brandies, are all very apt to disagree; while light white wines, and gin or old whisky largely diluted with soda water, will be found the least objectionable. ENO'S FRUIT SALT is peculiarly adapted for any constitutional weakness of the liver; it possesses the powers of reparation when digestion has been disturbed or lost, and places the invalid on the right track to health. A world of woes is avoided by those who keep and use ENO'S FRUIT SALT, therefore no family should ever be without it. CAUTION.—Legal Rights are protected in every Civilised Country. Examine each bottle, and see the Capsule is marked "ENO'S FRUIT SALT." Without it, you have been imposed on by worthless imitations. Sold by all Chemists, price 2s 9d and 4s 6d. Directions, in Sixteen Languages, how to Prevent Disease. Prepared only at ENO'S Fruit Salt Works, Hatcham, London, S.E., by J. C. ENO'S Patent.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS, Etc.

G. A. T.—Better let the matter rest as it is.

W. F.—No trooper would be passed for foreign service with the injury you refer to, but it is probable that where there is a prospect of reducing it, the medical officer may retain the man. It is, however, a ground of discharge. "Being continually in the saddle" is not the cause as you suppose. It is common among men who never ride.

QUARTERMASTERS.—We do not believe the papers purposely omitted the answer, but they do not report so fully as the Times. The man who asked the question is the worst "champion" possible, and would damn the best cause by his advocacy.

F. S. F.—Such is the present idea.

C. H. R.—We have seen no such report as that to which you refer, and would be very glad if you could tell us of any notice.

D'ETAMPES.—Your judicious paper on Musketry must stand over.

G. A. J.—Better let it rest at present.

G. W. H. C., C.B., &c.—We regret we have no space for your letters, which are in type.

GENERAL BOXER ON VOLUNTEER ARMAMENT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—In a leading article in yesterday's Times, and in a notice which appeared on Tuesday, upon the Army Estimates of the coming financial year, the following statements occur with reference to the rearming of the Volunteers with the Martini-Henry rifle:—(1), "The time is come for the supply to our best marksmen, the Volunteers, of a rifle suited to their skill;" and (2), the weapons with which they are now armed "are so worn as to be little better than smooth-bore muskets." Although the extremely beneficial results to the country derived from the Volunteer movement cannot be denied, nor the great value of this defensive force, if properly organised and trained, I doubt very much if it is correct to say that the Volunteers, taken as a whole, are our best marksmen. It is true that the very small per-centage of the force which attend the meetings at Wimbledon display great skill in target shooting at known ranges, and when firing under favourable conditions; but there is no evidence to prove that, even in the case of these picked men, it would be proper to apply the term "marksmen," if by marksmen is understood those who are capable of shooting accurately under the ordinary conditions of war; and moreover, it would be unreasonable—I may truly say absurd—to judge of the shooting qualities of the mass of Volunteers by the results of the target shooting of the few who go to Wimbledon to compete for prizes. And I think it extremely probable that as regards the mass of the Regular Forces and that of the Volunteers, the former would not compare unfavourably with the latter as regards skill in war shooting. It would, no doubt, be a great advantage if all branches of the service were armed with weapons firing the same ammunition, and it would probably be convenient for those who shoot for prizes at long ranges to have the Martini-Henry as the service arm; but I feel convinced that, as regards the mass of the Volunteers, or, indeed, of the Regular Army, the Snider has qualities of accurate shooting in excess of the skill of the men, and is a more suitable weapon in some respects. With regard to the stated conditions of the "Sniders" now in the hands of the Volunteers, I doubt very much "if they are so worn as to be little better than smooth-bore muskets;" but if this be a true account of the state of these rifles, it appears to me to be a strong argument against arming the force with a more delicate weapon, for their worn condition must have resulted from improper handling. I notice that the writer of the article in yesterday's Times indulges in the usual sneer at "the old school of officers." It is to be regretted that the leading journal, when dealing with Army subjects, should attach little or no weight to the opinion of those who have the greatest experience. With other professions, the opinions of those who have practised longest are generally regarded as the most reliable, and there are special reasons why the same principle should be observed in dealing with military matters.—I am, &c.,

Upton, near Ryde, March 13. E. M. BOXER.

Lieuts. R. E. de Lisle and R. A. J. Montgomerie have been appointed to command the Dee and Don, gunboats, both of which are at Malta ready for commissioning, and the crews for which are on their way out from England.

ARMY and NAVY CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY (Limited),

117 Victoria Street, Westminster, S.W.

NOTICE is hereby Given that, at the General Meeting of the Shareholders of this Society, to be held at the Westminster Town Hall, Caxton Street, Westminster, on Thursday, March 27, the following Alterations in and Additions to the Articles of Association will be proposed :—

55A.—The Committee may with the sanction of a Resolution of the Society in General Meeting out of the profits carry over to a separate account to be called "The Deferred Bonus Account," or such other name as the Committee shall think fit; any sum they may think proper to be allotted to the Shareholders in proportion to their shares, and to be payable upon such contingency or contingencies, either separately affecting the respective Shareholders (as, e.g., the respective deaths of the existing Shareholders at the date of the Resolution), or otherwise, as shall by the Resolution be determined, and so that the several parts of the fund so carried over shall, so long as the same remain unpaid, bear interest at such rate as may be determined.

56.—To be altered by adding at the end, the words, —This clause is to apply to the interest credited on any part of "The Deferred Bonus Fund," but is not to apply to any part of the Fund itself.

57.—To be altered by inserting at the commencement of it, "Subject to the provisions of article 55A."

By Order,
H. LAWSON, Secretary.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS.—Whenever the weather is variable and the temperature constantly changing, the weak and delicate must be very careful to neglect no symptom of disordered action or ill-health. Weak-chested and strumous subjects will find in these noble remedies the means of casting out the bad humours which originate and prolong their sufferings. The Ointment should be well rubbed twice a day over the chest, and the Pills taken in alterative doses. It will penetrate and act most wholesomely and energetically on the diseased structures. These remedies manifest a wonderful power in removing all taints from the blood, and consequently in curing a multitude of chronic ailments which seemed to be almost irremediable.

OFFICERS of the MILITIA PREPARED for the above EXAMINATION at The Abbey, Abingdon, Berks.

More than one-third of the Competitors from the Abbey obtained commissions in 1881-82-83. Total number of Students limited to 15. No class exceeds five Students. Work will be resumed on April 16. Further particulars on application.

MILITARY EDUCATION, GERMANY.—Colonel BERDOE WILKINSON, late R.E., formerly in charge of the Ordnance Survey in Ireland, and Lieutenant-Colonel WILKINSON SHAW, M.A. (Staff College), late Garrison-Instructor at Aldershot, prepare Candidates for Sandhurst and Woolwich, and for Line Commissions through the Militia.

At the five Militia Competitions which have taken place since September 1, 1881, Colonel WILKINSON and Lieutenant-Colonel SHAW have secured for their Pupils THIRTY-EIGHT COMMISSIONS, although they have only Prepared and sent up a very Limited Number of Candidates. A list of successful Pupils, showing the high places taken by them, will be furnished on application.

At the Militia Literary Examinations held during the same period, a Number of Pupils have also passed; in this Competition the FIRST PLACE was taken in April last by Lieutenant Lord Skelmersdale, and the SECOND PLACE in the recent October Examination by the only candidate sent up, Lieutenant the Honourable Victor A. Pelham.

The results of the last WOOLWICH and SANDHURST EXAMINATIONS have also added to the general score, which now amounts to SEVENTY-SEVEN SUCCESSES, obtained by Pupils since September 1, 1881.

Address, DARMSTADT, GERMANY.

LIEUTENANTS of MILITIA desirous of competing for Line Commissions can be received by the Rev. WALTER BAKER, M.A., at Batcombe Rectory, Evercreech, Bath. They will be thoroughly prepared in all Military Subjects by two Officers who for several years past have been engaged with distinguished success in this special work.

Great individual attention is secured, both Instructors are resident and give their whole time, very few Pupils are taken, and steady work is insisted on. Since the introduction of the Military Competitive, out of Forty-four Lieutenants of Militia sent up, Twenty-seven have been successful, several taking high places in the list.

A Large Staff of Experienced Tutors, all resident, assist in preparing for the Qualifying Examinations, and for the Sandhurst and Woolwich Competitions.

THE MOUNTED SERVICE BOOT.—PATENT.

A COMPLETELY NEW and USEFUL INVENTION. By a CAVALRY OFFICER.

It is equally suitable for riding or walking, and consists of an upper and lower part, which, when adjusted by the peculiar arrangement of the spur, forms a complete riding boot, and at the same time the comfort of a boot and gaiter for walking is ensured. The lower part can be worn also as an ordinary walking boot. ECONOMY, COMFORT, and PORTABILITY.

Specially recommended to all Officers and Sportsmen going Abroad.

OROIDE GOLD JEWELLERY (REGD.)

"Recommends itself not alone to those of limited means, but to the wealthy, who, when frequenting large gatherings, whether at racecourses, theatres, public meetings, or even on that sacred thoroughfare, the king's highway, have known what it is to be robbed of their valuables."

OROIDE GOLD WATCHES,
Accurate timekeepers, 21s to 50s, safe and free per post (registered).
The "SERVICE" KEYLESS WATCH,
Open face, jewelled in eight holes, Two Guineas, post free.

"The watches of this patent are in no respect different from gold ones. The degree of finish, of course, regulates the price, but the cheapest class is capable of performing with accuracy for from fifteen to twenty-five years. As to strength and solidity, the Oroide cases are undoubtedly superior to those of gold watches. No other form of amalgam can rival Mr. Rowe's in the general essentials of a substitute for gold."

"Thousands of persons who, though not wishing to impose on their friends by a display of what is but a semblance of the real metal, have not been indisposed to find an equally good-looking metal, which, reproduced in a watch, a chain, or article of jewellery, would not be a costly thing to buy, nor a dear thing to lose." OROIDE GOLD SCARF PINS, 2s 6d to 5s, post free.

LINKS and STUDS, Complete Suite, 5s 6d, 6s 6d.
ALBERT CHAINS, in all the Leading Fashions of fine Gold, 7s 6d and 10s 6d.

JACK of "OURS." F. N. Lohr and Oxenford's Grand New Baritone Song.

FIRST VERSE:

I came across old Jack of "Ours"
A day or two ago;
He's just as prime, and smart, and trim,
As when he fac'd the foe!
Why, let me see, he's eighty-three,
And I—well, let that pass—
And yet he'd sing, with the same old ring,
These words across a glass:
"Merrily, my lads, soho, soho;
They may talk of a life at sea,
But a life on land,
With a sword in hand,
Is the life, my lads, for me."

Sung with immense success by Messrs. Robert Hilton, Egbert Roberts, James Budd, James Bayne, C. M'Turk, E. A. Williams, Wilford Price, B. Thelenberg, J. A. Stafford, E. Gatfield, John Philps, &c. Published in three keys, D, E flat, and F. 2s net.

THE PARCELS POST.—THE PARCELS POST AND TEA.

THE PARCELS POST and the DELIVERY of TEA.

THE PARCELS POST and the DISTRIBUTION of TEA to every place where there is a Post-Office in the United Kingdom.

THE PARCELS POST.—TEA of the highest excellence (as supplied to Dukes, Earls, Barons, and the County Families of England), sent free by Parcels Post in quantities of 4 lb., 5 lb., and 6 lb., to any postal address in the United Kingdom, on receipt of a remittance for the price of the Tea and 3d.

THUS 4 lb. of TWO-SHILLING TEA can be sent to any address free, by post, on receipt of 8s 3d. Thus 6 lb. of Half-Crown Tea can be sent free of post on receipt of 15s 3d. Thus 5 lb. of Three-Shilling Tea can be sent free of post on receipt of 15s 3d.

THE POSTAL LIMIT of 7 lb. will only really cover 6 lb. of Tea, as the weight of paper and twine has to be deducted, so that COOPER COOPER and CO. will send 6 lb. of Three-Shilling Tea free of post for 18s 3d, or 6 lb. of Two-and-Sixpenny Tea free of post for 15s 3d, or 6 lb. of Two-Shilling Tea free of post for 12s 3d.

PACKAGES containing 12 lb., 20 lb., 60 lb., or 100 lb. of TEA will be sent to any railway station in the United Kingdom absolutely free of carriage on receipt of remittance for the value of the Tea.

THE PARCELS POST.—4 lb., 5 lb., or 6 lb. of TEA will be delivered free of charge at your own houses by the postman, for 3d in addition to the cost of the tea.

THUS 4 lb. of TWO-SHILLING TEA will be delivered free at your own house for a remittance of 8s 3d. Thus 5 lb. of Two-Shilling Tea will be delivered free at your own door for a Post-Office Order for 10s 3d. Thus 6 lb. of Two-Shilling Tea will be sent free to your own homes for a cheque for 12s 3d.

THE PARCELS POST.—4 lb., 5 lb., or 6 lb. of THREE-SHILLING TEA despatched to any part of England, Wales, Scotland, or Ireland, by post for 3d in addition to the price of the Tea.

THUS 4 lb. of THREE-SHILLING TEA can be sent to the remotest address on receipt of remittance for 12s 3d. Thus 5 lb. of Three-Shilling Tea will be forwarded to any place where letters are delivered, postage paid, for 15s 3d. Thus 6 lb. of Three-Shilling Tea will be sent to any address in any postal district in these islands for 18s 3d.

TEAS of all descriptions on COOPER COOPER and CO.'S LIST, posted in parcels containing 4 lb., 5 lb., and 6 lb. each by parcels post to any part of England, Wales, Ireland, or Scotland, in exchange for cash (in registered envelope). Post-Office Orders, cheques, postal orders, or stamps for the value of the tea, and 3d extra.

FOR example, a Package containing 4 lb. of TWO-SHILLING TEA can be sent to any place in the United Kingdom in exchange for 8s 3d in cash, enclosed in a registered envelope, and addressed to any of COOPER COOPER and CO.'S establishments in London.

OR, a Parcel containing 6 lb. of TWO-SHILLING TEA can be delivered by parcels post, carriage free, by remitting a Post-Office Order for 12s 3d.

OR, 5 lb. of TWO-SHILLING TEA will be despatched, free of post, for a postal order for 10s, and three penny postage stamps.

THUS, in the same manner, THREE-SHILLING TEA in parcels to the value of 12s 3d, 15s 3d, and 18s 3d each, containing respectively 4 lb., 5 lb., and 6 lb. of tea, will be sent on receipt of postal orders, cheques, or cash for the several amounts.

CO-OPERATION. — COOPER COOPER and CO. also invite attention to the new System of Co-operation in the purchase of Tea by persons living in the country through the medium of the Parcels Post.

CO-OPERATION.—Thus, as COOPER COOPER and CO. are enabled to send packages containing 6 lb. of any of the Choice TEAS on their List to any place in the United Kingdom for 3d, it follows that if six families in a village are willing to club together, each can have a pound of tea sent for one halfpenny.

CO-OPERATION.—Or, as two parcels containing 6 lb. each can be sent for 6d, six families would be enabled, by joining together in one remittance, to order 2 lb. of TWO-SHILLING TEA each, at a cost of one penny only, in addition to the price of the tea.

CO-OPERATION.—This system will apply to every kind of TEA offered for Sale by COOPER COOPER and CO., and if followed out will practically enable them to place before customers in every county town and village in England, Scotland, Ireland, and Wales, in the Channel Islands, and the Isle of Man, in the Hebrides, and the Orkneys, Tea of the same choice kinds as sold in their various Establishments in London, at the same prices, with the addition of the nominal sum of one halfpenny a pound.

THE BATTLE OF TAMAI.

THE military operations conducted by the Queen's Army against the Arab spearmen, under the Suakim tradesman named Osman Digna, have been successful. "The supremacy of England," we are told, has been asserted in the Desert. The sons of Ishmael have been killed and wounded to a satisfactory extent. Some of our newspapers call the rabblement who rushed so valiantly to their death against cannon, machine-guns, breech-loaders, and horsemen, an "army." It was but a mob of wild men, without military training, formation, equipment, or appliances, who, nevertheless, feared not to die for their faith, fighting on their own soil against tremendous odds; for had they been tenfold as many as they were, the odds in the actual array of means to resist and to destroy were hopelessly—overwhelmingly—on the side of their enemies. Now, these were brave men who did these things. Had they been Celtic Irish in the Widow MacCormack's cabbage-garden, or Highland clansmen at Culloden, what a difference it might have made in history! What a theme their deeds would have furnished for writers in the "patriot Press" across the water, and for Jacobite poets, like Ayrton and his fellows! Not one jot does it detract from the praise due to the courage and superior skill of their masters in the fight—the white-faced Northmen from the Isles, who, with indomitable strength and masterful might of armament and bravery, met the rush of these intrepid martyrs for their faith—that they were disciplined soldiery. But still we cannot but deplore the necessity which caused the slaughter of such splendid foes. It was scarcely a Christian work. The God of Battles who presided over the field was surely not the Preacher of the Sermon on the Mount? Soldiers, however, have but the one duty to perform. "Theirs not to question why." It is a matter for the philosopher to determine whether or not any war at all, or this war, is justified by the cause or end, or at all justifiable. A soldier, whether he is engaged in war, or is merely killing people in "a military operation" which is not war at the rate of 500 an hour, is doing his duty; and General Graham and his troops in the abstract deserve as much credit for their most trying and arduous campaign, for so it may well be called, as if they had been engaged against regular Egyptians in a fortified camp, as at Tel-el-Kebir, or had marched through the defiles of fighting Afghanistan. It is to be observed with regret that the tendency to boast and brag of our prowess, which in Frenchmen is called "chauvinisme," has led some journals to indulge in absurdities which will, we hope, escape foreign critics, and therefore we shall not name them. But there was scarcely any anticipation of what was to occur in the papers which is not disproved by the known facts, as stated by competent witnesses, for whatever else may be disputed, there is a consensus of evidence that the appearance of the horsemen in the nick of time saved one brigade from the disgrace of headlong rout before the Arab spearmen. The deplorable obstinacy shown by the Adjutant-General in refusing to let a horse battery accompany the force under Graham is illustrated most painfully by the temporary loss of our artillery, and by the pitiable fate of the gallant sailors, of course on foot, who served the pieces, for any artillery officer of ordinary intelligence, seeing that he had no cavalry support and that the infantry were wavering, would, in presence of a determined charge on his guns being imminent, have limbered up and retired. Suppose there had been a few Arabs with skill enough to disable the breech-loaders and machine-guns, or to have turned them on our square! The consequences might have been the destruction of the whole force. We cannot reproduce at length the details which the telegraph from Suakim transmitted with marvellous rapidity and accuracy, day after day, and column after column, to the principal morning papers. The duty of a General is to fight as much as is needed, and to write as little as possible, and the official despatches are very meagre and colourless, as well as bald and brief, compared with the admirable narratives of the Correspondents. In fact, it may be thought at Suakim, at least, that these gentlemen were a little too precise, and we shall not be surprised to see indignant denials of the statement that there was anything like the perturbation which is described by the Times' Correspondent as incidental on a charge of footmen in the smoke, and the consequent désarroi of one brigade. Poor Feldzeugmeister von Benedek attributed the capture of Chlum, and the consequent loss of the battle of Königgrätz, to the "pulver-dampf;" but it never occurred to him to excuse the unsteadiness of his infantry on the plea put forward by one journalist, that the nerves of the men had been shaken by their proximity to the enemy all night, and to the tension of being under fire and in expectation of attack for such a lengthened period. Yet no doubt there was something in it. We cannot, in fact, think it was quite wise to have pushed the force so close to the position of such an enemy, but we are unwilling to assert there could be no reason for it. In the same spirit, we hazard the observation that it seems strange that there were no avant-postes, no advance guards, or outlying pickets. Then, again, there may have been good cause for what appears a departure from sound practice, in the nature of the ground, or of the enemy, or of the situation, which we do not know anything about. The force which fought at El Teb, having been marched back to Trinkitat and skilfully embarked there and landed at Suakim, was, without much respite, marched from Suakim to the entrenchment formed by Baker, and halted there for concentration, and the collection of supplies and provision of water, as our readers have read, following almost hour after hour every movement of Graham's force; and when all was ready, advanced over the ground which lay between them and Osman Digna's position in the hills, till they were within a measureable distance of his desultory fusillade. The evening of the 12th was troublous, for "about 5.30 p.m. the rebels began to show thickly on the ridge about a thousand yards to the left face. Four 9-pounders were dragged on to the rising ground on the left face to disperse them. Five shells were thrown on to the ridge, the sighting being excellent. The rebels found the ridge too hot, and withdrew, firing. The convoys with water and provisions arrived from the zariba at 6.15 p.m. The convoys were in charge of Lieutenant Chamley Turner, who deserves the highest praise for his activity and efficiency in discharging his duties, being always on the spot at the right moment." The "rebels," as they are ludicrously styled, seeing that the Khedive has given up the Soudan, in which these tribes live, and that they cannot owe allegiance to the Queen, who does not own it, blazed away all night, and hit horses and men, but under the bright moonlight they did not like to come too close, and it is suggested that they were "daunted by the preternatural silence" of our troops, lying down in their squares; but it would seem as if we must have made some noise too, for we opened fire with our biggest guns (9-pounders) before nightfall, and at 7 a.m. our guns and Gatlings were plying the Arabs with shrapnel and bullets. At 7.30, a.m. Herbert Stewart moved out his cavalry to feel for the enemy, and the bugles sounded for the fall-in. Our troops left the bivouac at 8 o'clock, marching by brigades, separated, however, by an interval of a thousand yards, en échelon, the 2nd Brigade leading. This brigade was composed of the 42nd, 65th, Royal Marines, and Naval Brigade, with Gardners and Gatlings. The 1st Brigade comprised the 89th Gordon Highlanders, 60th Rifles, nine and seven-pounder batteries, and Royal Marines. As the 2nd Brigade moved off to the left, led by General Davis, it was joined by General Graham and Staff. "Our route," says a correspondent, "lay across dry watercourses towards a deep nulla full of boulders and huge detached rocks. Meanwhile the Cavalry, which had taken up a position on our left rear, sent forward two squadrons, together with the Abyssinians, to skirmish. The enemy coming on, the skirmishers fell back, and the 2nd Brigade went forward 700 yards, firing as they went. The troops had opened out nearly into line, their rear to a great extent being covered by the 1st Brigade, which was half-a-mile away on our right. As we gained the edge of the nulla the fire became very hot from our side, the enemy mostly contenting themselves by attempting to rush at us with their spears and swords. Our men could not easily be got, despite trumpet-calls and officers' shouts, to reserve their fire and aim carefully. In a few minutes our line was obscured by dense smoke from our own rifles, and under cover of this the enemy crept up the sides of the nulla." The Times' Correspondent gives a technical account of the formation. He says:—"The 2nd Brigade was in advance. The front line was formed by a half-battalion of the York and Lancaster Regiment, and a half-battalion of the Black Watch (Royal Highlanders), with the other half-battalion of each regiment in open column on the respective outer flanks, ready to wheel up into line. In rear, in a second line, close to the flanks of the first line, were the Royal Marines, in line. A nine-pounder battery of four guns in rear of the detachment of the York and Lancaster Regiment, having the half-battalion of that regiment in column on its right flank. The Gatling battery was in the same position on the left flank of the front line, so that on the word, 'Halt,' by the outward wheel of the half-battalion on the flank, square would be instantly formed. The 1st Brigade was in the same formation, with a half-battalion of the Gordon Highlanders and a half-battalion of the Royal Irish Fusiliers forming the front line, the remaining half-battalions of these regiments being in column in rear of their flanks. The camel battery was in rear of the centre of the front line." That sounds very well, but what happened was not foreseen. "The force advanced in échelon of brigades by fours from the right of companies. The morning was bright and clear, but with no breeze to carry away the smoke of the men's fire. As we approached the steep side of the valley we were met by numerous bodies of the enemy, who retreated before the fire of our men to the edge of the incline, where they halted and awaited our approach." As the front line approached the foe the men began to cheer, and with fixed bayonets advanced at the double, thereby increasing the gap already existing between them and their companions forming the sides. The 65th, who were on the right, Marines on their left, and 42nd on extreme left, were nearest the brink of the nulla, which, on their front, made a bend inwards towards them. As the first companies reached the edge of the incline the rebels suddenly appeared in great numbers, leaping from behind the rocks, and made a wild charge upon the square. Our men could not see their enemy for the smoke, and so a species of momentary panic arose. The rebels were quick to profit by the confusion in our ranks. They crawled on their hands and knees beneath the bayonets and beneath the muzzles of the Gardners and Gatlings, and thus got into the square, when they commenced stabbing and slashing our men, doing terrible execution among them. At close quarters with the cold steel our men were no match for these powerful savages, who dodge the bayonets or catch them on their shields, and deliver two or three spear-thrusts before the man armed with the bayonet can recover. The York and Lancaster men fell back in confusion behind the Naval Brigade, thus cutting the latter off from their limbers and ammunition. That the Naval Brigade stuck to their guns to the last is sufficiently testified by the fact that they lost three officers and eleven men before they left their guns, and then only retired when they had no more ammunition." Another correspondent says:—"The 65th wavered and began to fall back on the Marines and 42nd, opening great gaps in the square. Through the smoke the dark figures could be seen rushing on, unchecked even for an instant by the hail of bullets, and in another minute they were upon us, and the fight became hand to hand. The breaking-up of the square by the recoil of the 65th threw the Marines and the Black Watch also into confusion, and the square no longer existed. [!] The enemy pressed upon the front as well as on the right flank, dashing in upon what was now a confused mass of troops, spearing many, and dying themselves on our bayonets or by our bullets. The machine-guns had to be abandoned. The Blue-jackets, despite the misadventure, managed to remove the sights and otherwise temporarily disable the weapons, which all fell into the hands of the rebels. To their credit, be it ever said, many men disdained to run, but went back with their faces to the foe, firing and striking with the bayonet. Several hundred of Marines and Highlanders fought back to back, firing and retiring in excellent order. They were over 200 yards to the Brigade front when it was halted and re-formed, and to their great coolness and steadiness is largely due the final success of the day. [!] General Graham and his Staff tried their best to hold and rally the men, and General Davis and all the officers laboured to get the troops to stand their ground in an orderly way. We came back about 800 yards, moving in a more easterly direction than the line of advance. By this time the fire from the 1st Brigade, on our right as well as front, and the Cavalry on our left, held the Arabs, and the officers succeeded in checking the retreat. In that single struggle we lost over seventy men killed. The bodies of over thirty of the 65th and about an equal number of the 42nd lay within a radius of fifty yards, all shockingly mangled and hewn with sword-cuts and spear wounds. The Arabs lay dead in hundreds." And now the Cavalry came on the scene. We confess we do not quite comprehend how it was they were not in the usual place in the advance. "It was some moments before the retreat could be checked, and then the check was in a great measure due to the action of the Cavalry. When first the Infantry were engaged the Cavalry withdrew to the rear, where they were hidden from the enemy by a fall in the ground. In the panic, the cavalry advanced at a trot, meaning to afford aid to the infantry by a charge. This, happily, was unnecessary. The enemy, seeing a large body of cavalry bearing down upon them, hesitated, and this gave time to the soldiers to listen to their officers and re-form. They did not do so a moment too soon, for the rebels, elated by their first success, soon began to come on again, and the men had all their work to do to repulse them by a heavy fire, and so prevent a repetition of the reverse. Here, again, the cavalry did good service, some of the squadrons dismounting and firing volleys at the rebels, who were collecting in the rear and on the flanks, and advancing part towards the zariba, and others towards the rear of the flanks of the 2nd Brigade. All this time the other brigade, 500 yards on the rear, were moving forward in perfect order, and advancing with the steadiness of troops on a parade-ground. In front of them were the guns of the Marine Artillery, and these opened fire upon the enemy, but without checking them. Upon getting back in line with the Brigade, covered by their fire, Davis's Brigade rallied at once, and the men very speedily resumed their formation; and, as if determined to retrieve the disorder into which they had been thrown, they now advanced manfully side by side with Buller's square. So terrible was the fire which the united brigades poured into the enemy, that their advance was at length checked; but there was no retreat, for few of the impetuous Arabs who had surged down upon us turned their face to the rear, nearly the whole being swept away by our fire. On reaching the point where the Arabs had charged down upon the leading brigade, the guns which had been abandoned when Davis's square was broken were recovered. Short as was the time, the Arabs had run one of the Gatlings down into the nulla, and set fire to an ammunition limber belonging to some gun. The gun was recovered, but the limber fired shots for half an hour afterwards. It was now the turn of the 2nd Brigade, which was under General Redvers Buller's immediate command. The 2nd was halted on the right of the nulla, and forward, down, and across it went the 1st Brigade. The men were formed in square, the Gordon Highlanders on the right and the 89th on the left being leading regiments, with the 60th in the rear and the nine and seven-pounders, under Major Gough, in the centre. They advanced to the edge of the ridge commanding the entire breadth of the valley, where they poured a murderous fire into the rebels, who were soon in hot retreat, tumbling down the valley side, scouring across the plain, and hiding here and there behind the bushes and rocks. All chance of success had departed for the enemy, who began to understand that this was the case. Now and then, with wonderful courage, two or three devoted fanatics charged up the valley side, only to fall after proceeding a few yards, their bodies rolling and bounding downwards from rock to rock. The objective point was the second intervening range, 800 yards off. With a cheer the men took the first ridge. The Arab fire in reply to ours was feeble and wild, and they soon began trotting off towards the mountains. General Graham, with a portion of his Staff, directed the advance. The defence of the second ridge was insignificant. Gaining the top, the brigade descended slowly into the valley, and then took the opposite heights at the charge. Clearing the way before them with a steady fire, they then descended the next hill into a small valley, where Osman Digna's camp lay. The rebels made here an attempt to hold their own, but by doing so only lost a few more brave warriors, and the village was taken. The village, or, properly speaking, the villages—for there are three villages, situated at distances of about a quarter of a mile from one another—are formed of bush and mat huts. Having burned the villages and all they contained, the 1st Brigade recrossed the valley and joined the 2nd Brigade, which had meanwhile occupied the Wells, where we are now halted. From Tamasi the troops brought back Osman Digna's standard and Tewfik Bey's standard, which was captured when his force was annihilated." The Standard's correspondent, telegraphing at 7 p.m. on Thursday, says:—"I have just returned to Suakim from the front. When I left there, the entire force were marching into the zareeba we occupied last night. They will remain there until to-morrow morning, and will then march to the next zareeba, and the following day will arrive at Suakim. Upon my way back I passed over the battle-field. From what I saw there I should increase my estimate of the killed to at least 3,000. The Arabs lie in heaps, as the Egyptians did in the square on General Baker's battle-field. Alongside of them are the skeletons of the Black Regiment annihilated here three months since, and now terribly avenged. Osman is said to have fled to the hills."

And now what is to be done? The troops had to go back to Suakim, because they could not stay where they were, and very soon Suakim will be like Aden with the chill off, and no Aden barracks, or casemates, or comforts; in fact, untenable at present. Admiral Hewett and General Graham are trying "proclamations." We hope they may succeed. But one thing —one act of insanity and wickedness—we deprecate, the dispatch of British soldiers, horse or foot, across the Desert from the shores of the Red Sea to the Nile in the month of March. It is reported that General Graham has asked, as it is, for reinforcements. The Queen has, of course, telegraphed her congratulations to the victors, and expressed her unfailing sympathy for the fallen and the wounded of her gallant sailors and soldiers.

OFFICERS KILLED.

Major Walker Aitken, 1st Batn. Royal Highlanders, was born in 1842, and was appointed ensign of the 42nd Foot in 1861. In 1865 he was gazetted lieutenant, and in 1874 as captain. He was appointed major in the Royal Highlanders in 1881. Major Aitken served in the Ashantee war of 1874, being present at the battles of Amoaful and Ordashu and the capture of Coomassie.

Lieut. Houston Stewart was the eldest son of the Commander-in-Chief at Devonport, and up to the time of his death first lieut. of H.M.'s ship Dryad. He was only 31 years of age, and entered the Navy in 1866 as a cadet on board the Britannia at Dartmouth. He became a midshipman in her Majesty's service in 1868, a sub-lieut. in 1873, and a lieut. in 1876. He had seen much foreign service. The last ship he paid off was the Fantome. He then joined the Cambridge for a short course of gunnery duties, which he successfully passed. He was next appointed to the Achilles, one of the Channel Squadron. When it was deemed desirable to recommission the Dryad, the Admiralty selected Lieut. Houston Stewart to fill the post of first lieut. of the ship. Lieut. Stewart, together with all the other officers and men for the Dryad, left Devonport at the end of Dec. in the troopship Humber, and consequently had barely entered on his duties when he met with his death. He distinguished himself in the Battle of El Teb, where he also had charge of a gun.

Lieut. Walter Byrom Almack was the son of the Rev. H. Almack, rector of Fawley, Bucks. He entered the Navy in 1863, and was appointed lieutenant in 1875. He served as sub-lieutenant in H.M.'s ships Pallas and Sultan, and as lieutenant in H.M.'s ship Raleigh in 1876-77. He studied for gunnery lieutenant from 1877 to 1879, and on examination took a second-class certificate. Lieut. Almack has been gunnery lieutenant of H.M.'s ships Penelope and Briton, and in 1881 proceeded to the East Indies station in the latter vessel.

Lieut. William Hughes Hallett Montresor—son of Admiral Frederick Byng Montresor, by marriage with Emily, daughter of Mr. J. Delafield—entered the Navy in 1868, and was appointed lieut. in 1879. As sub-lieut. he served in H.M.S. Swiftsure and H.M.S. Himalaya, and as lieutenant was employed in the latter vessel, and in the Nautilus, brig, tender to H.M.S. Impregnable. From October. 1881, to March, 1883, Lieut. Montresor studied for torpedo lieutenant, and on examination took a first-class certificate. In June, 1883, he was appointed torpedo lieutenant of the Euryalus, flagship, on the East Indies station. He took part in the action at El Teb, and served as adjutant to the Naval Brigade.

The officer killed is presumably either Capt. Harry George Wakelyn Ford, or Lieut. Charles Wilbraham Ford. A Reuter's telegram says Capt. Ford was killed (York and Lancaster).

THE BATTLE OF EL TEB.

Telegrams.—The War Office on March 11 announced that:—"Seven officers, 141 men, landed at Suez satisfactorily. Bulk of cases chiefly flesh wounds from swords and spears; very little bone smashing. Three amputations, all dangerous; two compound fractures, both very severe. Several bullet and sword wounds, dangerous. Thirty-four medical cases. Col. Barrow doing well. The non-commissioned officers and men wounded on Feb. 29, reported by telegram, were:—

"We understand," says the British Medical Journal, "that General Baker's wound was more severe than the first accounts seemed to indicate; the bullet was part of a charge of shrapnel fired from a Krupp gun. The bullet entered at the outer part of the right cheek, passed through the antrum, and was arrested at the bridge of the nose. The course the bullet took was nearly parallel to the base of the orbit, and about half an inch below it. The eye was not injured, and the bullet was successfully extracted on board the Sphinx, by Surgeon John S. Logan, M.D. Since then, General Baker has been transferred to the Euryalus, and the last news was that he was progressing favourably, and that as yet there had been no fever. We hope that no complication may arise. Colonel Burnaby has received a flesh-wound through his left arm, caused by a rifle-bullet, but no danger is anticipated from this. He received the wound while outside one of the squares that were passing along the flank of the enemy. At first, it was thought from the size of the aperture that it had been caused by a Martini bullet; it is now believed to have been due to a Remington bullet striking diagonally. Col. Barrow, who was severely wounded by a spear-thrust, is, according to latest advices, progressing favourably. Amongst the officers wounded were Staff Surgeon Martin and Surgeon Turner.

REINFORCEMENT OF TROOPS IN ACTION.

The following General Order by H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief has been promulgated to the Army:—"When an extended line has become thin through losses in action, or when it is desired to strengthen the fighting line against a counter-attack, or with a view to deliver an attack, or to hold a position that has been seized, any part of this front line may be reinforced by throwing forward the support, or any part of it. This reinforcement will, as a rule, insert itself as a body into any gaps that may at the time exist in the fighting line, or into the intervals between companies, or it may take its position on either flank of that line. In either case, the troops composing this reinforcement will be kept as much as possible together under their own officers. This will be the more easy, if the men of the fighting line have during the advance closed in to the centres of companies, as they became thinned by loss. This is a point that must be carefully attended to by the officers and section leaders in the fighting line and those commanding the reinforcements. Troops out of hand in a straggling line are of little use for either attack or defence. Opportunities for closing up gaps occasioned by losses, and getting the men in hand, will frequently occur when any portion of the line is temporarily under cover, or protected by an undulation of the ground from the enemy's fire, or even during an advance, and they must be taken advantage of immediately. This closing will create intervals between companies and battalions, of which the reinforcements, as they reach the fighting-line, must avail themselves. If two or more companies or battalions do, however, become mixed, the senior officer present will command all officers and men in his vicinity; but he will take immediate advantage of any opportunity that may offer to separate the companies or battalions temporarily mixed up. Men may at times become separated from their own company, and be unable to rejoin it; they will in that case consider themselves under the command of the nearest officer, and take their place as he may direct; and all officers will take under their command any stray men near them."

The Liverpool Courier says:—"Liverpool is again to be a head-quarters recruiting station, and the officer to be appointed from April 1 next is Col. F. D. Walters, who will be A.A.G. and A.Q.M.G. for Recruiting. From the beginning of the nineteenth century, and until about 1870, there was an 'inspecting field officer of the Liverpool recruiting district.' About the year named, the title was changed to assistant-adjutant-general; and in April, 1873, Col. Jones, who held the post, had his title changed to colonel of No. 13 sub-district, and eventually the latter was changed to 'the 8th Regimental District,' and removed to Warrington, to be worked with the 40th (late 14th) District, which at first had a separate colonel."

Col. MacIver, late of the Servian Army, who is well known in London anent the New Guinea Exploration Scheme, is about to start to the Antipodes on a lecturing tour. The history of his life will form the subject of this his first peaceable campaign, and his experiences, as verbally recounted, are likely to prove as interesting as told by Capt. W. D. L'Estrange in Under Fourteen Flags, shortly to be produced by Messrs. Tinsley.

Throat Irritation and Cough.—Soreness and dryness, tickling and irritation, inducing cough and affecting the voice. For these symptoms use Epps's Glycerine Jujubes. In contact with the glands at the moment they are excited by the act of sucking, the Glycerine in these agreeable confections becomes actively healing. Sold only in boxes, 7½d, tins, 1s 1½d, labelled "James Epps and Co., Homœopathic Chemists, London." A letter received:—"Gentlemen,—It may, perhaps, interest you to know that, after an extended trial, I have found your Glycerine Jujubes of considerable benefit (with or without medical treatment) in almost all forms of throat disease. They soften and clear the voice.—Yours faithfully, Gordon Holmes, M.D., Senior Physician to the Municipal Throat and Ear Infirmary."

Obituary.

Admiral Sir Sydney Colpoys Dacres, Visitor and Governor of Greenwich Hospital, died on Saturday, March 8, at Brighton, aged 80. He was a younger son of Vice-Admiral Sir Sydney Dacres and brother of Gen. Sir Richard J. Dacres, of the Royal Artillery. He was born in 1804, educated at the Naval College, Portsmouth, entered the Navy in Feb. 1817, obtained his first commission in May, 1827, and was appointed early in the following year to the Blonde, Capt. Edward Lyons. With Lieut. A. Luckraft, he commanded a party of seamen in reducing Morea Castle, the last stronghold of the Turks in the Peloponnesus. In 1834 he was promoted to be commander, and assumed the command of the Salamander, in which vessel he was actively employed on the north coast of Spain during the Carlist War in 1839 and 1840. He commanded the Sanspareil at the attack on Fort Constantine, Sebastopol, on Oct. 17, 1854, and for his services before Sebastopol and Inkerman was made a Companion of the Order of the Bath in 1855. He acted as captain of the Fleet on board the Marlborough, flagship of Admiral Fanshawe, in 1859, in the Mediterranean, and hoisted his flag on board the Edgar as senior officer in command of the Channel Squadron in 1862, serving in the West Indies and Channel successively until 1865, in which year he was advanced to K.C.B. In the following year Sir Sydney was appointed a Lord of the Admiralty, which post he held at Whitehall till 1872. He retained his seat at the Board when the Conservatives went out in 1868, and was appointed Governor of Greenwich Hospital. He was a Knight of the Legion of Honour (1828); a Knight of the Redeemer of Greece for services in the Morea; a Knight of San Fernando of Spain for his services during the Carlist War; and for his services in 1854-5 had the Crimean and Turkish medals, Sebastopol and Inkerman clasps, the Third Class of the Medjidie, and was made an Officer of the Legion of Honour. For the investiture of King Louis of Portugal with the Order of the Garter, in May, 1865, he had the Tower and Sword, but had not received her Majesty's permission to accept and wear the same. He was made a Grand Cross of the Bath in May, 1871; was promoted rear-admiral June 25, 1858, vice-admiral Nov. 17, 1865; and admiral April 1, 1870. He married in 1840, Emma, the daughter of the late Mr. John Lambert, of Banstead, Surrey. The funeral took place at Brighton with full military honours.

Admiral Sidney Grenfell, C.B., died on March 6 at Castlepark, Exmouth, aged 78. He was the son of the late Mr. John Granville Grenfell, of Chelsea. He entered the Royal Navy in 1822, became com. 1840, capt. 1850, rear-admiral 1866, retired vice-admiral 1873, and an admiral in 1878. He was gunnery-lieut. of the flagship Thalia on the West Coast of Africa in 1835-7, and commanded all boat expeditions against slavers. He also served as senior and gunnery-lieut. of the Cyclops in Syria in 1839-40, and fought with the ships at the bombardment and storm of Sidon and the taking of Djebail. He was then gazetted for recovering, with great gallantry, amidst the cheers of the ships, a flag left under the walls. He commanded all boat expeditions against the enemy, and was in command of the capture of a camel provision convoy, for which he received a medal and clasp, and Turkish medal. In 1857-8 he was captain of the Amethyst in the China war, and was present at the taking of Chueenpee, and also commanded an advance before Canton, and at the boat action at Fatsham, for which he received the medal with clasp. He was also present at the destruction of the Tartar camp in the White Cloud Mountains, and was senior officer in the Straits Settlements during the Indian Mutiny, where he surprised a pirate stockade on Lingli River, and shot a pirate Rajah with his own hand, for which he was thanked by the Supreme Council of India. At Coquimbo, Chili, during the revolution of 1859, he was senior officer, where he did good service, and was thanked by the Foreign Office and the Admiralty. In 1861-4 he commanded N.E. and S.W. Coastguard Districts. He married in 1848 Matilda, only daughter of Mr. John Sweetland, J.P., of Hermosa, Teignmouth, and was created C.B. in 1868.

Com. John Townshend died on Feb. 11 at his residence, Langdon House, St. Anne's Hill, Wandsworth, London, aged 69. He was the son of the late Horatio Townshend, of Bridgemount, county Cork, and Elizabeth Trelawney, only daughter of Lieut.-Gen. Samuel Townshend, of Whitehall, county Cork, Inspector-Gen. of the Forces and Aide-de-Camp to his Majesty George III. He leaves a widow and four children. Com. Townshend entered the Navy in 1829, and was placed on the Retired List in 1867, with the rank of commander. He had the honour of serving under three Sovereigns, and was entitled to wear four medals for war services. He was present in the Druid, Capt. G. W. Hamilton, during the siege of Oporto in 1832. He also served two years in the North Star, Capt. O. V. Harcourt, as midshipman. He qualified for the rank of lieut. in 1836, and was appointed mate in the Talavera, Capt. W. B. Mends, serving on east coast of Spain during civil war; served as mate in Revenge, Capt. Hon. W. Waldegrave, in operations on the coast of Syria, under Admiral Hon. Sir R. Stopford, including the bombardment and capture of St. Jean d'Acre and the blockade of Alexandria. Afterwards was employed by Capt. Waldegrave on a mission among the insurgent Greeks of Candia; served as mate in Agincourt, Capt. H. W. Bruce, flagship of Sir T. Cochrane, on China station; promoted to lieut. Feb. 9, 1844, and served as senior lieut. of Plover, surveying vessel, Capt. R. Collinson, from 1844 to 1846 on the coast of China. Remained from 1846 to 1847 in Vestal, Capt. C. Talbot, the Plover being ordered home. Returned to England in 1847, and was appointed senior lieutenant of Pantaloon, Com. Prevost, July, 1848; employed in suppression of slave trade on the West Coast of Africa. Afterwards served as second-in-command of the Naval station at Ascension, until May, 1853. He served for the last time during the Russian War, in 1855, as senior lieutenant of the Himalaya, Com. Priest, conveying troops to the Crimea. Com. Townshend held high rank as a Mason, being a Knight of the Order of St. John of Malta, at which place he was initiated 40 years ago. He was a Royal Arch Mason and a member of the Rose Croix. He was in receipt of a Greenwich Hospital Pension. His remains were interred in the cemetery at Lower Norwood.

Lieut. Frank Massie Royds, R.N., who fell while gallantly leading his men of the Naval Brigade at the battle of El Teb, entered the Royal Navy in July, 1870, and was promoted to lieut. in 1880. He served in the Agincourt, flagship of Sir Geoffrey Hornby, when in command of the Channel Squadron, and in the Achilles, when commanded by Sir William Hewett, in the Mediterranean. He afterwards served in the Bacchante during her voyage round the world with the sons of the Prince of Wales. He had lately been selected for service in the Britannia, training-ship for naval cadets at Dartmouth, but neither the shore prospect nor the compliment suggested by the offer tempted him, and in spite of three and a half years' absence from home he preferred more active service. Sir W. Hewett, by whom he was held in high esteem, promptly found employment for him with the Naval Brigade of the British Expedition from Trinkitat, and he fell, mortally wounded by a bullet through the chest, during the engagement at El Teb, being afterwards carried to his own ship on board which he died, aged 27 years.

Lieut. Somerset A. Hungerford, serving on board H.M.S. Orontes, died at the Royal Naval Hospital, Malta, Feb. 22, of fever. He served through the Zulu War in South Africa.

"CHINESE" ADMIRALS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—It is a significant commentary on the reign of the late Commander-in-Chief in China that his near connection, Com. Atkinson, should find it necessary, in the first place, to ask you to publish any vindication of the Admiral's proceedings; and in the second, to draw that vindication from an obscure paper like the Hong Kong Telegraph, which, if I remember right, sprang into existence about three years ago. Admiral Willes's character is so well known in the service, that it is hardly necessary to say that the anticipations of the China Squadron on his appointment to its command of a hard three years have been fully confirmed, but there are several statements in the article quoted to which exception must be taken. It says, "he came here and found chaos;" this is simply untrue. The ships of the Squadron (with, perhaps, one or two exceptions) were clean and thoroughly efficient, and the whole station happy and contented. Admiral Coote was courteous, kind-hearted, and, I have been told on good authority, a far better politician than his successor, and it is grossly unfair to charge him with notorious neglect. Next, as regards the ships having seen much more active service at sea for the last three years, the Hong Kong Telegraph does not seem to be aware that the order for an Admiral to bring his ships together on a distant station for cruising purposes emanates from the Admiralty, and that Admiral Coote could not have brought the Squadron together for such purpose without their sanction, while there were formerly many reasons for keeping the ships at the various treaty ports. The question also may well be asked whether a hard grind of five months' cruising out of every twelve, during which time nothing is done but shifting spars and sails, compared with the two months on all other distant stations, adds to the efficiency and contentment of the Squadron, tends to the health of the ship's companies, or decreases crime. Statistics would, I think, answer "No!" With reference to the outbreak at Canton, any one who has any knowledge of China must be well aware that had a gunboat been there, as it would have been in the old days, the riot would not have taken place. Lastly, as regards the Europeans at the principal ports. Of their feeling as a whole there can be no doubt in any one's mind who has of late years had any communication with China,—it is and has been decidedly adverse to the late Commander-in-Chief; in fact, as you observed in the paragraph quoted by the Hong Kong Telegraph, "the advent of his successor will be hailed with delight by all."—I am, &c., Z.

[We do not think that any fault can be found with Capt. Atkinson for asking us to publish his remarks on the article which appeared in our columns, and we inserted the quotation from the Chinese paper he sent us for what it was worth. If a man's near connections do not defend him, who ought, or can?—Ed. A. & N. G.]

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—I have just read Com. Atkinson's letter of vindication of Vice-Admiral Willes, coupled with the inspired leader of the Hong Kong Telegraph. I contend that the article of the Army and Navy Gazette to which Com. Atkinson takes exception was not only warranted, but founded on facts. I can mention two instances of discourtesy, which were regarded as such by not only the foreign population on the Japan and China coasts, but by British Naval officers themselves. Admiral Willes informed the Admiralty that he would be at Yokohama until July 10, 1882. When the Fleet got to Yokohama, he discovered that July 4 was the American Independence Day, and, as such, would be observed by the two American men-of-war in port, as well as the other foreign war vessels. He hurried to get away, and left with the Fleet before that time, and even went to the discomfort of transferring his flag from the Vigilant to the Iron Duke, leaving the Vigilant to remain until July 10, and bring on the mails to Hakodadi or Siberia. The Comus had been transferred to the Pacific station, and was about sailing for Callao. Admiral Willes met Capt. East, and asked when he was going to sail. The reply was that, as there would be no other British vessel in port that could join with the American's saluting, that he would sail on July 5. Admiral Willes ordered him to sail the afternoon of July 2, which the Comus did. The foreigners in the East form one body, and their national celebrations form an occasion for all to participate. American men-of-war always join with the British in celebrating the Queen's birthday, and there is no record of an American vessel in any part of the world ever leaving a port to avoid it. The action of Admiral Willes in this case was looked upon in the East as a deliberate insult to the Americans, and it was intensified when his action regarding the Comus became known. The Russian and French flagships joined with the American vessels (one of which was flagship) in celebrating the day. The Vigilant dressed ship, and as she burned no powder in saluting, British honour, according to Admiral Willes, was safe, and international courtesy thrown to the winds, with the ill-manners of a single officer to the fore. Some time in August, 1882, the U.S.S. Swatara sailed for home at the termination of her cruise. As she left Yokohama homeward bound, she was cheered by the two Americans present, also by the French and Russian flagships. As she passed the Champion, just arrived from the Pacific station, which lay farthest out, not a cheer or sign of good-will! The effect on the other foreign war vessels was like a wet-blanket, and that night the sole topic of conversation ashore was the rudeness of the Champion. The next morning it became known to foreigners that Admiral Willes had issued a special order calling strict attention to the clause in the Queen's Naval (is that the correct name?) Regulations forbidding cheering, &c., as compliments. If the Admiralty believed in it, why did they afterwards send out a confidential circular saying it was not to apply in the case of international courtesies. The acting commander of the Champion did right in obeying Admiral Willes's circular; but why did the admiral issue it when he knew the Swatara was going home? As regards the laudatory manner in which he is commended for sharing the hardships of the cruising, &c., it is only well to make a plain statement of facts. The Vigilant, which is virtually a yacht as well as despatch-vessel, was used by Admiral Willes the greater portion of his stay on the China station. He carried his horses, and while the vessels were cruising for exercise, he was exercising for cruising, by laying in port as long as it suited him. He was supposed to be a great sufferer from indigestion, which was generally known by the unsailorlike term of mal-de-mer, and the Iron Duke (Jumbo) was, as the ladies say, a great rocker. While he lay in port and gave precise instructions to drill, sail, and stay away at sea until certain dates, Capt. Tracey, of the Iron Duke, was doing his work, and deserves the credit of the efficiency of the Fleet. He did, I know, on the occasion mentioned, go from Yokohama to Hakodadi and Siberia in the Iron Duke, and at periodical occasions hoisted his flag on her for a few days. The saving in coal which the Hong Kong Telegraph so triumphantly speaks of was probably more than balanced by the fitting and sweating, and damaged sails, rigging, and dangers of collision, vide the Daring and other vessels colliding at sea in a calm, when steam could not be raised, as the Admiral forbade it, and he lying snug at anchor in Kobe or Yokohama. Capt. Tracey then took the responsibility of getting up steam at his own risk of displeasing the Admiral to save the vessels. The lavish hospitality which your contemporary mentions was never visible to the Fleet or in other ports of the station. If the Admiralty are so satisfied with Admiral Willes, why is every officer who comes home more or less interrogated by them to find out if certain scandalous stories are true? The gratuitous sneer at Admiral Coote and his predecessors is entirely uncalled for, and the Telegraph would have the world believe that Admiral Willes is "our only Admiral." I will not criticise the sailing of the Fleet instead of always steaming, because when there is a good breeze it is preferable as regards not only economy, but also the instruction to officers and men. Yet attempting to sail in calms, or beat against head winds with vessels not built exclusively for sailing, does not show skill or seamanship. The small economies of reducing the hospital staff, particularly in Yokohama, was one of his many "penny-wise-and-pound-foolish" schemes. Hong Kong Hospital is no place for a sick man from April 1 to Nov. 1, particularly when there is such a good hospital in the healthy climate of Yokohama. There is no use of disguising the fact that Admiral Willes was unpopular in China, with his own Fleet, with foreign fleets, and the foreign residents. There may be a small coterie in Hong Kong, who, having experienced his lavish hospitality, repay it in laudation. They are a very small minority of the British in the East or other foreigners. In apologising for trespassing on your valuable space, I must tell you a little anecdote which amused the Far East exceedingly. The coast papers had been hinting that it was the intention of the Admiralty to confer a K.C.B. on Admiral Willes. The Japan Punch represented the Admiral riding Jumbo (the Iron Duke), and on the tail of the elephant a small flag with K.C.B., and underneath was written "won by a canter." The sarcasm was so effective that the Admiral said "he objected to skylarking with rank." There is small kudos attached to the Corean Treaty, because he followed Comdre. Shufeldt who made the American Treaty, and the omission to take ink, or something more diplomatic, required Sir Harry Parkes to go and make a fresh one. It is to be hoped that the Admiralty, appreciating the valuable services of Admiral Willes, have provided a comfortable shelf on which he can repose for the remainder of his life, and thus allow some junior unfortunates in the Navy a similar chance of the peace and happiness. Regretting that I am obliged to furnish some facts which are stronger than fiction,—I am, &c.,

More than 10,000 signatures have already been obtained to petitions against the proposed abolition by the War Office of the Highland feather bonnet, the head-dress so long worn by the various Highland regiments. A large number of petitions have been signed by Scotchmen and others in England, but the majority of the 10,000 signatures have been obtained in Glasgow, Edinburgh, and other parts of Scotland.

Signor Salvini has appeared at COVENT GARDEN in Giacometti's mournful but impressive drama, "La Morte Civile," of which an English version was produced at the Prince of Wales's Theatre in December, 1880, when the adapter, Mr. C. F. Coghlan, played the principal character. The story, it will be remembered, turns on the self-sacrifice of an escaped felon, who, hastening to rejoin his wife and child, finds them so happily placed in the house of a generous friend that he feels the discovery of his identity would seriously imperil their future position, and accordingly he terminates his existence without making himself known. In this scene, forming the close of the last act, Signor Salvini afforded the strongest proof of his tragic power. The popular Italian tragedian has since given a forcible impersonation of "Macbeth," very indifferently supported by his Italian company, and on Monday next he is announced to appear as Ingomar, a character peculiarly suited to his energetic style. At the close of his present engagement Signor Salvini takes a short provincial tour, then goes to Russia, and afterwards to New York, where he intends to take his farewell of the stage.

At the NOVELTY, Mr. T. G. Warren's farcical comedy, called "Nita's First," recently played at a morning performance with satisfactory results, has this week occupied the prominent position in the programme.

At the OLYMPIC has been reproduced the late Mr. John Oxenford's adapted drama of "The Two Orphans," originally produced here in 1874. Special attention has been bestowed on the pictorial embellishment of the present revival, and an efficient cast has been provided. Three of the original representatives have been retained. Mr. Vollaire is still the benevolent doctor, Mr. William Rignold the burly, braggart Jacques, and Mrs. Huntley the hateful hag La Frochard. Sympathetic exponents of Louise and Henriette, the two orphans, are found in Miss Laura Linden and Miss Alma Murray. Miss Rose Leclerq renders valuable aid as the Countess. Mr. Henry Vincent and Mr. Philip Beck afford adequate support as Pierre and De Vaudry. The original cast 10 years ago included Miss Fowler, Miss Ernstone, Mrs. Arthur Sterling, Mr. Henry Neville, Mr. G. W. Anson, Mr. Charles Harcourt, and Mr. C. Sugden.

A slight comedietta, called "Sugar and Cream," has been produced at the GLOBE THEATRE, as a prelude to the "Member for Slocum." This trifle, turning upon father and son wooing the same lady, is briskly played by Miss Fanny Brough, Miss Noad, and Messrs. Lethcourt and Gardiner. The author is Mr. James P. Hurst.

Mr. Sydney Grundy has adapted for the ROYALTY the French opera bouffe of "La Cosaque," in which Miss Kate Santley will represent the character identified with Madame Judic. The Saturday preceding Easter Monday is named for the date of production.

The obituary of the week includes the name of Mr. William Blanchard Jerrold, who expired, after a very short illness, on Monday last, in his fifty-ninth year. He was the eldest son of Douglas Jerrold, and was a most industrious contributor to the literature of the last 30 years. His dramatic pieces comprise "Cool as a Cucumber," produced in 1851, "Beau Brummel," "The Chatterbox," and a two-act comedy, called "Cupid in Waiting," brought out at the Royalty in July, 1871.

The decease is also recorded of Mr. George Buckland, the well-known musical lecturer and popular entertainer, in later years identified with the Polytechnic Institution. Mr. George Buckland died on Sunday evening last, at his residence, Maiden Terrace, Dartmouth Park, North London, at the age of 63. A benefit programme, with distinguished names, was being framed on his behalf, for an attractive entertainment to take place at St. George's Hall on the 26th inst.

VIVA VOCE.

"Light Bob" writes:—"In your issue of Jan. 12 last I see a paragraph stating that a knowledge of modern languages is now considered so important an item in the training of the Staff officer of the future, that in the entrance examination for the Staff College it is laid down that half marks must be obtained in French in order to qualify. Now, while fully recognising the fact that a knowledge of modern languages (more especially French) is most essential in a Staff officer, does it not seem strange that no marks are allotted to vivâ voce in the Staff College entrance examination? Surely an officer who can make himself understood in a language should be given some credit for his knowledge, provided he obtains a certain proportion of marks in grammar, translation, &c., which latter would seem to be theoretical, and therefore a secondary consideration, where a practical knowledge of a language was required, as in an enemy's country, for instance, in time of war. I can state, from my own personal experience, that many a man who can read and understand a French novel or a piece of Hindustani, and write both languages with fair grammatical correctness, could not make his conversation intelligible either to a Frenchman or a native (as the case may be) without much difficulty, owing either to bad pronunciation or want of fluency. The question then remains, 'What is the most essential item in the knowledge of a modern language, fair conversational fluency or the art of writing grammatically and correctly?' Should we not consider as a linguist a man who combined both, but especially excelled in the former? Would it not, then, be better if vivâ voce formed part of the examination in languages for entrance to, as well as exit from, the Staff College?"

THE EASTER MANŒUVRES.

The details of the march on Portsmouth next Good Friday have been prepared by Colonel Methuen, who has again been entrusted with the whole of the arrangements:—

"A Western Force is marching from Salisbury to reinforce the garrison at Hilsea. The commander of a Northern Force at Guildford resolves to endeavour to intercept this movement.

"Operations of Friday, April 11.—The advanced guard of the Northern Force, having reached Liphook the previous evening, arrives in the neighbourhood of Petersfield, covering the roads leading to the Portsdown Ridge.

"Operations of Saturday, April 12.—The advanced guard of the Northern Force continues its advance, drives back the weak outposts of the Hilsea garrison, and gains the Portsdown Ridge. The outposts of the Hilsea garrison occupy Cosham. The main body of the Northern Force is supposed to reach the Portsdown Ridge during the night. The Western Force arrives at Fareham during the night.

"Operations on Monday, April 14.—The Western Force endeavours to carry out its object, aided by a sortie made by the Hilsea garrison. The Northern Force endeavours to prevent the junction.

"General Instructions.—The Western Force is represented by the Volunteer Corps detraining at Fareham, together with an infantry brigade from Gosport and one field battery (rendezvous, Fort Nelson). The Northern Force consists of the Volunteer Corps detrained at Havant (rendezvous, Fort Purbrook). The Hilsea garrison is formed by the Regular troops from Portsmouth (rendezvous, Hilsea Lines, with advanced posts at Cosham). The advanced guard of the Northern Force is represented by the Volunteer marching columns. The outposts of the Hilsea garrison are represented by small bodies of cavalry and infantry brought forward on April 12 to meet the marching columns. The forts at Portsdown Hill are supposed to be non-existent. The bridges over the Hilsea Channel are supposed to be protected by a tête de pont, which prevents their being destroyed by artillery fire. Neither of the forces will advance from the rendezvous before the signal gun fires for the commencement of the operations, at 12 noon. At the conclusion of the manœuvres, the whole of the troops will assemble on the heights, halfway between Forts Widley and Southwick.

"The directing party and escort, consisting of one battalion of Hants Rifle Volunteers and one squadron of Hants Yeomanry, under Lieut.-Col. the Hon. H. Crichton, are despatched from Portsmouth garrison on the 10th, to profit by the weekly market held at Petersfield. The convoy, well furnished, is preparing to return by train at 10 a.m. on Good Friday, when intelligence is received that a small party belonging to a flanking detachment of the marching column, to the east of the Petersfield and Havant Railway, has destroyed the line north of Rowlands Castle. No alternative remains but to take the provisions by road.

"On arrival of the Fifth Column, under Col. Routledge, the officer commanding the troop of the divisional cavalry (Middlesex Yeomanry) attached to the marching column, informs him that a convoy has just started from Portsmouth, viâ Bulser Hill, Horndean. The open country is covered by small parties of the enemy's cavalry (imaginary), sent out on information having been received that the line has been cut, to cover the retreat of the convoy."

The horses and mounted officers, and two Nordenfelt guns belonging to the 22nd Middlesex R.V., leave Waterloo on Friday morning at 6.55 a.m. The troops leave in five trains, the first from Waterloo at 8.25 a.m., and the last at 9.55 a.m. The first train reaches Petersfield at 10.15, and the last at 11.58. It was suggested that the force should detrain at Liss, but it was found that the march to the different billets would have been too long, and would have simply consisted of a march, instead of a march combined with tactics, and consequently full of interest to the whole force.

The marching force will be formed in five columns, under the command, No. 1, of Lieut.-Col. Robinson; No. 2, Lieut.-Col. Lumsden; No. 3, Lieut.-Col. Brown; No. 4, Lieut.-Col. Richards; and No. 5, Lieut.-Col. Routledge. On Good Friday night the troops will be billetted in barns and farm-buildings at Hambledon, Lovedean, Catherington, Horndean, Blendworth, Rowlands Castle, Tetsworth, Finchdean, Chalton, Clanfield, Brinton, Weston, and North House. To give some idea of the capacity for billetting in this part of England, it may be remarked that 1,000 more men could be billetted in the radius above, plus 1,500 to 2,000 men at Petersfield. The troops will for the most part be fed by Mr. Swan, of Petersfield, on the same terms as in the two previous years—viz., for a dinner on Good Friday, consisting of ½ lb. of cold meat, ½ lb. of bread, hot potatoes, and pickles, 1s. 6d.; tea or coffee, 3d.; and next morning, bread and butter, with tea or coffee, 6d. The accommodation in barns, &c., will cost 6d. per man. Some of the corps ration themselves; some are fed by the publicans of the villages where they are billeted. The officers will be housed and fed by the gentry of the neighbourhood. It is impossible to speak in too high terms of the welcome hospitality shown by the landlords and farmers, every one having endeavoured to do all in his power to help the marching column to comfortable billets and ample rations on Good Friday night.

The march will be resumed on Saturday to Portsmouth, and the columns will be opposed by a brigade of infantry representing the enemy, also a squadron of cavalry. The troops will then be distributed in the forts on Portsdown Heights and the various barracks in and near Portsmouth. The Artists go to Eastney and the London Scottish to Anglesea, while the Middlesex Yeomanry will find quarters for men and horses in Hillsea Barracks. The column will then cease to form an independent command, and the senior officer in each fort will be in command of the men composing the force in the fort.

A RESPECTED reader has written to suggest that it would be as well for the present to direct attention rather to things than to persons. "No one," he observes, is "seriously occupied by the speeches of any particular Admiralty official on Naval matters, nor is it thought necessary to pay especial attention to the counsels of the Times in Naval or Military matters. Why, therefore, should the Army be so much interested in the sayings of the Adjutant-General, or in the writings of the Times?" There is, we think, a very good answer to the question. They both tend, we think, in their sayings and writings, to a common end and object, which is believed by them to be the promotion of the efficiency of the Army. By a series of bold innovations and changes, which go far below the roots of mere regimental efficiency, and touch very nearly the foundations of the Constitution, if, indeed, in these days there be such substrata left for the much-vexed edifice erected by the wisdom of our forefathers, the Adjutant-General and the Times are brought to deal with a very serious problem in Army organisation. If some particular First Lord, and the Times, set to work to clamour against the constitution of the Navy, and to demand the recasting of all the establishments connected with it,—the creation of a Lord High Admiral, with an irresponsible Chief of the Staff, the arbitrary nomination of officers at the will and pleasure of the Chief, the abolition of all rights founded upon seniority or service, the substitution of boys for able-bodied sailors, and of girls for stokers, the enlistment of foreigners, the substitution of papier-mâché for iron and steel, and the construction of fleets of balloons,—people would only wonder, and laugh. But if, after a time, practical effect were about to be given to these crazes, or to such of them as were capable of being carried out, there would be something very like active resistance to them, ending in the discomfiture of the theorists. To those who think that the phenomena connected with recent changes in the Army organisation are equally absurd and dangerous, and who recognise the success with which they have been forced upon the country, it seems necessary that the speeches of those who are mainly instrumental in the introduction of them, and the writings of the organs which, changing in the line of their support of these new doctrines, have been conspicuous in their support of change, should be constantly resisted. When a Member of Parliament gets up in his place and, "line upon line, precept upon precept," figure after figure, proves incontestably that the supposed efficiency of the Army does not exist, because in the case of the Army seeing that no one can ever foresee where the strain will come, the measure of the strength must be taken to be the weakest link in the chain, and is encountered by contemptuous and vapid comments, without a single attempt to refute or to explain, it is surely the duty of a journal having the interest of the service at heart to insist on the duty of the Government to give a substantial reply. We think we may declare that there is only one feeling among officers of the Army, and those who have its interests most deeply in their affections, of the futility of attempting to convert the Times to any reasonable view of the actual deficiencies and weakness of our Military establishments. Our great contemporary will not willingly admit that the system it has tried to bolster up has completely broken down; but from time to time there come confessions and admissions, that slip out unawares, that things are not what they ought to be; and there are savage kicks at the War Office, which are intended, however, to pass through the Minister's Cabinet, and hit some inoffensive person behind. It is all owing to the working and bungling of the Horse Guards, that this divine conception has not been developed into beauty and strength. Returning to the charge with a persistency which indicates the strong motive-power behind it, the Times on Thursday makes another demonstration against the Commander-in-Chief. Not one word has our contemporary to say in reply to the remarkable speech of Colonel Tottenham, except that he went on "for an hour and a half by the clock to tell us in effect that the home battalions of our Line regiments are weak in numbers and, to a great extent, consisted of youthful soldiers, thereby causing trouble to the officers," thus, as if it were not a matter of the smallest consequence, triumphantly disposing of the whole question of the efficiency of the home battalions! On one point, we quite agree. Our contemporary condemns the policy of concealment which a Liberal Minister, Mr. Childers, introduced in regard to the most important information which can be laid before the public respecting the condition of the Army. If it be admitted that Parliament has a right to meddle in matters of administration—which we think very questionable, but which seems to be admitted—it surely is only wise to let Parliament have the fullest information, to enable it to legislate and act rightly. Trust it all in all, or trust it not at all. But the reason why Mr. Childers introduced the policy of concealment was, we believe, very different from that which the Times supposes. It was not "to save the susceptibilities of individuals, commanding officers or men," but to conceal the unsatisfactory condition of regiments. That condition was not necessarily dependent upon the commanding officer in any case, but might frequently be attributed to the materials of which the regiment was composed. Now, if the head of the War Office at Printing-House Square were asked to conduct the department of the Horse Guards, we would ask him on what principle he would select officers to command battalions? He would reply that he would do it by selection, making each Colonel a special appointment. Then we should like to know how is the selection to be made, and upon what data does the fitness in each case of the officer to be selected rest? Probing a little below the surface, we would find our amateur Commander-in-Chief obliged to resort to secret information and to confidential reports. Then would come the question of the fitness of those who made these reports to condemn or to praise individual officers. Human nature is very much the same in the Army as it is out of it, and intelligence, justice, and sagacity are distributed amongst senior officers very much as they are among an equal number of men of the same age in civil life. The inspecting General or officer may be one whose report should be conclusive and decisive as to the fitness or unfitness of another to command a battalion, or founded upon prejudice, or narrow views, or conceit, or even (such things have been) personal dislike and influence, it may not be worth a rush. But supposing that the best possible men be selected in every instance, it is still obvious that as vacancies occur, and the best men are pounced upon and put into them, the selectors at last will find very little room for choice. How far is the principle to go? Because, if the efficiency and safety of a battalion depend upon the Colonel, who is not immortal, either in or out of action, and who may die on a distant station command, or under circumstances placing the command immediately in the hands of the next senior officer, there ought also to be an eye upon such a contingency, and the rule of selection should be applied in the case of Majors and Captains, and so on through the military hierarchy. The principle of selection is admitted; but it does not follow that it is ignored because some new man is not thrust in whenever a colonelcy is vacant. There must be some deserving men next for promotion. Why pass over them? That is selection by seniority. The Duke of Cambridge, it is true, declared once that he could not carry selection out, and his Royal Highness has been quoted as declaring that the comfort and efficiency of a regiment depend upon the Colonel. The corollary is, we suppose, that anybody should succeed to the command of a battalion, rather than the next senior officer. It is, as we said in a former article on the same subject, to place the patronage of the Army in the hands of the Chief of the Bureau, who represents a majority of the House of Commons, to turn the Queen's Army into the Army of the Parliamentary Minister and his Chief of the Staff, who is really the Adjutant-General of the Forces for the time being, that this tremendous clamour about selection is raised, and it is not in the interests of the Army, nor is it for the interests of the country, that it should be attended to.

HAVING carefully gone into the question of fleet actions and of the fleet ship proper, as explained by us in a previous article, Admiral Sir George Elliot proceeded to refer to single actions, in the course of the lecture recently delivered by him at the Royal United Service Institution. Admiral Elliot agrees with Captain Harris, that there should be two classes of sea-going armour-clads, the one faster than the other, each with special services. The first class should be constructed specially for foreign service, and the second class for European waters, each fleet of the latter class to be accompanied by a small force of the former. Ships of the first class should have a displacement of 10,000 tons, and a sea-going speed of 16 knots, ships of the second class having a displacement of 8,000 tons and a sea speed of 12 knots. Admiral Elliot would attack the sternmost ships of an enemy's fleet with the ships of the first class attached to a second-class squadron, and thus bring on an action. Should the enemy be willing to engage without such pressure, he would hold the fast ships in hand, as a reserve squadron, ready at any moment to strike a decisive blow. The sea-going qualities of both classes must be of the very best, and speed and handiness, with light draught, the gallant Admiral regards as absolutely necessary. It is due to the crews that no liberties be taken which might imperil the safety of the ships in the storms to be encountered on the wide ocean. He would place the lower deck, the habitation of the crew, high enough out of water to admit of good-sized scuttle-ports. Above that he places the main-deck, carrying a battery of light broadside and heavier bow and stern guns, and above that the barbette turrets. Both classes could carry the same number and weight of guns and thickness of armour, but he would give greater steam and sail power to the first class than to the second, while the latter should be the handiest to manœuvre. This we do not quite understand, as Admiral Elliot designs the first class for "battles chiefly to be fought single-handed;" that is to say, for single-ship actions, in which handiness and speed, when the ram has to be used, are of the very first importance. True, he designs these ships to act "independently of the order of battle in fleet actions," believing that in such contests "the gun-attack would be the prominent feature of the fighting," an assertion the correctness of which requires yet to be proved. The Huascar did all she could to ram the Shah. She resorted to the same tactics when she encountered the Chilian ships. Unfortunately for her she had no speed. She was neither fast nor handy enough, and both her guns and her armour were too light. Hence, she succumbed to the superior gun-power of the Chilians, owing to the superior speed and armour of their ships, though the latter was of little consequence. Had the armour of the Chilian ships been no thicker than that of the Huascar, the latter would still have had to haul down her flag to the superior armament she encountered. No doubt, Admiral Elliot is right when he says that, to attempt to combine all the requirements enumerated in one class of armour-clads, must result in having excelled in none. This the Germans and the Austrians have long ago recognised. Hence, they have stopped building monster armour-clads, and are concentrating all their efforts on constructing a large fleet of torpedo-vessels. Indeed, Germany and Austria might well dispense with battle-ships, as all they require of their Navy is to defend their own coasts and harbours. They have no vast Colonial Empire to defend. They do not depend on their Mercantile Marine for the bare necessaries of life. England has both Colonies and a Merchant Navy to defend, and must, therefore, have cruisers to patrol the ocean, and keep its highways clear of hostile ships. Admiral Elliot admits that he considers both strength of bow and handiness to be the most efficient means for securing future victories in fleet actions. In single actions, however, the gallant Admiral believes that the opportunities for ramming will seldom be found. Nevertheless, he does not lose sight of the importance of an armour-plated bow, and powerful end-on fire, "considering the tactics which would prove most advantageous in an encounter at sea between two armour-clads possessing equal speed and displacement, and weight of guns and armour." Surely this means that the end-on attack would be adopted by both combatants! And if such were the case, handiness, where all things are equal, would go far in determining the result of the engagement, which would assuredly resolve itself into a "ram-fencing match." Admiral Elliot thus describes what he considers would be the tactics of two ships engaging in a "single ship" action:—

> "Ship X and Ship Y are two armour-clads, of equal speed, meeting at sea and intending to fight. They steam towards each other, Ship X having a bow well strengthened for ramming and powerful end-on fire. Ship Y has a more powerful broadside fire, but is weaker at the bow. Ship X has reason to know the type of ship built by the enemy, and he sees his advantage: he is determined to meet his adversary bow to bow if he will only come on. He steers right for him, and Ship Y must turn away in good time if he desires to avoid that kind of encounter. Ship X still steers right for him wherever he goes. He thus presents a small target and his bow armour-plating deflects the shot, and each attempt of the enemy to bring his broadside guns to bear only shortens the intervening distance, and eventually he must turn tail and fight stern-on against X's better protected bow, and I presume it will be allowed that the stern being more vulnerable than the bow, X must have the best of the fight, and this would be still more conspicuous if Y had unprotected ends like the Italian armour-clads."

Now, it surely stands to reason that, if Ship X has but the slightest advantage in speed, she must, at some time during the action, overhaul her antagonist. Now comes the question of handiness. If X is as handy as Y, she may succeed in delivering the coup-de-grâce with her ram, and thus decide the action. Should she be in the slightest degree handier than Y, the latter is doomed, as the officer commanding X is certain to ram his adversary, whatever he does. But, in the event of Y being handier than X, the whole aspect of the case is altered. The advantage in speed of the latter, if any, goes for nothing in the face of the superior manœuvring-power of Y. On the latter being overhauled, her captain can dodge the unwieldy ship chasing him. A few spokes of the helm, and X glides harmlessly past the chased ship's quarter. The captain of Y turns his ship rapidly away from X, while the latter, through want of handiness, cannot turn so quickly, loses ground, and by the time the ship has her nose pointing towards Y, the latter is away, if she has not actually won by ramming. Another danger of unhandiness is, that the ship missing her stroke lays herself open to be struck by the torpedoes launched by the ship she has missed. She may even find herself rammed before she has been able to turn. It is, therefore, self-evident that, when end-on tactics are resorted to, handiness plays an all-important part in securing a successful result, and we cannot, therefore, endorse Admiral Elliot's opinion that handiness in ships designed for single actions is not of so great importance as in ships intended mainly for fleet actions. True, the Admiral has inserted a saving clause. It is this:—"If all ships were equally strengthened at the bows and equally handy, then the bow-to-bow encounter would be the exception to the rule, and other tactics would be pursued. Most French ships have armour-plated bows, but the Italians are badly off in that respect, and are also unhandy, owing to their great size, and consequently will invite the ram attack." But here we would remark that, when an English and a foreign ship do again engage in combat on the ocean, and supposing both ships to be in every essential particular the same, the result will assuredly depend on the ability of the Commander to handle his ship smartly and in a seamanlike manner. Still, it is not fair to the Naval officer to handicap him in any way. That is what has been done of late years, for all the most recent French ships are known to be of greater speed and far handier than their contemporaries in the English Navy, and their bows are far stronger. The torpedo attack has also remained unnoticed by Admiral Elliot, because "it does not affect one way or another the tactics of ramming." Here, again, we are forced to differ from Admiral Elliot. Let us suppose his ship Y, while being chased by X, to tow a Harvey torpedo on each quarter, as do all French ships. How would the latter approach the former, on overhauling the chase? In single ship and fleet actions the towed torpedo will play a most important part at all times, acting as a deterrent to the approaching ship. The attack on Alexandria has, as Admiral Elliot justly remarks, taught us nothing, but the first fleet action will most probably revolutionise many features of the modern equipment for battle, which are now so highly appreciated, as evidences of scientific improvements. With him, we think that the day will never dawn when the Engineer officer should take the helm in all matters relating to ships-of-war, and it strikes us, too, that there has been too great a leaning in that direction already. With Admiral Elliot, we can only hope, for the glory and safety of England, that in the day of peril our Naval rulers may prove to have been wise in their generation in giving the greatest prominence to gun attack and defence in those ships which constitute the first line of defence.

OUR limited space does not permit us to give any lengthened notice this week of the exceedingly important and interesting paper, by Colonel Sir C. H. Nugent, on "Imperial Defences," the first part of which, on our "Home Defences," was read at the Royal United Service Institution yesterday; and the second part of which, on "Colonial Defences," is to be read on April 4. And, indeed, our readers cannot expect that, in a journal which has to deal with the immense variety of topics relating to the service which crop up every week, there would be space for the full consideration of each and all of them. The very circumstance of the number of questions which are asked respecting the Army and Navy, in and out of Parliament—the uneasiness, so to speak, of the public mind, on every point affecting their efficiency—indicate the sense with which the gravity of the issues involved is coming home to us, in the midst of all the craze of accumulating wealth and aggrandising empire, which occupy the energies and attention of so large a portion of the population. And it is at the very moment when the condition of the Army is inspiring even moderate men with suspicion, and pessimists with alarm, and when the state of the Navy is viewed, if not with despondency, at least without much confidence and exultation, that we are called upon to assume an enormous responsibility in taking over 1,300 miles of the coast of the Red Sea, the whole of the interior of Africa between the Nile and the sea—a region larger than France and Germany—and to annex Egypt. Nothing like it has ever been known since the Conscript Fathers of Rome bought the land on which the Gauls were then encamped outside the city. The best energies and powers of the best of our citizens, statesmen, sailors, and soldiers will, we think, be taxed to preserve that which we have got, without any extension of dominion such as that which has been pressed upon us. Colonel Nugent, in commenting upon the complete nullity of the labours of past Commissions, might, if he were less sanguine, be met at the threshold of the United Service Institution by the repressing consideration, "What is the good of all I am about to say?" The ghosts of defunct Commissioners, officially speaking, are all around him, pointing with shadowy fingers to mounds of abortive recommendations. The apathy and indifference of the large section of the English public, of which Lord Lansdowne spoke, if long persisted in, are likely to have either a rude reaction, or to be punished by a series of misfortunes. No Government, under present conditions of party warfare, will venture to propose any large measure of defence, for the simple reason that the politician out of office would make capital out of the cry which would be raised against extravagance and waste, gaining the support of the taxpayers, who will always be on the side of the economist. "Turn the Government out!" that most horrible of cataclysms, is to be averted at all hazards by sacrifice of all principles, stopping short, we hope, with "Imperial existence." We have not yet got to the pass of "Perish the Empire!" being the war-cry of any large party. Colonel Nugent has, for the most part, only truisms to deal with, but he has set them forth in a picturesque way. He is an old hand at the work, and more than four years ago he urged that which most people think not a necessity, because most people know nothing about the subject, that works of defence for the protection of the capital should be carried out. People in England will not believe that what was possible under their very eyes almost, in the case of Paris, could be feasible in that of London; but they generally assume certain qualities, which would render it impossible for an enemy to invest the capital. Colonel Nugent, however, assumes that these works for the defence of the capital have been completed, and that a central arsenal has been formed, not at Woolwich, but at some convenient position; and with these data he commences the consideration of the Home Defences. Those of our readers interested in the subject, which we venture to think more important than even the extension of the Franchise, we must refer to the full report, which will appear in the paper of the Institution.

WHEREVER Sir William Hewett may be employed, there is no doubt his superabundant energy will produce the best results when it is developed in the direction of action of an aggressive character. Without at all impugning the correctness of the theory that Naval officers make excellent diplomatists, we are inclined to think that the cases in which they are most successful are those in which the arrangement aimed at is likely to be materially affected by the application of the physical force which may be at the command of the Naval officer engaged in the negotiations. Sir William Hewett could not get at Osman Digna by sea. He could not bombard him or storm him, nor land detachments of blue-jackets to sweep him off the face of the earth, and so he, having previously, we are informed, held a consultation with a body of native sheiks respecting the terms of the document and the propriety of issuing it, resorted to a proclamation. If Sir William had asked these worthy gentlemen whether it would not be a very effective clause in the proclamation to threaten Osman Digna that he would be pickled and eaten on board ship, we have not the slightest doubt that the worthy gentlemen would have expressed their high admiration at the ingenuity of the menace. Nothing, in fact, absurd or preposterous could have been proposed by the British Admiral sitting under the fire of his guns, and surrounded by a victorious army, that the friendly sheiks would not have approved of. We had already occasion to remark, with dissatisfaction, the tendency of the Admiral and of the General to issue proclamations, and after the rebuff which the previous document of the kind encountered, and its utter failure, we should have thought experience would have caused the General and Admiral to abandon the preparation of ukases, which are not likely to do anything but bring us into contempt where they are understood, and, where misunderstood, to be mischievous or ineffectual. That the Government should recall an officer of such service experience and ability as Sir W. Hewett from the post which he has occupied with so much advantage, because he committed the indiscretion, or worse, of offering a reward for Osman Digna, dead or alive, would be an offence against the service and against the country; but the manner in which the news of the proclamation has been received in this country will prevent any chance of a similar mistake, and will remind the gallant Admiral of the great difference of the moral temperature of the Red Sea and of England. When the Times talks of "Osman Digna having grossly infringed the usages of war by the murder of messengers sent from the British camp," we can only suppose that our contemporary has forgotten that we are not engaged in war at all. We think that if England were invaded tomorrow by any foreign army, the commander of which advised himself to send messengers to the camp of Lord Wolseley, or whoever else was in command, warning him that he would be destroyed if he did not submit, and holding out inducements to his followers to abandon the national cause and come over to the enemy, the heralds, especially if they happened to be Englishmen, would very probably be treated as Osman Digna is said to have treated the emissaries of Admiral Hewett. We make our contemporary a present of this parallel for future use.

The Flag Officer's Greenwich-Hospital Pension of £150 a year vacant by the death of Admiral Sidney Greenfield, C.B., on the 6th inst., has been awarded to Vice-Admiral Arthur Parry Eardley-Wilmot, from that date.

We observe that Commander Rolfe was left to his own devices during the advance on Osman Digna's camp, no superior Naval officers accompanying the Naval Brigade in the capacity of sight-seers, as at El Teb. Even the Admiral remained at the base, on board his flagship. And it now turns out that it was very lucky that he did so, having thereby been placed in a position to prevent rumours of disaster being telegraphed home, before the official dispatch reached him announcing the final victory.

A medical survey, held at the Royal Naval Hospital, Malta, on March 1, invalided Mr. W. C. E. Batchelor, Paymaster, serving on board the Iris, Mr. F. Vowels, clerk, serving on board the Carysfort, and sixteen seamen, who were ordered home in the Malabar. Lieutenant Montgomerie, of the Inflexible, was granted a month's leave of absence for the restoration of his health.

The Admiralty have not been slow in filling the vacancies created by the deaths of Lieutenants Almack, Royds, Houston Stewart, and Montresor, by promoting the senior Sub-Lieutenants of the East Indies Station with commendable fairness. We presume that the Junior Sub-Lieutenant of the Hecla owes his promotion to the fact of his having been attached to the Naval Brigade. Thus the two senior Subs. of the Euryalus, the senior of the Decoy, and the junior of the Hecla, all at Suakim, have been promoted and appointed to different ships this week.

Sir William Hewett has, for once, apparently, made a mistake. He has issued the following proclamation:—"I, the English Governor-General, Civil and Military, of Suakim, make known that whosoever will bring in the rebel Osman, the murderer, who has by his lies caused the blood of the tribes to be spilt at El Teb and Tamanieb, alive or dead, shall receive $5,000 reward." Earl Granville in the House of Lords and the Marquis of Hartington in the Commons have both had to answer numerous questions in consequence, both Cabinet Ministers replying to the same effect, that inquiries had been made through the Admiralty, which had resulted in information being received from Sir William Hewett stating that he considers Osman Digna to be a murderer, as he had killed two messengers in cold blood, and that the proclamation had been issued after consultation with the head men and the sheiks of the friendly tribes; but that the Government have telegraphed in reply that they cannot approve it, and that the offer must be withdrawn at once, in the manner which seems to those on the spot to be most judicious. Sir William Hewett will not be recalled, and has withdrawn the proclamation, but in what terms it is not yet known.

The several ships of the First Reserve have been ordered to send in their lists of defects, with a view to the necessary arrangements being made for carrying out their repairs early in May. Nothing is as yet known as to the nature of the forthcoming summer cruise, but it is authoritatively stated by those who ought to know something about the matter, that the Duke of Edinburgh will this year take the combined squadrons on the summer cruise.

In Mr. Walter Besant's latest novel, "All in a Garden Fair," he depicts a village exclusively inhabited by bankrupts. The Admiralty, who are not prone as a rule to soar into the realms of fiction, appear to have been taking Mr. Besant's novel as a happy thought, and are endeavouring to form a ship which shall be entirely officered by those unfortunate persons who have had the misfortune to undergo the ordeal of a court-martial. It is quite unnecessary to indicate the locality of this vessel. She is well-known, and universally avoided by all those who have sufficient interest to prevent the stigma of having belonged to her being attached to their name. At one time lately she possessed six officers who had been tried by this Naval tribunal, about six more whom their Lordships apparently consider ought to have been tried, and of the remainder it may be said that the "credit" of belonging to her causes it to be believed that at some former period they had a black-mark against their name. Playing fast and loose with the service in this style is neither compatible with either its dignity or interests, and is decidedly unfair to the officers in question, to whom it does not give a chance. We have no doubt their Lordships will have no difficulty in guessing the ship we refer to.

We understand that in view of the possible necessity of sending a joint naval and military expedition to relieve General Gordon in the autumn, the Admiralty have directed Vice-Admiral the Lord John Hay to have the upper waters of the Nile surveyed, with a view to ascertaining the feasibility of sending gunboats to its upper waters. Several naval officers have been detached from the ships at Alexandria to carry out this work.

The Australian gunboats Victoria and Albert left Malta on March 8, the Victorian torpedo-boat Childers having left on March 1, for Melbourne, with orders to report themselves en passant to Rear-Admiral Hewett, at Suakim, in case their services were required in the Red Sea.

Although not an actual promotion in rank, it has usually been notified when officers have been raised from the junior to the senior, or 16s., list of Majors in the Royal Marines. We have not observed that any such notation has yet been made in the vacancies caused by the promotions of Brevet Lieutenant-Colonels Hore and Moody, and the retirement of Major Tom; although the succession promotions have been made from the Captains' to the Junior Majors' Lists.

The Queen will embark at Sheerness on April 7 on board the royal yacht Osborne, and leave the harbour on Monday, April 8, for the Continent, where her Majesty intends to remain until April 24. Vice-Admiral Rice, C.B., Commander-in-Chief at the Nore, has been directed by the Admiralty to have everything in readiness for her Majesty's reception and departure.

Admiral Lesovsky, ex-Minister of the Russian Marine, and advocate of the cruiser system of warfare against this country, whose retirement from service we announced last Saturday, died this week at St. Petersburg.

The dinner at Marlborough House this day week to the gallant and distinguished officers of the Navy and Army afforded another proof of the tact and discrimination of the Heir Apparent, who on all occasions evinces the highest consideration for the great services on which the Empire depends at sea and on land. The names of the Prince's guests recall all the famous deeds of arms which have illustrated the reign of the Queen with extraordinary brilliancy, in a long roll of victorious campaigns. There was, we think, only one civilian present—Sir Allen Young—and he may be regarded as a representative man of the Mercantile Marine, a Naval Volunteer, a Captain of the Naval Reserve, an eminent explorer and experienced Arctic navigator, who was engaged as far back as the days of the Crimea in transport and supply duties in connection with the Army before Sebastopol. We do not believe any Sovereign could assemble so many sailors and soldiers, all of whom had done services to the State in hard fighting, as the Prince of Wales saw around him last Saturday.

We are gratified at perceiving that a reaction is taking place in favour of Zebehr Pasha, for whom we were the first to say a good word and a true word weeks ago, when all the papers and statesmen on both sides were in full-cry against him, as the great slave-dealer and head of slave-dealers. They will not be a whit less ready or less loud to follow the next red-herring that may be trailed before their noses, nor will they utter a word of regret for the wrong done to the "bad, black man." Gordon, it seems, made a hasty charge he could not prove, and must now repent of, against the man he desires now to govern in the Soudan.

Colonel R. Warren has been appointed Commanding Royal Engineer of the Western District, vice Colonel Morrison, whose term is about to expire.

It is rather amusing, or rather it would have been so, if the subject were not so serious, to observe the outcries which are made about the mystic cloud of smoke which obscured the front of one square, and the appeals, almost frantic, which are made to the Government immediately to provide the troops with powder that will not give forth the fumes of this villainous saltpetre. We would ask if Buller's brigade did not make quite as much smoke with its powder as Davis's Brigade, and yet it was not broken. The fact probably is that Buller's square was more solid and steady all round, and, furthermore, that owing to its position, it was not subjected to such a quick and powerful rush of the enemy. Davis's brigade, whilst more loosely formed, caught at the angles where the junction between the flanks and the front line was not complete, afforded an occasion to a dauntless and magnificent enemy to purchase a temporary advantage at an enormous sacrifice of life. We have nothing but praise for the soldiers who rallied, but it is not a proper application of words to praise the "steadiness" of those who were at one time, according to the Times' correspondent on the spot, "in headlong rout." If the smoke concealed the Arabs from the eyes of the infantry, it must be remembered that when they charged the Arabs in their turn could see nothing but the smoke, and we can scarcely conceive anything more trying to the nerves when they broke through this cloud of smoke, than the aspect of a line of infantry in close order, with breech-loaders delivering a rolling fire, and a sheen of bayonets in their front. The smoke in fact, to use a phrase not quite applicable to it, "cuts both ways." We were reminded last week of poor Benedick's pulverdampf, which he said lost him the battle of Königgratz.

Meantime, the first step towards Berber has been taken by Herbert Stewart with the 19th Hussars and the Gordon Highlanders. We venture to predict that, notwithstanding the impassioned cries from Printing House Square, there will not be much further movement towards Berber in that direction. It was supposed to be characteristic of the stolid Briton that he did not know when he was beaten. Osman Digna seems to have a touch of the same quality. He will not come in, but it is said he has run off into the mountains. But the accounts vary from day to day. On Wednesday, he was all full of fight. Osman was determined to die. "He is still breathing fire and sword, and already he has collected 2,000 men in the mountains in our front." Thursday's news was that he had bolted, and that the Arabs were demoralised. It may be, in the language of the Times, difficult and unsafe to delay much longer the "recognition of the realities out of which the conception, in the eyes of our soldiers and sailors, that they are putting down a rebellion, has grown," but we venture to say that the very last thing either the sailors or the soldiers desire would be to carry out the policy of the Times, if marching to Berber, holding the Soudan, and sweeping the Arabs out of their own country, as long as they resist the irruption of strangers into it, be the incidents of its accomplishment.

The French have been very unkind in their remarks about our campaign in Egypt. A review called the Correspondant has alone done us any justice, and we thank the gallant Captain who has dared to tell the truth, and quote old Marshal Bugeaud's saying about the British Infantry,—"And thank God, there are so few of them!" The price put on Osman Digna's head is as much disapproved of in France now, as the fact of Napoleon I. having offered so many talari for Mourad Bey, dead or alive, was formerly disapproved of in England.

The new Regulations for Musketry Instruction have been issued provisionally during the week. The annual course of musketry for 1884-5, which should have commenced on the 1st inst., but was postponed till the issue of the new regulations, will now be proceeded with.

It is rather curious that while there is a general feeling of regret in England that so many Arabs were slaughtered by General Graham's force, the French regret that General Millot missed making a severe example of the tag-rag and bobtail against which he marched with 10,000 men. We lament the destruction of gallant fellows, the French the escape of a miserable horde who, after much bluster, took to their heels at the approach of danger. Neither in France nor England does the action of the Government excite the least enthusiasm; but whereas in the former country public opinion is averse to any further prosecution of military operations, such is certainly not now the case in England.

The "stop-press" of the Times correspondent last Saturday contained food for reflection, but we doubt if it was turned to much account. On the field of battle, the day after the fight, he came across what he calls "a wounded rebel." The Arab must have been wounded before 12 o'clock the day before, and there he had been lying, in the midst of his slaughtered fellows, under an African sun, and under the bright moon till the sun was up again, unattended and uncared for, till the correspondent found him. He says the wounded rebel, "by some mysterious chance, had not been killed yesterday after the fight." We are quite sure the correspondent and Colonel Slade, who is as kind as he is gallant, did something more than question the poor wretch about Osman Digna; but the "stop-press" does not give details on that point, and the correspondent only says, "I then rode on." As might have been expected, such a paragraph as that has not escaped the eye of the intelligent foreigner, who is always desirous of taking us down a peg or two; and the Cologne Gazette, which has not forgiven or forgotten the controversy in which the statements of its War Correspondent respecting the cruelty of the British troops in killing the wounded Egyptians at Tel-el-Kebir were challenged, seizes upon the incident as a proof that the charges it made on the latter occasion were well founded. But as we observed in an article last week, when we had occasion to speak of the injudicious remarks of the leading journal on the alleged barbarities of the French at the capture of Sontay, the fact which has to be faced, and which it were better not to deny, is that in warfare, or in operations of war conducted against enemies who are not civilised, and who do not understand what are called "the laws of war" (which, in fact, are conventional arrangements, subject to change from time to time, as civilisation advances), the soldiers of civilised nations do not extend to those whom they call barbarians or savages, or to those who have differently coloured skins from their own, the privileges which are generally conferred by custom on the wounded on the field of battle by the conquerors. The reason assigned is on nearly all occasions the same, —that the wounded enemies, expecting no mercy or quarter, continue to fight after they are on the ground, and are dangerous even to those who seek to help them. No one would think of sending the Geneva-Cross ambulance to General Graham, under the idea that the red cross and white flag would protect its attendants. Of course, it is all very dreadful and horrible. "'Tis true, 'tis pity; pity 'tis 'tis true;" and there is an end of it.

Major A. W. White, R.A., will shortly be appointed, in succession to Major E. Bainbridge, R.A., Instructor at the School of Artillery Range-finding, at Aldershot.

It is denied in France that General Dumont's Committee have rejected the idea of adopting a repeating rifle. A French military critic, writing upon the subject, says:—"It is all very fine to declare and repeat, as was done in 1866, that in war it is not the number of shots which are fired that count, but the number of shots which tell. This reasoning, which was quite correct when it applied to soldiers of seven years' service, is no longer so, now that our Army is composed half of soldiers of three years' service, half of recruits entirely devoid of instruction, and who will necessarily be found wanting in coolness and solidity. Imagine the disastrous effect which would be produced upon youthful battalions by a rapid and almost incessant fire. The conscripts would not search to know if the shots told. They would simply comprehend that they were in face of an adversary better armed than themselves, and the moral effect would be enormous. Now, the result of a battle does not depend on the number of killed or wounded, but on the obstinacy of the troops, and the strategical conceptions of those who command them."

The vagaries of military amateurs are beyond the rules of reasoning or the application of argument, or we would deal seriously with the suggestion that a squadron or two of our Cavalry should be employed—in this blessed month of March in the Nubian Desert, remember—to march from Suakim to Berber, on the Nile; but that, happily, has been "cut short," for the present.

A French paper publishes the following interesting telegram from Hanoi, dated March 16:—"I have just travelled along the road from Bacninh to Hanoi. It bristles all the way along with an almost uninterrupted series of entrenchments, including two fortified dykes and 30 redoubts. All those works, and those of Bacninh itself, are not worth those which defended Bacninh and its approaches. They are merely earthworks, not sufficiently thick to offer any serious resistance to artillery. No intelligence was exhibited in organising the defence of these positions. The Chinese took no advantage of the ground, and everything that was done for the defence of Bacninh appears to have been the work of two Mandarins, only superficially acquainted with European proceedings. All the dead and wounded picked up upon the field of battle wore the uniform of the Army of Kouang-Si. There were no Annamites among them. The enemy left 200 dead bodies on the field. Our loss was five killed and 40 wounded. All the rifles captured were Remingtons or Martini-Henrys." So fell Bacninh, where it was supposed that General Millot and his troops would meet with the most desperate resistance. It was sufficient for the French General to threaten the line of retreat, for the whole garrison to make off in the direction of the Chinese frontier. Since then the enemy have been hotly pursued, and not without success.

Monthly classes of non-commissioned officers of Cavalry and Infantry are about to be formed at the principal military stations, commencing probably on April 1 next, for instruction in minor tactics, outpost duties, and elementary topography, under the Garrison Instructors.

"Easy writing" has been defined to be "d——d hard reading," and easy speaking would sometimes seem, when the results are in print, to come under the same heading. "May the evening's speech bear the morning's inspection," should be given as a "sentiment" by the toastmaster at many of our popular convivial gatherings. If Lord Wolseley were not a Blue Riband man, he might be suspected of having drowned his shamrock in something more frisky than cold water on St. Patrick's night, if we were to judge of his state of mind by the report of his speeches at dinner in honour of the Scotchman who converted the interesting population of the sister Isle to the Christianity of the period. Quem non fecundi calices fecere disertum? asked the poet, before St. Patrick introduced the usquebaugh of theology into the Island of Saints. The facility with which illustrations could be afforded of the portentous increase effected by plentiful potations of the natural powers of boredom possessed by some eminent topers, would lead to the belief that the wine was better or the brain was stronger in the days of Horace than in the nights of Willis's Rooms. Perhaps it was the water which spoiled the punch, but certainly all the eloquence was far away in Holborn, where Mr. Sullivan was delivering a very pregnant commentary on the assurances of Lord Wolseley that all that was needed to make Irishmen happy, was to have an opportunity of dying in defence of the Act of Union. When the Adjutant-General gets on his boys, he becomes, as nearly as his natural Hibernian sprightliness will permit him to be, a bore, and in the excesses of cups of the oxide of hydrogen he waxes somewhat maudlin over "the lovely ruin he has made." Surely, it was a little strong to challenge comparison between the fighting at Tamasi and the feats of the old British Infantry at Talavera, Waterloo, or Inkerman? Still more venturesome was it to claim for "boys" the credit due to those who, in the present state of our Army, may really be called "veteran" soldiers? A correspondent of the Morning Post put the case very pithily as regards the men of the regiments whose "steadiness," for a moment shaken, was in the end improved by the process of shaking.

We have elsewhere made some observations respecting the somewhat indiscriminate and injudicious praise which is intended not so much to honour the troops as for the glorification of those who consider they have inspired the British infantry with peculiar virtues. Lord Wolseley, unwittingly, perhaps, gave expression to his innermost thought when he said that if boys improved with age as wine does by bottling, the youngsters who fought at Tamanieb will be very terrible indeed, in a few years to come; but the Adjutant-General knows enough, theoretically, of the property of vinous liquids to be aware that bad wine does not improve by bottling, or by age at all. He would be a singular exception to the great commanders of the world if he held that, for the purposes of war, a veteran army is inferior to an army of boys. We quite admit that there may be particular operations of war, where the ignorance which is bliss leads recruits to commit glorious follies, in which the rashness and the élan of youth may be relied upon, and if they are led by cool and experienced soldiers; but for campaigning, surely there is no officer in the world—we cannot believe that Lord Wolseley is the exception—who would deliberately set out to make a campaign with an army composed of youths in preference to an army consisting not of old fellows, but of men whose thews and sinews were formed, with experience of the hardships as well as the luxuries of the operations which contradistinguish the art of real war from mere descents and expeditions of flying columns.

The last and most interesting minor war-game of the season was played on Wednesday last, under the supervision of Major Harvey, 71st Highland Light Infantry, Garrison Instructor, and in the presence of Lieutenant-General Sir C. P. B. Walker, Director-General of Military Education. The players were six officers of the Cameronians, two officers of the Royal Artillery, and two officers of Cavalry. Colonel Luck, C.B., 15th Hussars, officiated as chief umpire.

Lieutenants Haynes and Maude, R.E., who are candidates for admission to the Staff College, have been attached respectively to the Staff of the General Officers commanding 2nd and 3rd Brigades, in accordance with instructions contained in sec. 9, par. 8, Queen's Regulations. Lieutenants Wise and Ward, Cameronians, Lieutenant Kentish, 39th, and three non-commissioned officers, have been attached to the Quartermaster-General's Department, for topographical work in the vicinity of Aldershot.

It has been notified here, under Horse Guards authority, that serjeant master-tailors have been added to the list of non-commissioned officers who are exempted from musketry instruction.

The Army Athletic Meeting will be held here on July 1 and 2, the 7th Hussars Steeplechases on April 15 next, and the Army Rifle Meeting during four days, in the latter end of July.

Captain C. H. Bagot, R.E., attended at the Horse Guards on Monday last, to give evidence before the Committee on the Organisation of the Field Companies and Pontoon Troop, R.E.

Rear-Admiral R. P. Cator's alarm buoy, which has been tried on board several ships with such marked success, has been ordered by their Lordships to be supplied to each ship of the Reserve Squadron.

In future, when the punishment of imprisonment or cells is accompanied by stoppage of leave, the time of confinement in the former is to count as a portion of such stoppage. To avoid any laxity in carrying out this regulation, it is further directed that a certificate is to be signed on the back of the quarterly punishment return to the following effect,—"In all cases where confinement in prison or cells has been accompanied by stoppage of time, the period of confinement has been reckoned as a portion of such stoppages."

The Russian Annexation of Merv. By Charles Marvin. (W. H. Allen and Co.)

The writer of this little pamphlet tells us in his preface that "Merv is lost, and beyond recovery," that Herat is in deadly peril, and that unless a prompt and vigorous policy in Central Asia be at once adopted by the Government, and supported by the unanimous opinion of the public, the key of India and the rest of Western Afghanistan will succumb to Russian pressure. Without for a moment questioning the ability of Mr. Marvin to discuss this important question, we may say that we do not consider the state of affairs in Central Asia to be so very critical as Mr. Marvin declares it to be. However, the pamphlet he has last written contains some valuable and important information, which fully justifies its publication.

Soldiers' Stories and Sailors' Yarns. (W. H. Allen.)

There is no particular novelty in this volume, but it need not be apprehended that it will not obtain a favourable reception from the public. Soldiers' stories and sailors' yarns are almost always readable, and in the present case the author, whoever he may be, has compiled a capital book of mess-table drollery and reminiscences picked up ashore and afloat by Naval, Military, and medical officers, who, no doubt, assisted him in his researches. The contents of the volume are varied and amusing. The colonel tells his "Shell and Shark Story," which is not particularly amusing. A "soldier" enters the list with a story about "Gabriella's Gratitude," and the sailor spins a capital yarn relating to Smythe's Channel and the Straits of Magellan. The stories are with few exceptions smartly written, and well calculated to interest youths particularly.

The Personal Recollections of Peter Stonner. By Charles Blatherwick. (Chapman and Hall).

This volume, which is formed on somewhat similar lines to those of "Scraps," by Lord Saltoun, is written with the spirit which might be expected from a distinguished member of an old Hertfordshire family, which quotes back to services rendered to Edward IV. during the French campaign. The family seem also to have been possessed of considerable self-esteem, for the writer of these Recollections tells us how his father was not only a thorough gentleman of the old school, but the handsomest man about town, and that he himself strongly resembles him,—in fine, that he was a good-looking enough man, but plain for a Stonner. It appears also that the "Stonners," from time to time, have consistently supported the fine old bulwarks of the Constitution. The writer of these Recollections shows emphatically how his father refused Parliamentary honours, and persistently declined to represent his county in Parliament. As to oratory, he declares that he knows all about it, and the power it exercises. Many a time in his solitary rambles have tears come into his eyes at the words that have gushed from him on some of the burning topics of the day; but yet he did not use that power simply because he had it, and it is not in a gentleman's province to do so. The same thing occurs, we are told, in "writing." The Stonners have always been pretty ready with their pens. For example, there stood his grand-uncle's "Letters on the Times," written after the model of Lord Chesterfield, and considered by some superior to his. No doubt, they have not only got an European celebrity, but that a well-preserved copy can be seen even now on most of the libraries of our country gentlemen. This slight introduction to the compiler of these Recollections will enable the reader to enjoy their perusal more thoroughly than would otherwise have been the case. In fact, the book is in every respect a laugh-provoking one, and deserves a kindly reception, such a reception as will satisfy the compiler.

Last week the Hampshire Telegraph took the liberty of pointing out that Gen. Gordon's mission to Khartoum was a failure, and that in the face of inspired telegrams from Cairo to the contrary, having perfect confidence in the friend of Gen. Gordon, its informant. Since then, the correspondent of the Times has had an interview with Gen. Gordon, and has telegraphed that officer's own gloomy view of the situation, which is briefly this,—that Gen. Gordon believes he has reached the end of his tether, and that, unless supported by a joint Naval and Military expedition, we may have to send a far larger expedition in the not distant future either to relieve him in a beleaguered city, or to avenge his death. Why should England wait?

The Chinese war-vessel Nan Thin is at present lying in the River Tyne, where she arrived on Saturday last. The original intention was to take the vessel above the bridge to the works of Sir William Armstrong and Co., where artillery, on the order of the Chinese Government, was to be shipped. The authorities, however, have interfered, and have for the time being insisted on the detention of the Nan Thin. The present disturbances between China and France have led, it appears, to the impression that a breach of neutrality laws may be committed, if the vessel is allowed to depart with the guns on board. English police officers, or officials, have been placed on board, and no one is allowed to approach the ship without direct permission. The vessel will remain under detention until the point involved by the placing of guns on board has been settled. The Nan Thin was built in Germany for the Chinese Government. She is a very fine vessel, and during the few days she has been lying in the Tyne has been much admired.

THE NAVAL DISCIPLINE ACT.

Sir F. Milner called the attention of the House of Commons on Thursday evening to the powers given to Naval officers by the Naval Discipline Act of 1866, contending that Naval courts-martial should not have the power to inflict penal servitude on young men and boys of good character for offences against discipline involving no moral guilt. Mr. Warton supported the views of the Hon. Member for York. Mr. Hopwood contended that there ought to be some responsible officer at the Admiralty, charged with the revision of all sentences of courts-martial. Mr. Campbell-Bannerman thought the Admiralty would be willing to accept as a rule of conduct the very words of the Hon. Baronet's motion, namely "that the powers given by the Naval Discipline Act of 1866 ought not to be used to inflict penal servitude on young men and boys of good character for offences against discipline involving no moral guilt." The increased severity of the sentences passed of late years by courts-martial was not due to a tendency to increase the severity of such sentences unnecessarily, but to the growing tendency to insubordination in young seamen. To do away with the extreme punishment on board ship would be very dangerous, because on board ship order and discipline were maintained by moral rather than by physical force. The Admiralty by no means approved of exaggerated sentences being passed, and mitigated such sentences, when it was shown that a man had been too severely punished for a first offence. With regard to the inequality of sentences, the question was a difficult one. It had been found impossible, even in the courts of Law, to have uniformity of sentence. Still the Admiralty endeavoured to equalise the punishments according to the best judgment they could form of the circumstance of each case. It was intended to bring in a Bill to amend the Naval Discipline Act, and that would afford an opportunity for further debate.

Joseph H. Moreland, plumber, Duke of Wellington; Edwin Henry Flower and Edward Milton, naval schoolmasters, Vincent; Harry Seymour, boatswain's mate, Hector; Samuel Brown, leading stoker, Repulse; Edward Fuscher, boatswain's mate, Superb; John Furzland, leading stoker, Hibernia; Benjamin Silence, gunner's mate, Daring; Frederick Bargery, corporal R.M., Espoir; Henry Sansom, leading stoker, and George Robert Smith, colour-serjt. R.M., Diamond; Robert Lambert, butcher, Duke of Wellington; Francis H. Teague, gunner's mate, Cambridge; Eli Stone, private R.M.L.I., Osborne; Thomas G. Martin, caulker, Inflexible; George Lahiver, ship's corporal, Hibernia; James C. Longley, signalman, Champion; Michael Gifford, master-at-arms, and Alfred Martin, writer, 1st class, Swiftsure; William N. Hancock, quartermaster, Boadicea; and James Ozzard, chief boatman; James Chalkley and Robert Bellingham, commissioned boatmen; and James Helland, Thomas Flanagan, James Redman, and Thomas Dillon, boatmen, Coastguard, have been awarded the medal for long-service and good-conduct.

The Berlin correspondent of the Times writes:—"The Grand General Staff having now completed its history of the Franco-German War, it has resolved to do the same thing, on as complete and comprehensive a scale as possible, for the campaigns of Frederick the Great. Marshal von Moltke has, therefore, issued an appeal to the nation for a sight or loan of all hitherto unpublished documents, maps, and plans, &c., bearing on the subject which may help the writers in the execution of their huge and patriotic task. A propos of this, I may quote the remark once made by a military lecturer connected with the Grand General Staff to an English officer here. He by no means agreed, said the lecturer in question, with all Carlyle's political views of the Great Frederick; but he found the English historian's plans of Frederick's battles wonderfully accurate, and always recommended their use to his students in preference to any others."

The members of the Royal Naval Club of 1765 dined together at Willis's Rooms, St. James's, on Tuesday, to commemorate the battle of Copenhagen, April 2, 1801. Vice-Admiral R. Vesey Hamilton, C.B., was president, and Major-General Henry Kent was the guest. Among those present were Vice-Admirals H. S. Hillyar, C.B., and Thomas Saumarez, C.B.; Rear-Admirals Blomfield, Dent, Edward Hardinge, C.B., Soady, and W. Cox Chapman; Capts. C. Noel Hoare, T. Harvey Royse, H. H. Boys, R. H. Thompson, R. Pitman, Horatio Nelson, Sir Lambton Loraine, Sir John Swinburne, W. Spratt, Kinahan, F. L. Clayton, H. E. Crozier, R. S. Bateman, and Alfred N. Fairman; Commanders G. L. Atkinson, Hughes-Hallett, B. L. Morrison, S. Rickman, W. M. Lathom, R. B. Needham, H. T. Kemble, R. F. Hammill, Cecil S. W. Willis, E. C. Royse, William Bailey, S. Gassiot, M'Conochie, and M'Kechnie.

The Western Morning News says the authorities having determined to bring the Thalia forward for the purpose of carrying naval supernumeraries, everything is being done to remedy the defects previously existing. A general mess has been fitted on the main deck for the officers, including the captain, a part of whose cabin has been consequently taken to make increased cabin accommodation for officers taking passage. The ship's company is reduced to 62, all told, it being intended to fill in the rest from those taking passage, so that practically the crews will work their passage out and home. One of the great objections to sending crews out to their stations in troopships and bringing them home in the same way, is that they lose the experience gained by a crew navigating their own vessel on the long voyage either way. By this system that objection is in a measure overcome, each man fitting into his place in the ship, and the whole forming a complete ship's company. Should it be intended to continue this system, it would be advisable to construct vessels from more modern designs, both for economy and speed, which would include improved accommodation as a matter of course. The number of supernumeraries to be carried in the Thalia, both officers and men, is 350, and the ship is at present ordered to be ready in May.

"WHAT ARE YOU GRUMBLING AT?"

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—We are soldiering far from home, and we only get news a month old. We were startled the other day by seeing that a certain officer from a regiment of Dragoon Guards had been selected to command another regiment of Dragoon Guards, over the head of the 2nd lieutenant-colonel of that corps, who is his senior by nearly two years. We got over that, but a fortnight ago another paper tells us that one of her Majesty's troopships left England for Bombay with the regiment in question on board, and both these officers. There were drafts of other regiments on board, too. By Army Circular of December, 1883, clause 207, we presume that the 2nd lieutenant-colonel would command the troops on board. Does not this prove more than ever what an extraordinary anomaly is committed? Truly, we live in curious times, and no man is safe. A little bird has whispered (but may be wrong) that the selected one has never soldiered out of England. If so, there is nothing like home service, for we have also heard, but can hardly believe it, that the senior majors of a battalion, whose 2nd lieutenant-colonelcy has been open for months, are to be "rewarded" for five years of foreign (and active) service, in not the best of stations, by being passed over by an officer of another battalion,—senior, it is true, but guiltless of foreign service for many, many years. And yet we were always told what heart-burnings were caused by the Purchase system! You will probably have other communications on these subjects, but I trust this may be inserted in your much-read paper, for these bits of news are very disheartening to officers serving hundreds of miles from all they care for, who are steadily doing their duty, and who were (till this news came) cheered in the prospect of many more years of dull foreign service, by the hope of one day getting command.—I am, &c.,

OUT OF SIGHT.

POSTAL GRIEVANCES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Can you or the postal authorities inform me why letters posted at Trinkitat on Feb. 22, and addressed viâ Brindisi, should first be sent to Aden, where they arrived on Feb. 28, before coming homewards? Surely, somebody at Suakim is charged with the care of letters to be despatched from the expeditionary force for the relatives and friends in Europe of those now exposing themselves for their country? It does appear too absurd, unless in this instance it comes from gross carelessness, that letters for Europe from Suakim should go first to Aden. The letter I have just received has, therefore, been 17 days on its way, and I hold the envelope at your disposal, if you wish to see it, to consult the post-marks. I think some instructions should be issued in this matter, à qui de droit.—I am, &c.,

MILITIA AND LINE.

"A." writes:—"Major Davis denies that Militia officers wish to be taken for Linesmen, and no doubt he is right in the majority of cases; but how about those officers who leave out the 'M' on their uniform, and their battalion on their cards? of whom plenty have been noted lately at Dublin Castle. One officer, I saw, presumably in the uniform of the King's Royal Rifle Corps, who not content with the regulation black lace on his cuffs, wore also a sort of chevron of scarlet braid. I do not know what the gallant 60th thought, but I certainly considered it a misuse of their uniform."

The Calypso, at Chatham, is to have her Nordenfelt guns on the quarter fitted with shields to protect the gunners from small-arm and machine-gun fire.

The Admiralty have conferred the Captain's Good-service Pension of £150 a year, vacant by the retirement of Capt. J. D'Arcy, on March 6, on Capt. Philip Henry Colomb.

CHINESE ADMIRALS.

"One who Served with both Admirals" writes to us on a subject which we think ought to drop as follows:—"Com. Atkinson is quite right in defending his late chief, and, doubtless, as commander of the flagship, he lays the flattering unction to his soul that he had a share in raising the China Squadron out of the state of chaos he describes, though I do not recollect that the Iron Duke was particularly smart, but rather was beaten in exercise by every ship in the Fleet. Though very right in being loyal to his own chief, he has no right to do so at the expense of another gallant and much-loved officer, viz., Admiral Coote. I deny that the Squadron was in a state of chaos when Admiral Willes joined, and my principal authority is Admiral Willes himself, who, with a generosity rare in any official, said to the commodore, "I was told in England that this squadron was in very bad order, but with the exception of one small craft, I have never seen ships in better order or better station orders." It is a poor compliment to pay the captains of a squadron, to suppose that even if the Admiral takes things easily, they should allow their ships to be slack. I endorse every word of Com. Atkinson about Admiral Willes's generosity and hospitality. I am sure every farthing of his pay and allowances went in keeping up the position of a British admiral, and probably a good deal of private means. Few men now-a-days have the profession so thoroughly at their fingers-ends; scarcely a thing escaped him. Had he been less overbearing, and had he allowed anybody else to have an opinion besides himself, he would have been popular. How about getting the appointment of paymaster done away at Yokohama? Could not an assistant-paymaster do this duty as well as you? Certainly. Could not a captain do the duty of commander-in-chief as well as an Admiral? That would be a much greater saving. How about the miserable 2s. 6d. a day allowed to the senior officer's clerks at Singapore and Shanghai being done away with? the assistant-surgeon sent away from the Yokohama hospital, which was to be reduced to a sick bay of the Hong Kong hospital? all the nurses discharged, and no sooner has this wonderful saving been effected, than they had to get doctors and nurses from the fleet. Like many another gallant officer, Admiral Willes seemed to think that the sole duty of the British Navy was to shift topsails, &c., and cruise together in squadrons far away from where they would likely to be wanted, as turned out to be the case. The British Navy is for the protection of British interests, and ships are sent out for that purpose only, to these distant stations. Therefore, to keep them all together for six months on a station several thousand miles long, can scarcely be the intention of the authorities at home. That Admiral Willes would wantonly annoy any foreign authority is ridiculous; but he certainly did not lay himself out to please their susceptibilities on more than one occasion."

THE VOLUNTEERS AND GENERAL BOXER.

A correspondent writes:—"I should be glad if you could find space in your valuable journal for a few remarks, by a Volunteer, on Gen. Boxer's criticism of two statements which appeared in the Times relating to the armament of Volunteers, and to which that gallant officer appears to take exception. The statements referred to run thus:—(1.) 'The time is come for the supply to our best marksmen, the Volunteers, of a rifle suited to their skill.' (2.) 'The weapons with which they are now armed are so worn as to be little better than smooth-bore muskets.' Gen. Boxer admits the beneficial results to the country derived from the Volunteers, and recognises their value as a defensive force, providing they are properly trained and organised. Now, if the Volunteers are worthy of being properly trained and organised, surely they must be worthy of being properly armed and equipped. The General next says that he doubts very much if it is correct to say that the Volunteers are our best marksmen, but he assigns no reason for his doubts; and even assuming that the Volunteers are not 'our best marksmen,' it must necessarily debar them from ever attaining that appellation, to withhold from them the superior arm issued to the other services. Gen. Boxer next doubts if the Snider rifles are in the condition stated by the Times, and he goes on to say that if they are so, this is a strong argument against arming the force with a more delicate weapon, as their condition must be the result of improper handling. This, I venture to think, is a very grave charge to bring against the force, and one that should not be brought, unless it could be thoroughly substantiated. Referring to the condition of the Sniders, they are doubtless in a very bad condition, as far as regards the bore, but when the fact that many of them have been in use upwards of 20 years is taken into consideration, this can scarcely be wondered at. In conclusion, I beg to state that in my rather limited experience, I have never yet seen or heard of a case of improper handling, in the sense implied by Gen. Boxer."

"A Volunteer Officer" writes:—"In a letter in your current issue, Gen. Boxer writes, doubting the statement that the Snider rifles in the hands of the Volunteers are in a worn condition, and expressing his opinion that in any case such worn condition must be due to improper handling. I beg that both you and Gen. Boxer will pardon me, if I presume to remind him that many of the Sniders at present in use are merely converted Enfields, which, no doubt, had been used to some extent before conversion. Perhaps the General may by this means find a way to account for their worn condition, and acquit the Volunteers of neglect."

As the number of boys in the several training-ships is in excess of the number required for the service, the Admiralty have directed that the special entry of boys is to be stopped for the present, pending further directions. It is a pity that their Lordships do not give some of the surplus and rejected boys who are candidates for the Royal Navy the option of joining the Army, as, taking their age into consideration, they would make far more eligible recruits than those the military authorities are at present glad to accept.

The Army.

3rd Dragoon Guards. Major Wentworth Dawes, pymr. on the Half-pay List, died suddenly on Sunday night during the service in Kidderminster parish church. Major Dawes was formerly a subaltern in the Military Train, which he joined March 16, 1855. He was appointed pymr. Nov. 18, 1868, and offered his services at the outbreak of hostilities in Egypt in 1882, and was present at the battle of Tel-el-Kebir. Heart disease is assigned as the cause of death.

5th Dragoon Guards. The regiment has been practising "field-firing" at York, under command of Lieut.-Col. Kenyon-Stow. The practice commenced at 1,300 yards, at marks representing different forces, columns, skirmishers, &c., each man firing 130 rounds, and the troopers with their carbines beat the infantry regiment by six points. What will the advocates of mounted infantry say to this?

10th Hussars. Just before leaving India, the regiment received a well-timed and flattering compliment, in the shape of a very handsome cup of Indian workmanship, presented to Col. Wood and the officers, in the name of the officers of the Bengal and Punjab Cavalry and Central India Horse, as a memento of the good-fellowship which had ever existed, and of the kindly feelings evoked, as well by service together in the field as by friendly rivalry and contention in various sports and games. Col. Wood, in a letter acknowledging the acceptance of the cup, wrote:—"The trophy will recall to all those who have served with the regiment in India the pleasant reminiscences of bygone days."

12th Lancers. A Bangalore telegram says that Lieut. Churchill, of the 12th Lancers, who fell from his horse in the cavalry charge at the recent camp of exercise in Bangalore and sustained a concussion of the brain and a fracture of the ribs, will leave for England, as the only chance of saving his life.

13th Hussars. Capt. Baden-Powell has been temporarily attached to the Staff of H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught, General in command at Meerut.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

F Baty., B Brigade, R.H.A., will march e route to Canterbury on the 3rd prox.

C Baty., B Brigade, R.H.A., will occupy quarters at Aldershot, in succession to I Baty., B Brigade, under orders for Exeter.

Quietly, and, it might almost be said, leisurely, the defences of the River Hooghly, to protect the approaches to Calcutta, are being completed. On Jan. 29 last a detachment of the 3rd Baty. 1. Brig., Scottish, at present stationed in Fort William, left, under command of Major T. C. Price, for Fulta, to mount the armament of the new fort erected there. This armament consists of 9-in. 12-ton R.M.L. guns, which, though perhaps not of the most approved modern type, should, with the assistance of the torpedoes in the river, be able to stop the progress of any vessel. The work of mounting the guns, varied with, perhaps, some of the first-rate snipe-shooting to be got in the neighbourhood, occupied the officers and men of the baty. till Feb. 16, when they returned to Calcutta.

Col. T. F. Chapman, has been reappointed Military Secretary to the Commander-in-Chief in India.

Lord Hartington, it is stated, is to be further pressed about the alleged refusal of horse artillery to Gen. Sir Gerald Graham. The story, as now told, is as follows:—The Military authorities in Egypt, when the expedition started, asked for artillery. That request was refused. Lord Hartington, in answer to a fresh request, telegraphed to Gen. Graham, on the 6th inst.:—"Is it desirable to obtain Horse Artillery from Cairo, considering the time required for transport to Suakim? Presume the enemy has no artillery. I leave you to decide." It is asked, what Gen. Graham could do but reply in the negative? The battle was expected to take place in two or three days, and the telegram of the Secretary of State for War, put into other words, ran thus:—"You do not mean to say you want to delay fighting for another ten days, and that with an enemy entirely without guns?" Gen. Graham, thus pressed, decided to fight without waiting for Artillery.

Owing to the number of officers being below the regimental strength, the authorities have awarded 10 additional commissions to the same number of gentlemen cadets in the 2nd class at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, who were considered qualified. The senior cadets in the class referred to continue their studies, in order to obtain commissions in the Royal Engineers. The 10 gentlemen cadets recommended for commissions will be gazetted to the regiment in the course of the next few days.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

The following circular has been published:—"1. It having been notified in General Orders that the C (Telegraph) Troop, and the 22nd and 34th Companies of the Royal Engineers, are, from April 1, 1884, to be merged into one body, to be designated 'The Royal Engineer Telegraph Corps,' full details of the equipment of the corps have been prepared, for both peace and war services, and will be supplied to officers concerned. 2. The equipment of the Royal Engineer Telegraph Corps will be accounted for in accordance with the following instructions:—(a.) The officer commanding the 1st Division will, in time of peace, render to the Commissary-General of Ordnance, Royal Arsenal, under Par. 100 of the Equipment Regulations, 1881 (Army Regulations, Vol. III.), an account for the entire equipment (viz., arms, accoutrements, and other stores, now included in the Troop and Company Equipment Ledgers) of the Royal Engineer Telegraph Corps. (b.) In time of peace, the officer commanding the 2nd Division will be a sub-accountant to the officer commanding the 1st Division, and will draw his equipment under Par. 42 of the Equipment Regulations. (c.) On the mobilisation of the corps for war service, the officer commanding will transfer, by regular voucher, to the officer commanding each section, the equipment to be taken into the field. This will be done before leaving England, the transfer being made under the authority of Par. 43 of Equipment Regulations. (d.) During active operations, the officer commanding each section will be a direct accountant to the Senior Ordnance Store Officer with the forces, under pars. 33 and 35 of the 'Regulations for the Supply of Stores to an Army in the Field, 1881.' (e.) On the conclusion of hostilities, the section-equipment ledgers will be balanced in accordance with Par. 37 of the Regulations last quoted. All stores will be duly retransferred, by regular voucher to the officer commanding the 1st Division, and the section-equipment ledgers will be rendered to the Commissary-General of Ordnance, Royal Arsenal, as final ledgers. (f.) The officer commanding the portion of the 1st Division of the Royal Engineer Telegraph Corps remaining at home, after the despatch of the sections destined for active service, will become the accountant for the residue of the corps equipment left behind."

Major L. Conway-Gordon, Deputy-Assistant-General South-Western District, is under orders to report himself in England (as one of Sir A. Colvin's two specially-selected officers), to give evidence before the Select Committee of the House of Commons on the Indian Railways. This officer, the now well-known author of "The Yellow Pamphlet" on the wheat export trade of India, which caused so much sensation, not only in India, but in the mercantile centres of England, has been closely connected with the Indian Railways since a subaltern, and having lately received the high compliment of being elected an Honorary Member by both the Chambers of Commerce of Bombay and Calcutta, and been appointed manager of the Eastern Bengal Railway, his evidence before the Committee is looked forward to with much interest by the mercantile community of both India and England.

Grenadier Guards. The Duke of Cambridge accompanied by Lieut.-Gen. Higginson, inspected the three battalions on the Horse Guards' Parade on Saturday last.

Coldstream Guards. The 1st Batn., consisting of about 22 officers, 543 non-commissioned officers and men, with 1 officer and 32 non-commissioned officers and men of the 1st Scots Guards, proceeded by a special train from London to Aldershot on Thursday, to go through a course of musketry practice. The battalion is quartered in G and H Lines, North Camp, and attached to the 3rd Infantry Brigade.

2nd Queen's (Royal West Surrey Regiment). The 2nd Batn. left Umballa on the 25th ult. for Subathu.

5th Northumberland Fusiliers. Lieut.-Col. H. H. Taylor, late of the regiment, died at Fern Lodge, Barnes, S.W., on the 15th inst., aged 51 years.

10th Lincolnshire Regiment. Lieut. Carpenter, 1st Batn., joins the Commissariat and Transport Staff, on probation.

17th Leicestershire Regiment. Half the 1st Batn., consisting of 7 officers and 188 non-commissioned officers and men, with 28 soldiers' wives and 35 soldiers' children, arrived at Aldershot on Wednesday, by a special train from Portsmouth, and are accommodated in the Centre Infantry Barrack, and attached to the 2nd Brigade.

22nd Cheshire Regiment. The 2nd Batn. left Peshawur on the 25th ult., en route to Umballa. Lieut. Hardy, 1st Batn., joins the Commissariat and Transport Staff, on probation.

23rd Royal Welsh Fusiliers. In reply to Viscount Lewisham, the Marquis of Hartington stated on Friday last that he was not prepared to say that the case of Major Hutchinson, late of the regiment, who in 1880 was ordered out to India at a few days' notice, and within three months of his landing was compulsorily retired, was not a hard one; but as all the steps taken had been in conformity with the Regulations, he did not see how any exceptional advantages could be granted without their being given to other officers as well.

26th Cameronians (Scottish Rifles). Lieut. Grant joins the Commissariat and Transport Staff, on probation.

29th Worcestershire Regiment. Lieut. Erskine joins the Commissariat and Transport Staff, on probation.

33rd West Riding Regiment. Col. Castle will complete his tenure of command of a battalion on July 23; consequently, he will be placed on half-pay from that date. His intention, it is believed, is to leave India in May. The command will fall to Lieut.-Col. Bally, who, with the exception of six months, has passed all his service in the regiment. Major Fenn will obtain the vacant lieut.-colonelcy.

39th Dorsetshire Regiment. The Pioneer says:—"The Dorset Regt. will undergo great changes, it is believed, shortly; Col. T. F. Dixon, who commands the 1st Batn., the old 39th Regt., completes his five years in that position next July; the second lieut.-col. (J. G. Smyth), who will then have nearly 30 years' service, is not expected to succeed to the command for various reasons, so that the command of the battalion becomes an open question. Lieut.-Col. Newbolt, the junior lieut.-col. of the territorial regiment, is commanding the 2nd Batn. (54th), owing to Col. Hughes having been compelled to go home sick on account of an attack of paralysis with which he was seized at Umballa. The two senior majors of the regiment (territorial) are Lieut.-Col. Gossett and Major Wynen, both Staff College men who have held Staff appointments. The former entered the service in 1856, and the latter in 1855, so that in all probability both will obtain their lieutenant-colonelcies, as the senior major of the 39th, now seconded, only dates from Jan. 1859. Should the promotion go regimentally, Lieut.-Col. Newbolt would obtain the command of the 1st Batn.; Lieut.-Col. Gossett would then become junior lieut.-col. of the 2nd Batn., and Major Wynen the junior lieut.-col. of the 1st Batn."

42nd Black Watch (Royal Highlanders). The following account of the career of Major W. Aitken, who fell at the battle of Tamasi, has been sent to the Times by one of his brother-officers:—"Born in 1842, Walker Aitken joined the 42nd Regt. as an ensign in 1861, and served with his regiment in India until the effects of a violent attack of Peshawur fever compelled him to proceed home on sick-leave. On the return of the regiment to Scotland in 1868, he rejoined it at Stirling Castle, and continued to serve with it until his death. At the close of 1873 the 42nd Regt., then in garrison at Portsmouth, was detailed as one of the three British battalions sent out to reinforce Sir Garnet Wolseley on the Gold Coast, in view of the invasion of Ashantee, and Lieut. Aitken embarked in the steamship Sarmatian with his corps, and, in command of a company, took part in the actions of Amoaful and Ordasoo, and final occupation of Coomassie. In Aug. 1882, the 1st Batn. Black Watch was again called to embark for active service in Egypt, and Major Aitken, though not entirely recovered from a severe accident he had met with not long before, in which he sustained concussion of the brain and was more or less unconscious for 17 days, claimed his right to proceed to Egypt with his company, and embarked in the steamship Nepaul at the Albert Docks. In the attack on Arabi's intrenched position at Tel-el-Kebir his company occupied the extreme right of the Highland Brigade, and in the short but decisive struggle of that day he displayed great energy and decision. Never completely recovered from the injuries received in the accident alluded to, after the excitement of the campaign was over, his health soon gave way, and shortly after the occupation of Cairo he had to be invalided home, landing at Portsmouth in a thoroughly enfeebled condition. After a stay of a few months at home, when his health was sufficiently restored, he returned to Egypt, where he remained until he embarked with his battalion at Suez for the intended relief of Tokar. In the battle of Teb he escaped without injury. Major Aitken was a good officer, fond of his profession and devotedly attached to his regiment. With all who knew him he was a favourite." The London correspondent of the Western Morning News writes:—"A very serious statement is made about the cause of the temporary disaster to the 2nd Brigade at the battle of Tamanieb. The Black Watch were ordered to double against the Arabs. They obeyed, though, as they say, 'We knew the order was foolish, and because we were put on our mettle.' They advanced into what was practically an ambuscade, and as the flanks could not keep pace with the front line, gaps were made, through which the Arabs rushed into the square. It is, therefore, incorrect to say that the square was broken by the enemy's charge. It had ceased to exist before the charge came, and it is now asserted that the flanks did not hear the order to advance. All this seems to show that 'some one had blundered,' though the Black Watch, with soldierly instinct, do not 'reason why;' but there will probably be an inquiry into the whole incident."

ROYAL MARINES.

Capt. S. Polkinghorne has been granted four months' leave of absence on sick certificate, with permission to visit the Continent.

Lieuts. L. R. G. MacDonnell and Q. G. Monckton have qualified for captains.

54th Regiment arrived at Peshawur on the 25th ult., and relieved the 2nd Batn. 22nd. See 39th Regt.

55th Border Regiment. Capt. Arnot joins the Commissariat and Transport Staff, on probation.

60th King's Royal Rifle Corps. At the close of last week a telegraphic message was received that Gen. Sir Arthur A. T. Cunynghame, G.C.B., colonel-commandant, had died on board ship on his way from India, where he had been on a tour with his eldest daughter. Gen. Cunynghame obtained his first commission as 2nd lieut. in the 60th, the King's Rifle Corps, in Nov. 1830. He proceeded to China in 1841 as aide-de-camp to Gen. Lord Saltoun, and was present at the storming and capture of Chin-kiang-Foo, when he led the column of attack on the heights of Makuikiow, and at the investment of Nankin. In 1854 he accompanied the Army to the East as Assist.-Qrmr.-Gen. to the 1st Division, and was present at the affair of Bulganac, battles of the Alma, Balaklava and Inkerman (where he was with the Guards in the Sand-bag Battery, and led into action a detachment of the 20th Regt.), and the siege up to May, 1855. In March he was appointed local Major-Gen.; in May took command of a division of the Turkish Contingent; and in August received the personal thanks of the Sultan, and was created a Lieut.-Gen. in the Turkish Army. In October, he sailed in command of 10,000 men to Kertch. In 1865 he commanded the reserve in the Sittana campaign. From October, 1865, to March, 1877, he commanded the Dublin District, and received the thanks of the Irish Government on the suppression of the Fenian rising; in June, 1869, he was nominated a Knight Commander of the Bath. Shortly after leaving Ireland he was appointed to the command of the Cape of Good Hope, which he held till the year 1878. He was placed on the Retired List in 1881. He was appointed col. of the 36th Regt. in Dec., 1868, in Feb., 1876, col.-comdt. of the 1st Batn. King's Royal Rifle Corps. He was nominated a G.C.B. in 1878. He received the medal for Nankin; the medal with four clasps for his services in the Crimea, and was made a C.B.; was made an officer of the Legion of Honour; received the Turkish medal and the Fourth Class of the Medjidie; and subsequently the Turkish war medal and the Second Class of the Medjidie. Gen. Cunynghame married, in Sept., 1845, the Hon. Frances Elizabeth, daughter of the late Field-Marshal Viscount Hardinge, G.C.B., by whom he leaves a family of two sons and three daughters. Among other literary works, Gen. Cunynghame was the author of "Travels in the Eastern Caucasus." He was a descendant of Sir David Cunynghame, of Milncraig, county Ayr, and of Livingstone, county Linlithgow (said to be descended from the second son of Alexander, first Earl of Glencairn), who was created a baronet of Nova Scotia in Feb., 1702, with remainder to heirs general.

78th Seaforth Highlanders. The officers mess-house at Lucknow was burnt down on Feb. 12. All the mess plate, kit, furniture, &c., was saved with but trifling exceptions.

87th Royal Irish Fusiliers. Lieuts. Davison, Tyrwhitt-Walker, Barry, Hon. E. Stopford, Blood, Wolfe, Mulock, Conran, and Sandys have passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee. A team of the 87th Fusiliers won the garrison tug-of-war at the sports held at Rawul Pindee in February, having pulled over the King's Dragoon Guards in the final tie. One officer, two non-commissioned officers, and 20 selected men of the detachment of 87th Royal Irish Fusiliers, now attached to the 3rd Rifle Brigade, proceeded to Portsmouth on Thursday, to await the return home of the 89th Regt., and take charge of the soldiers' families. The detachment of the 87th are mightily pleased at the prospect of being incorporated with the 89th at an early date. They will not be sorry to leave Aldershot, where they have been hewers of wood, diggers of trenches, and standing camp fatiguemen ever since the battalion left for India last year.

92nd Gordon Highlanders. Gen. M. K. Atherley, whose death we announced last week, entered the Army in 1823, being gazetted to the 70th Foot, in which regiment he served until 1834, when he joined the 92nd Highlanders as capt.; was promoted major in 1846, and subsequently commanded the regiment from 1849, until his appointment to a brigade at Malta in 1863. In 1873 he was appointed to the colonelcy of the 109th Regt., and in 1880 was transferred to his old corps, the 92nd Highlanders. Gen. Atherley had held the reward for meritorious service.

98th North Staffordshire Regiment. "X. Y. Z." writes:—"The adjutancy of the 1st Batn. Prince of Wales's North Staffordshire Regt. has been vacant since September last, a period of six months. Is this calculated to keep a regiment in a state of efficiency and preparation for active service in Egypt or elsewhere? It appears to me a most short-sighted policy, particularly as a number of recruits are waiting to be trained. Perhaps, by calling attention to this in your columns, the authorities may be induced to hasten their movements, and appoint an adjutant before another six months elapse."

107th Royal Sussex Regiment. Lieut. Russell joins the Commissariat and Transport Staff, on probation.

Medical Department. Deputy-Inspector-General T. J. Haran, R.N., was entertained on Saturday last at a farewell dinner at the Medical officers' mess at Haslar, where for two-and-half years he has been on service, and has, by his kindness and genial disposition endeared himself to all those with whom he came in contact. He will be greatly missed by a numerous circle of friends, whose best wishes accompany him to his new sphere of duty in charge of the Naval Hospital at Malta.

Pay Department. In the House of Commons, on the 10th inst., in reply to a question by Mr. A. O'Connor, Sir A. Hayter said:—"There were recently 22 regiments and one regimental district in which the pay duties were administered by a committee or acting paymaster. The number of candidates for the Pay Department has fallen off considerably, since the reorganisation of the Army in 1881 diminished the probability of captains having to retire compulsorily. But this incentive to accept paymasterships is likely to revive during the next few years. Representations have recently been made asking that the officers of the Pay Department might be placed on the same footing as officers of the Commissariat and Transport Staff. The Secretary of State has under consideration some suggestions in connection with the retirement of officers in this Department; but he can hold out no hope that they will be placed on the same footing as the Commissariat in respect of rank, pay, and retirement." In reply to a further question on the 14th inst. by the Member for Queen's County, the Financial Secretary said:—"The Army List will show that there are six cavalry regiments and 29 battalions which have not paymasters attached to them. To 13 of these, however, paymasters have been detailed, but the fact of their having joined has not yet been notified in the Army List. The West India Regiments are allowed one paymaster only. There are seven officers on the Retired List of the Army Pay Department, who are temporarily employed in consequence of the Department being under its establishment. It may be here mentioned that since the beginning of this year 12 officers have applied to become candidates for the Department. The duties of chief paymaster in the Woolwich and North-British Districts are being performed by officers on the Retired List, temporarily only, until the arrival home of chief paymasters from foreign service. The rank given to the Commissariat Department was not granted with reference to treasury-chest duties only, but mainly on account of the other duties for which that Department is responsible. When the Pay Department was formed in 1878, the highest rank in it was that of major. Since then the ranks of lieut.-colonel and colonel have been given to the officers in charge of the principal stations and abroad; these are the officers who have custody of the treasury chest. At the few stations abroad where an officer of this rank is not serving, the officer in charge is always granted additional pay for the responsibility of the chest duties." Again, last Monday, Mr. John Talbot asked:—"Whether the Secretary of State for War had received a memorial from the officers of the Army Pay Department, enumerating certain grievances under which they conceive the Department to be suffering; whether it is a fact that a large number of vacancies in the Department remain unfilled; and whether he can hold out hopes of redressing one of the principal grievances complained of, namely, the absence of a permanent representative at the War Office, and of thus placing the Army Pay Department on the same footing as the Commissariat and the Ordnance Store Departments." Sir A. Hayter said:—"The answer to my hon. friend's first question is yes; to the second, there are 23 vacancies out of a total establishment of 314 (? 324) in the Pay Department, for which there are 12 candidates; to the third, there is no intention of appointing a permanent representative of the Department at the War Office."

The Auxiliary Forces.

YEOMANRY CAVALRY.

Royal East Kent Mounted Rifles. In addition to the Volunteer regiments already named, a wing of the regiment will take part in the Easter Monday Review at Dover, under the command of Lieut.-Col. the Marquis of Ormonde, the newly-appointed Commandant.

The following officers have been ordered to join the Auxiliary Cavalry School at Aldershot on April 1:—Capt. E. Frewen, Royal East Kent. Lieuts. J. E. Dykes, Ayrshire; O. Ormrod, Denbighshire; Viscount G. E. Throwley and R. J. Tylden, Royal East Kent; H. F. de Trafford and H. J. Walmesley, Lancashire Hussars; R. A. Falkner and H. G. Clough-Taylor, Leicestershire; F. A. Smith, Southern Nottinghamshire; St. D. M. Kemeys-Tynte, L. W. Molesworth, and S. Pleydell-Bouverie, West Somerset; H. de G. Parker-Jervis, Staffordshire; Hon. G. Ashburnham and A. G. Lucas, Suffolk; J. Baldwin, E. B. Milward, and J. H. Cartland, Worcestershire; W. Rawson-Shaw, 2nd West York; C. W. Gray, 1st Forfarshire Light Horse Volunteers.

MILITIA.

The eight battalions of Militia to train at Aldershot will be attached to brigades as follows:—3rd East Surrey, June 9 to July 5, Rushmoor, 1st Brigade; 4th East Surrey, July 14 to Aug. 9, Rushmoor, 1st Brigade; 5th Royal Fusiliers, June 9 to July 5, Rushmoor Hill, 2nd Brigade; 4th Royal Fusiliers, June 16 to July 12, Rushmoor Hill, 2nd Brigade; 3rd Royal Fusiliers, June 23 to July 19, Rushmoor Hill, 3rd Brigade; 4th Oxfordshire L.I., June 9 to July 5, Swan Inn Plateau, 3rd Brigade; 7th King's Royal Rifle Corps, June 16 to July 12, Cove Hill Plateau, 3rd Brigade; 3rd Middlesex, June 23 to July 19, Church Plateau, 3rd Brigade.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

The 11th Middlesex (Railway) R.V. will take part in the field day on the Fox Hills and Chatham Ridges on Easter Monday.

London Amusements.

At Covent Garden Signor Salvini has repeated that impressive performance of "The Gladiator" which so delighted his audiences at Drury Lane in the spring of 1875. The play of "Il Gladiatore" is very gloomy, and in some portions repulsive, but the vigorous acting of the Italian tragedian keeps the attention of the auditor fixed on the scene, and the powerful situation where, like Virginius, the father slays his daughter to preserve her honour, will linger long in the memory of the playgoer. A morning performance of "Othello" was given on Thursday afternoon.

"Breaking a Butterfly," at the Prince's, is now followed by a little plagiarism in twenty minutes, called "Six and Eightpence." A young married couple think, after six months of connubiality, they ought to have a divorce, as the husband is always smoking cigarettes and the wife continually solving double acrostics. A lawyer effects a reconciliation, and the professional fee recorded in the title is gladly paid. The little sketch is brightly sustained by Mr. and Mrs. Beerbohm Tree.
and "La Cosaque." In July, Madame Sarah Bernhardt will appear in a round of her favourite characters.

Experimental trials of new pieces at morning performances remain a feature of the Gaiety programme. On Thursday was produced in this manner a comedy-drama in three acts and a prologue, called "My Queen," written by Mr. W. Howell-Poole. Next week, Miss Rose Osborne is announced to make her first appearance in England as the heroine of a new three-act drama, called "Pique;" and Miss Adelaide Moore is on Thursday afternoon to make her first appearance on the stage as Julia in "The Hunchback."

"The Golden Ring," at the Alhambra, was on Monday evening represented for the one-hundredth time, and on Saturday next the piece will be removed from the programme to make way for "The Beggar Student," which will be produced on April 12. In the meantime, the theatre will be closed to complete the decorations, and

This evening (Saturday), at the Globe, will be produced the travestie, by Mr. Arthur Clements, called "Dan'l Traduced," with Miss Lottie Venn and Mr. J. L. Shine in the prominent characters. The burlesque was first acted at the Strand Theatre, Nov. 27, 1876, two months after Mr. W. S. Gilbert's play was brought out at the Haymarket.

The burlesque of "Bluebeard" has been this week reproduced at the Gaiety. On Saturday afternoon, "Little Don Cæsar" will be revived, to enable Mr. E. W. Royce, who has partially recovered from his severe illness, to reappear in his original character. Mr. Robert Reece will provide the next extravaganza, which will illustrate the subject of a well-known French opera bouffe.

The eleventh season of French plays will commence at the Gaiety on June 9, with Madame Judic in "Niniche" allow improvements to be made in the interior conducive to the greater comfort and convenience of the visitors.

"The Rivals" will be the next attraction at the Haymarket. Mr. Lionel Brough is engaged for Bob Acres, Mrs. Bancroft will play Mrs. Malaprop, and Mr. Bancroft and Mrs. Bernard-Beere Falkland and Julia.

The authorised version of "Le Maîtres de Forges" will be brought out at the St. James's in the Easter week. The plot of the play is already familiar to the public through Mr. Robert Buchanan's adaptation called "Lady Clare."

Mr. Laurence Barrett, a popular American actor, will appear at the Lyceum in April, when Miss Mary Anderson closes her present engagement. July and August will witness the reappearance of Mr. Henry Irving and Miss Ellen Terry, who return to New York in September, and then Miss Mary Anderson resumes possession, and plays Juliet in "Romeo and Juliet," with Mrs. Stirling as the Nurse and Mr. Terriss as Romeo.

Mr. Charles Du Val will present this day (Saturday) his 300th representation of his successful monologue at St. James's Hall. A special programme will be presented, including Mr. Du Val's recital of the Irish ballad-poem of "Shamus O'Brien, a Tale of '98."

It has been intimated that on the issue of new clothing on April 1 the old clothing need not necessarily be returned into store, but may be kept for fatigue purposes.

Obituary.

Col. E. J. Simpson, late Bengal Infantry, died at Wiesbaden, in his 65th year, on March 14. The deceased entered the Army in 1839, became successively lieut. in Aug., 1840; capt., July, 1844; brevet major in 1859; major in Feb., 1861; lieut.-col. in July, 1864. In 1845 he served as Commissariat officer with the force under Sir Charles Napier, in Scinde. Served as A.D.C. to Major-Gen. Hunter, C.B., Commanding Indus Field Force; when that force was broken up, acted as Cantonment Magistrate and Brig.-Major at Meerut, North-West Provinces. In 1848 was appointed permanently to the Commissariat Department, and joined the advanced Cavalry Brigade of Gen. Cureton, C.B.; was present at Ramnuggur; accompanied the force under Sir J. Thackwell; was present at the battles of Soolapore, Chillianwallah, and Goojerat (medal and two clasps); appointed to same force under Sir Walter Gilbert, and with it was present in the advance attack in pursuit of Sikhs and Afghans. In 1849 was transferred, by particular request of Sir C. Napier, to Army head-quarters. Was present with the expedition in the Kohat Pass. Remained at Army head-quarters, on the staff of Sir W. Gomm. On promotion, was appointed to Meerut as executive officer, and was in charge during the Mutiny of 1857. Received the thanks of Government for services rendered to the force before Delhi during that period, and received medal. In 1858 was transferred to Calcutta, where all commissariat arrangements for the China campaign were organised by him. On losing his eyesight, he retired from the Army in 1868 as colonel.

Mr. Arthur Coysgarne Sim, midshipman R.N., serving on board H.M.S. Carysfort, died on Feb. 24, aged 18. He entered the service in 1879, and passed for midshipman in Feb., 1881. He served on board the Carysfort during the Egyptian War, for which he was granted the medal with clasp for the bombardment of Alexandria, and the Khedive's bronze star.

The Rev. George Mathias, Chaplain in Ordinary to the Queen, one of the few survivors of the army of occupation that entered Paris after Waterloo, died at St. Leonard's-on-Sea, on March 10, at the age of 87. He was the fourth son of Capt. J. V. Mathias (late 62nd Regt.), of Stanhoe, in the county of Norfolk, and was born in 1796. In 1812, he obtained a commission in the Royal Regt., through the Duke of Kent. Soon after he sailed for America, and was shipwrecked on the Island of Anticosti, in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. The regiment, returning in 1815, landed at Ostend just too late to take part in the battle of Waterloo, but joined the army of occupation, and marched to Paris. In 1819, Mr. Mathias sailed to India, and after five years' service there was invalided home. In 1825, he purchased his company in the 79th Highlanders, and in 1832 was ordered to take a detachment of that regiment to Canada, and was shipwrecked on a small island off Cape Breton. In 1834, after 22 years' service, Capt. Mathias sold out of the Army, and entered St. John's College, Cambridge, where he took his degree in 1838, and was ordained to the curacy of Loddon, in his native county. He then became incumbent of Handley, in Dorsetshire, where he remained till 1847, when he was appointed chaplain to the Royal Hospital, Chelsea, through the influence of his old friend and brother-officer, Lord Panmure, then Secretary of State for War. He was also appointed one of her Majesty's Chaplains in Ordinary. At Chelsea he remained 22 years, and then retired to St. Leonard's. Mr. Mathias was one of a family of ten sons, nine of whom were serving his Majesty at the same time, eight being in the Army and one in the Navy.

ASSISTANT-PAYMASTERS, R.N.

On Thursday, in the House of Commons, Mr. Alderman Cotton asked the Secretary to the Admiralty "whether it is the intention of the Lords of the Admiralty to alter the existing regulations with reference to the Accountant Branch of the Navy, in which the block is so great that there is no promotion whatever from assistant-paymaster to paymaster, many of the former of which rank have been in the service upwards of 14 years." Sir Henry Wolff on the same day asked the Secretary to the Admiralty "whether their Lordships' attention has been directed to the present stagnation in the promotion of assistant-paymasters of the Royal Navy; and, if so, whether it is proposed to take any steps to remedy the same." Mr. Campbell-Bannerman, while answering the hon. Member for the City, at the same time replied to questions on the same subject standing in the names of the hon. Members for Portsmouth and Limerick, stating that "although there may be a temporary slackness of promotion in the Paymasters' branch, it is purely temporary, and there is no intention of adopting any special measures with regard to it. The number of paymasters who will reach the age for compulsory retirement before the end of 1889 is 17; but this number must by no means be taken as including all who will retire, as it seldom happens that officers remain on the active list to the end. During the last three years, I find that only one-tenth of the actual vacancies have been created by age retirements."

Instances having recently occurred of misconduct on board her Majesty's Naval training-ships on the part of boys received from the Industrial School ships, the Admiralty have directed that greater precautions are to be taken to prevent the entry from those institutions of boys of bad character; and the particulars of all boys who have been committed to any of these ships by magistrates' order are to be reported to the Admiralty in each case for directions, before they are finally entered for the Royal Navy.

Army & Navy Gazette.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 22, 1884.

IN answer to a question in the House of Commons on Monday night, the Marquis of Hartington—who, of course, was provided with materials for his answer, as personally he knew nothing about the matter—informed the hon. member for Preston that there was substantially no truth in the statement we made in the Army and Navy Gazette last week respecting the destruction of ordnance and war material after the bombardment at Alexandria. Lord Hartington stated that there were only four 40-pounder breech-loading Armstrong guns found in the works, that these were not injured, and that there were no torpedoes, but that a large number of submarine mines had been destroyed. The case stands thus :—In a recent number of the Egyptian Gazette, it was stated that an English officer of Artillery "had just returned from Germany, where he had been sent to order a number of Krupp guns" for Egypt. In a recent number of the Times another paragraph appeared to the effect that on a certain day a steamer had sailed from England for Alexandria under contract with the Government, with a quantity of torpedoes and war matériel on board. Thereupon we naturally called to mind the fact that after the bombardment of Alexandria a number of breech-loading guns and rifled ordnance found in the forts were destroyed, the initial tubes of the rifled ordnance having been split by the action of gun-cotton; and that a large store of torpedoes was also rendered useless, not in the heat of action, or by any warlike operation, but by order of the authorities —Military and Naval—then, we presume, in undisturbed possession of the works, and the great magazines of gunpowder had been spoiled by explosion, or immersion in water, or by other means. We, moreover, called attention to the fact that batteries, complete, of Krupp guns had been found at Alexandria and Cairo, with all their equipment and prodigious quantities of ammunition. Upon that statement, Mr. Tomlinson put his question to the Secretary of State for War. Lord Hartington, as reported in the newspapers, stated that there were only "four breech-loading Armstrong 40-pounders" found in the works of Alexandria, that those had not been injured, and that there were no torpedoes at all in the forts, but only 634 submarine mines, which, we infer, his lordship allowed, had been hopelessly damaged. Now this we hold to be an illustration of the art of evading a question, by the subtle use of the application of the particular to the universal. We said nothing about Armstrong guns or 40-pounders, but we did certainly say there were breech-loading guns which had been injured by the purposeful ignition of gun-cotton. And if in the works of Alexandria all the rifled ordnance were only four 40-pounder Armstrongs, we want to know the justification for the terrible alarm expressed by the Government and by Lord Alcester, lest his fleet should be destroyed by the Egyptian artillery; and what was the ground upon which Lord Charles Beresford telegraphed the news which threw the Morning Post into convulsions, and frightened the isle from its propriety? If Lord Hartington meant to convey the idea that the splendid rifled guns, the mounting of which was the immediate casus belli, were not injured by us, so as to render them unfit for use, then all we have to say is that no man must trust the evidence of his sight in any case in which it is opposed to official assurance. But, indeed, if he persists in stating that the rifled guns were not rendered useless, his lordship will not receive support from any of the Naval officers who were engaged in the work at Alexandria, for it was our boast at the time that they had been all placed hors de combat. As to the difference between submarine mines and torpedoes, used in the highly technical sense in which the words are by his lordship, we have only to say that the brass-mounted copper cylinders and vessels, provided with apparatus for electrical discharge and ignition, were called torpedoes by the Naval officers who were engaged in destroying them. It is strange that a Minister should think it necessary to baffle what perhaps was only legitimate anxiety for information on such a matter, by implying that the information respecting the destruction of the rifled ordnance in the batteries of Alexandria, which every one engaged in the bombardment knew to be true, was not founded on fact; or that the play upon words —torpedo and submarine mines—should have been considered by him a triumphant refutal of an unvarnished tale. With the statements of the Egyptian Gazette and of the Times respecting the purchase of Krupp guns by the English Artillery officer at Cairo, and the dispatch of torpedoes from this country to Egypt, we have nothing to do, our paragraph having been based on the assumption that the statements were correct, as they had been uncontradicted; but we did not say, nor did we expect that any provision would be made in the Estimates for the furnishing of torpedoes to the Egyptian Government.

Promotions from the ranks are being gazetted very slowly this year. The only two promotions to lieutenancies as yet announced have both been in the Cavalry, viz., Serjeant John Hamilton Martin, from the 19th Hussars, to be Lieutenant in the 13th Hussars, and Troop Serjeant-Major Philip F. Dwyer, from the 17th Lancers, to be Lieutenant, 8th Hussars. This latter promotion is the third which has been made in the last two years from the 17th Lancers, Serjeant-Major Charles Coventry and Serjeant George W. Forbes, having both recently gained Lieutenancies from its ranks. The non-commissioned officers of the 19th Hussars have also been fortunate in seeing no less than four of their Serjeants advanced to commissions in the last three years. While so many promotions from the ranks are being accorded, why are the Guards excluded?

Lieutenant-Colonel H. C. Farrell, has been appointed to the command of the Auxiliary Artillery, 1st Sub-District, N.B., and to command the Depôts, Scottish Division, vice Colonel-Hope Johnstone, who has resigned these appointments.

A problem which may interest some of our readers of a mathematical turn of mind has lately been propounded to us :—There are two bodies of fighting men; one of them civilised, which we will call A, and the other uncivilised and almost unarmed, which we will call B. There is a third force, called C, which, when convenient, has been styled an army. A and B have, on different occasions, routed superior numbers of C. The problem is this:—If a barony and £25,000 be the reward of a commander who, with 30,000 men of A, easily defeated about an equal number of C, what should be the reward of a commander who, with less than 5,000 men of A, defeats, in two hard-fought battles, much larger numbers of B, all valiant warriors who know no fear, and in whose minds flight is the last thought to arise? We do not know the correct answer, but it has been whispered that it ought to be, in fair proportion, at least a Dukedom and £50,000.

Colonel G. Le M. Tupper, lately commanding the Horse Artillery at Woolwich, becomes a Major-General on the Active List on the 31st inst., consequent on the retirement of Lieutenant-General Sir C. D'Aguilar.

It may interest our readers to know that the forthcoming number of Colburn's United Service Magazine will contain an article by Captain C. W. White, entitled, "The Army and the Public: an Appeal to the Patriotic." The article, we understand, has been written at the request of a large number of our best-known soldiers and politicians, as a sequel to "Our Military Position: a Note of Warning," by the same author. It will be devoid of all technicalities, as it is addressed to lay rather than professional readers, the object of the writer being to explain clearly and concisely what our position is in a military sense, and to show the steps it is desirable for the nation to take to strengthen that position, and render the Army an effective fighting machine; in other words, to induce the taxpayers to take an intelligent interest in the Army, and to regard it as something better than an institution maintained for the benefit of certain high officials, and the purpose of eating up public funds. As in the case of the "Note of Warning," this "Appeal" will eventually be published in pamphlet form.

It is difficult to understand on what principle an Infantry Depôt of 200 men is given some ten officers, whilst Artillery Depôts of about 400 men each are to be satisfied with less than half that number.

The drill season was opened at Aldershot on Monday last. The four preparatory drills a day, each of one hour's duration, have been steadily procceded with, in accordance with a Memorandum on the subject issued from Head-quarters. These "spring drills" will be continued till the end of the month, when they will be succeeded by squadron, company, and battalion drills. With reference to the instruction of the troops in attack formation during the drill season of 1884, Sir Archibald Alison has intimated to commanding officers his desire that particular care may be taken in the instruction of officers, non-commissioned officers, and men at drill, in extended order, whether for skirmishing or for the attack formation. It is pointed out that nothing is more difficult, or requires more practice, than an advance in extended order over rough ground.

The military training of Cavalry by squadrons has already commenced. Each squadron will in future be annually put through a course of instruction by its own officers. The training will take place between March 1 and June 30, and will include only trained soldiers and first-class recruits. Only one squadron of each regiment will at a time be under instruction. A syllabus of the course of instruction has been furnished to all concerned.

A correspondent writes :—"I have just come off parade, a commanding officer's inspection. My company numbered four, myself, my subaltern, a serjeant, and one man. Verily, the present are soldiering days."

A message along the wires may, it appears, at any instant, alter or direct the policy of this Empire, not only with regard to the course it will pursue in the Soudan and on the coast of the Red Sea, but in Egypt itself we think recent events must have convinced the Government that the first step which they took in ordering the bombardment of Alexandria and the dispatch of a military force to Egypt, without the smallest idea of what would follow on their action, was a deplorable mistake. Our readers do not need to be reminded that from the very first this journal consistently opposed the policy of intervention, unless it was accompanied by the steadfast purpose of supporting the Egyptian Government in its entirety, rather than of subverting it, and of abandoning to barbarism the enormous regions which, up to the time of the military insurrection of Arabi, were fast expanding their resources and being opened up to the influences of commerce and civilisation. We had no business in Egypt at all, as representatives of the Powers interested in securing to their subjects the payment of their bonds, whatever right we might have acquired to protect our own interests if they were menaced; and to these interests there would have been no menace in Arabi's triumph, had we accepted the principle upon which English Governments have hitherto acted, that when a revolution is a fait accompli it should be recognised. It was our hostility to Arabi and his Government, and the demand for his degradation and exile, which forced him to assume the attitude in which he was stricken to the earth, with consequences which may probably involve the overthrow of the greatest Ministry England has seen since the passage of the Reform Bill, and complications which their successors, whoever they may be, cannot face without apprehension.

It is strange to hear, on the authority of Lord Hartington, that no English firm is able at present to furnish the Government with steel forgings of the size and quality required for the new breech-loading ordnance, though in France and Germany several such firms exist.

Captain Low has written us a letter to show that "Egyptians" did not always run away. But what is the use of it? It is our policy to believe that all Egyptians are "cowards," just as all Cretans were "liars." And no braver men ever fought and died than the Egyptians who gave the name of "Arab-tabia" to the outwork of Silistria in 1853, or than those who worked their guns on the miserable breast-works of Alexandria; not to cite those who, under Ibrahim, beat the Turks, and who won the respect and praise of our officers at Sidon and St. Jean d'Acre. The mot d'ordre has gone forth. They are cowards. Q.E.D.

The disturbance produced by ordinary service duties in the feeble organisation of the Army, which is always chipping its shell and coming out in an unfledged state, to be sat upon and rehatched, is already sufficiently serious and embarrassing without further strains, and although the demand modestly made for the present wants of Egypt is only for six and a half battalions, it has knocked our linked battalion system into a cocked-hat. But that is a mere detail, and the infatuated incubators point proudly to their latest hatching, while modestly deprecating any criticism on the ground that the demands of Egypt have thrown the poultry-yard into a little disorder. Should the policy advocated by the Times, which is led by the nose, and is kept straight ahead towards annexation by the powerful wire of its Egyptian correspondent from Cairo, be listened to and adopted, we are very sure that not six-and-a-half nor sixteen-and-a-half battalions will be sufficient to meet the consequences, and to assert our sway from the Nile to the sea, and from Suakim and Suez to the Lybian desert. Of course, from a professional point of view, nothing would be more desirable than that there should be a considerable expansion of the military establishments and of the Naval forces of the country produced by, and consequent upon, obligations incurred for the maintenance of our supremacy in Egypt, and the parts adjacent to it, especially if any military operations, not war, were likely to lead to the growth of such plentiful crops of honours as sprang out of the desert of Tel-el-Kebir, and as will come, we hope, from the mounds of El Teb and the rocks of Tamai.

Major P. D. Trotter, 2nd Battalion Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, who lately volunteered for active service in Egypt, has been despatched by mail-boat up the Nile to Assouan, as second-in-command of the field force recently despatched there under Colonel Duncan. Captain Molyneux, of H.M.S. Invincible, has also proceeded up the river from Assiout to Assouan.

The sensible and practical remarks of Mr. Archibald Forbes on the nonsense which has been printed about the bayonet will, no doubt, settle the question, if any there were, raised by the twaddlers about Roman swords and stabbing-irons, &c., in the minds of the readers of the Pall Mall Gazette; but there ought to be some authoritative inquiry into the truth of the statements made by correspondents, respecting the inferior quality of the cavalry sabres and of the bayonets in the Soudan. The same complaints were made in the Crimea, notably after the heavy-cavalry charge. Tailors' swords are sometimes bad, but are generally good enough. The blades of our cavalry sabres come principally, if not altogether, from Germany (Sollingen, &c.), and have done so for many years; and, we fancy, many bayonets are made abroad in the rough. Prussian sabres, lance-points, and bayonets are considered to be of excellent quality, and no complaints were made of them in 1870-71, except by the enemy.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS, Etc.

QUEENSFERRY.—Thanks for the "tip." You were right in your surmise.

GUNNER.—We are not aware that Mr. Longridge, M.I.C.E., ever made a "gun" in his life. We believe, from a question asked by a correspondent, that there must have been some trial of a "Hope" gun somewhere, but whether it was a model or a piece of real ordnance we cannot say. It is probable the trial, if any, was not successful any way, or we should have heard more about it.

E. G.—You gave no address to send an answer to.

CONSTANT READER.—Brass spurs and button bottines at a levée! The Volunteer Colonel may have been entitled to wear field officer's spurs—was, and is, we suppose—but the button boots must have given his Royal Highness "a turn."

"ROYAL ARTILLERY."—Thanks. We are obliged to keep the MSS. over.

C. S. H.—The information has not yet been published.

X. V.—If possible, next week.

FUSILIER.—Possibly, next week.

OLD OFFICER.—We have made inquiry, and cannot ascertain that there is any such asylum, or any fund from which assistance could be given to the imbecile and destitute orphan sons of officers.

GENERAL A.—Your reputation and your motives alike entitle your opinions to respectful consideration, but we fear the object you have in view is not regarded with favour. It is a national misfortune that the family should feel toward that country very much, as George I. felt towards England. Stat nominis umbra. It cannot be said the sentiment is unnatural or causeless.

Several Naval and Military letters are in type, but are forced to stand over through want of space.

The ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE this week contains four pages extra.

The NAVAL AND MILITARY STATIONS are published by the ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE on the first Saturday in each month.

The ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE exchanges with or receives the following Service papers abroad:—L'Avenir Militaire; Bulletin de la Réunion des Officiers; L'Armée Française; L'Italia Militare; Rivista Europea; Rivista Militare; Memorial de Ingenieros; La France Militaire; Moniteur de la Flotte; Le Progrès Militaire; Der Veteran; Streffleur's Oesterreichische Militärische Zeitschrift; Jahrbücher für die Deutsche Armee und Marine; Militär Wochenblatt; Giornale d'Artiglieria e Genio; Organ der Militär-Wissenchaftlichen Vereine; Vedette; Deutsche Heeres Zeitung; Militärische Zeitschrift; Armeeblatt, Wien; Army and Navy Journal of New York; The American, Philadelphia; Revista Maritima Brazileira; in addition to all the home and colonial professional periodicals and journals.

At the recent final examination of Naval cadets, of the 32 who presented themselves, three incurred discharge, having failed to gain 10 per cent. of the maximum marks. The group of cadets now leaving the Britannia are hardly equal in intelligence to the cadets who passed out in 1882 and 1883. The difference is most marked in algebra and theoretical navigation. The director thinks that the course of study on the fourth and third terms presents a formidable programme for young boys, and that a great part might be omitted with advantage.

Acting Sub-Lieutenants Messrs. C. MacCrea, Sydney Maxwell, Fred S. Rogers, Francis Miller, Will. Boys, Albert Lafone, B. J. Yelverton, Philip Musgrave, Chas. Taylor, Francis Smith, Francis G. Travers, Herbert Powley, and the Hon. Robert F. Boyle, having passed their examinations at Greenwich, will join the Vernon on April 7 for the torpedo course.

HEADACHES AND DISORDERED STOMACH.—"After suffering for nearly two-and-a-half years from severe headache and disordered stomach, and after trying almost everything, and spending much money without finding any benefit, I was recommended to try your Fruit Salt. Before I had finished one bottle, I found it doing me a great deal of good, and now I am restored to my usual health. Others I know that have tried it have not enjoyed such good health for years.—Yours truly, ROBERT HUMPHREYS, Post Office, Barrasford." CAUTION.—Legal rights are protected in every civilised country. Examine each bottle, and see the Capsule is marked "ENO'S FRUIT SALT." Without it, you have been imposed upon by worthless imitations. Sold by all Chemists, price 2s 9d and 4s 6d. Directions in Sixteen Languages,—How to Prevent Disease. Prepared only at ENO'S FRUIT SALT WORKS, Hatcham, London, S.E., by J. C. ENO'S Patent.

DEATH.

SIMPSON.—On the 14th inst., at Wiesbaden, aged 64 years, Colonel Edward James Simpson, late Bengal Army, only surviving son of the late Colonel Simpson, H.E.I.C.S., deeply regretted.

ROYAL UNITED SERVICE INSTITUTION.

LECTURE, FRIDAY, March 28. The Chair will be taken at 3 o'clock. J. B. FELL, Esq., Assoc. I.C.E., on "The Necessity for an Improved Means of Communication with India by the Euphrates Valley Route."

To be followed by a Discussion.

NOTICE.

The ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING of SHAREHOLDERS will be held at the WESTMINSTER TOWN HALL, Caxton Street, Westminster, on THURSDAY, March 27, at 2 p.m.

By order,
H. LAWSON, Secretary.
March 12, 1884.

117 Victoria Street, Westminster, S.W.

NOTICE is hereby Given that, at the General Meeting of the Shareholders of this Society, to be held at the Westminster Town Hall, Caxton Street, Westminster, on Thursday, March 27, the following Alterations in and Additions to the Articles of Association will be proposed :—

55A.—The Committee may with the sanction of a Resolution of the Society in General Meeting out of the profits carry over to a separate account to be called "The Deferred Bonus Account," or such other name as the Committee shall think fit; any sum they may think proper to be allotted to the Shareholders in proportion to their shares, and to be payable upon such contingency or contingencies, either separately affecting the respective Shareholders (as, e.g., the respective deaths of the existing Shareholders at the date of the Resolution), or otherwise, as shall by the Resolution be determined, and so that the several parts of the fund so carried over shall, so long as the same remain unpaid, bear interest at such rate as may be determined.

56.—To be altered by adding at the end, the words, —This clause is to apply to the interest credited on any part of "The Deferred Bonus Fund," but is not to apply to any part of the Fund itself.

57.—To be altered by inserting at the commencement of it, "Subject to the provisions of article 55A."

By Order,
H. LAWSON, Secretary.

THE CEDARS and MORNINGTON PARK ESTATES, near West Kensington and Addison Road (Kensington) Railway Stations, and Omnibus Routes to the City, &c.—HOUSES to be LET or SOLD. Rents from £55 to £150. Well built, of white bricks, Bath-stone dressings, admirably designed, with all modern improvements, bath-rooms, electric bells, venetian blinds, &c. These well-known and fashionable Estates afford advantages which cannot be surpassed in any of the suburbs. Situate within easy access of the West End either by road or rail, and within the four-mile radius of Charing Cross. For Military and Naval officers and persons of moderate incomes who require good family residences, they are unequalled. Soil is a fine gravel. St. Paul's School (from St. Paul's Churchyard), now being erected on the Estate, will, when completed, afford exceptional advantages to the sons of residents in the neighbourhood. Lawn-tennis and ornamental gardens on the Estate for the use of residents.—Particulars post free on application to GIBBS and FLEW (Limited), Cedars Estate Office, West Kensington Station, W.

GENTLEMEN'S RESIDENCES at moderate rentals, may be obtained at West Kensington, opposite West Kensington Station. Frequent trains to the City and West End. St. Paul's Schools (from St. Paul's Churchyard), now being erected in the locality, will afford the highest educational facilities. The Houses contain every modern improvement; fitted bath (hot and cold water); fine gravel soil; first-class sanitary arrangements, and admirably suited to the requirements of gentlemen's families. Rents £60 to £100. —Apply to GIBBS and FLEW (Limited), Cedars Estate Office, West Kensington Station, W.

BASINGSTOKE.—HOUSES to be SOLD or LET, on the South View Estate, one of the finest positions in South of England, conveniently arranged and well-built semi-detached Villas, each having a frontage of 24 ft., standing on ground 30 ft. by 129 ft.; containing six bedrooms, fitted bath-room, two large reception rooms, kitchen, and usual offices; fitted with gas and electric bells; good drainage and pure water; very attractive elevation; good railway accommodation to all parts by S.W.R. or G.W.R. The high-class grammar school affords excellent educational advantages at £3 per annum for each pupil. Price £600; ground-rent, £6 6s; lease, 99 years; rent, £50.—Mr. FOX, Basingstoke.

PLEASANT, WELL - FURNISHED HOUSE to LET (in York), containing dining, drawing, and three bed-rooms, &c. Stable and coach-house, if required. Conveniently situated for a MILITARY GENTLEMAN. Immediate possession. Terms moderate.—Address, 5 South Esplanade, York.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE.

COUGHS,
COLDS,
ASTHMA,
BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.

Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) discovered a remedy to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false.

Vice - Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was undoubtedly the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.—See the Times, July 13th, 1864.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the true Palliative in

IS THE GREAT SPECIFIC for CHOLERA, DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY.

The General Board of Health, London, report that it acts as a charm, one dose generally sufficient.

Dr. Gibbon, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states:—"Two doses completely cured me of Diarrhœa."

From SYMES and CO., Simla: Dear Sir,—We congratulate you upon the wide-spread reputation this justly esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of Dr. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescriber and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES and Co., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, his Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a Liquid Medicine which assuages Pain of every kind, affords a calm, refreshing sleep without Headache, and invigorates the Nervous System when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of

EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

IMPORTANT CAUTION. The immense sale of this remedy has given rise to many unscrupulous imitations. Of all Chemists, 1s 1½d, 2s 9d, and 4s 6d.

GENTLEMEN'S GOLD LEVERS, engine-turned cases, 80s.

The Rev. Robert Cass, Settle, Yorkshire, writes, February 19, 1880:—"The Lady's Gold Lever Watch received from you for 70s, in size, workmanship, and beautiful appearance, resembles a watch usually sold at £10. It gives entire satisfaction."

From Mr. J. J. Harris, Schoolmaster, 2-18 The Royal Irish Regiment, Aldershot, September 22, 1880:—"I am very much pleased with everything I have had from your Company. The watch (25s) has proved to be an excellent one, and is a marvel of cheapness. It is fully equal to, or indeed superior to, many I have seen purchased by Regimental Clubs for treble the money."

These Watches are frequently sold for treble the money. Cheques or P.O. payable to

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—HEALTH OR WEALTH.—No sane person would hesitate an instant in the choice between these two conditions. Now is the season to secure the former either by restoring or confirming it. These Pills expel all impurities from the system which fogs, foul vapours, and variable temperatures engender during winter; this medicine also acts most wholesomely upon the skin by disgorging the liver of its accumulated bile, and by exciting the kidneys to more energetic action; it increases the appetite for food and strengthens the digestive process. The stomach and liver, with which most disorders originate, are fully under the control of these regenerative Pills, which act very kindly, yet most efficiently on the tenderest bowels.

THE MOUNTED SERVICE BOOT.—PATENT.

A COMPLETELY NEW and USEFUL INVENTION. By a CAVALRY OFFICER.

It is equally suitable for riding or walking, and consists of an upper and lower part, which, when adjusted by the peculiar arrangement of the spur, forms a complete riding boot, and at the same time the comfort of a boot and gaiter for walking is ensured. The lower part can be worn also as an ordinary walking boot. ECONOMY, COMFORT, and PORTABILITY.

Specially recommended to all Officers and Sportsmen going Abroad.

OROIDE GOLD JEWELLERY (REGD.)

"Recommends itself not alone to those of limited means, but to the wealthy, who, when frequenting large gatherings, whether at racecourses, theatres, public meetings, or even on that sacred thoroughfare, the king's highway, have known what it is to be robbed of their valuables."

OROIDE GOLD WATCHES,
Accurate timekeepers, 21s to 50s, safe and free per post (registered).
The "SERVICE" KEYLESS WATCH,
Open face, jewelled in eight holes, Two Guineas, post free.

"The watches of this patent are in no respect different from gold ones. The degree of finish, of course, regulates the price, but the cheapest class is capable of performing with accuracy for from fifteen to twenty-five years. As to strength and solidity, the Oroide cases are undoubtedly superior to those of gold watches. No other form of amalgam can rival Mr. Rowe's in the general essentials of a substitute for gold."

"Thousands of persons who, though not wishing to impose on their friends by a display of what is but a semblance of the real metal, have not been indisposed to find an equally good-looking metal, which, reproduced in a watch, a chain, or article of jewellery, would not be a costly thing to buy, nor a dear thing to lose." OROIDE GOLD SCARF PINS, 2s 6d to 5s, post free.

ELEMENTS of MILITARY ADMINISTRATION.—FIRST PART. Permanent System of Administration. By Major J. W. BUXTON, Garrison Instructor, Northern District. Small crown 8vo, cloth, 7s 6d.

"It is difficult to over-rate the industry and ability which Major Buxton has brought to bear on the subject. He has really presented the Army, for the first time, with as clear, continuous, and systematic an account of British military administration as the nature of the topic permits."—United Service Gazette.

SECOND EDITION.

MILITARY LAW: its Procedure and Practice. By Major SISSON C. PRATT, R.A., Professor of Military History at the Royal Military Academy. Small crown 8vo, cloth, 4s 6d.

"The object of the manual under notice is to afford officers and non-commissioned officers some assistance in overcoming the many difficulties which attend the study of the legal part of their profession. It is well calculated to perform that office in all respects, particularly so from the method of arrangement which has been adopted."—Army and Navy Gazette.

SECOND EDITION.

FIELD ARTILLERY: its Equipment, Organisation, and Tactics. By Major SISSON C. PRATT, R.A., Professor of Military History at the Royal Military Academy. With 12 Plates, small crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"Some excellent illustrations and plans serve to elucidate the writer's remarks, and a most successful effort has been made to produce a really useful and fairly exhaustive manual on a subject which, though of the greatest importance, seldom meets with the attention it deserves."—Times.

THE SOUDAN EXPEDITION.

The following is the text of General Graham's order of the day issued on Friday week last:—"The second task of the expedition has now been accomplished, the rebel army that threatened Suakim is dispersed, and its leader, Osman Digna, is a fugitive in the hills, with a price upon his head. This result you, the officers and men of this small army, have brought about by the discipline and steadiness which you have shown in the performance of the several duties assigned to you. The men who cheerfully worked on the wharf all night, who bore the thirst and heat of the march, who quietly endured the dropping fire of the enemy all that night before the battle—those men showed themselves to be the true stuff of which the British soldiers are made. There was only one critical moment when discipline was forgotten, but remember, you men of the 2nd Brigade, how, when you rallied and stood shoulder to shoulder, all danger was over, and the enemy no longer faced you. Remember, also, those brave comrades who stood to the last; who cared more for your honour than their own safety, and who died nobly on that spot where the dead bodies of over 600 enemies showed how dearly they had purchased that temporary success. The thanks of the Army are due to the 1st Brigade for the steadiness with which it received and repulsed the enemy's attack. The Naval Brigade for a brief moment lost their guns, but through no fault of their own. Three of their officers and seven men were killed in trying to defend themselves, and each gun was locked before it fell into the enemy's hands, so that it could not be used against us. The cavalry co-operated well with the infantry as skirmishers and scouts, and at the most critical moment protected the flank of the 2nd Brigade. The Commissariat and Transport Department were indefatigable, and showed the admirable energy of organisation, without which the Army would in this waterless country have suffered terribly. The arrangements made by the Army Medical Department for the comfort and transport of the wounded and sick were all that could be desired. Many instances of self-devotion on the part of the medical officers occurred which will not be forgotten. The Staff, too, have evinced great zeal and capacity, a proof of which is shown in the smoothness with which all in authority have worked together for the general good. The Naval Brigade have shown the same fine qualities of courage and endurance that carried them through the Tokar expedition, and their share in our work will always be remembered with admiration by their comrades in the Army. I have already had the honour to convey the thanks and congratulations of her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen, who never forgets her soldiers, and of his Royal Highness the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief. The country will also thank you for maintaining the honour of the English name, and your General will always be proud to be associated with you."

The casualties of the Naval Brigade were:—

"KILLED.

"Thomas O'Brien, Benjamin Parrick, Richard Nichol, Harry Coward, able seamen, John Strike, torpedo instructor, Euryalus; James M'Lemon, able seaman, Briton; James L. Howarth, leading seaman, Dryad.

A CORRECTION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—If I, a small man of no great stature, require at least six and a half to seven or seven and a half yards for my kilt, how can we reckon the supplying five yards for a kilt to a private soldier anything short of a scandal? Suppose six yards were supplied, two pairs of trews could be made out of this same kilt at the end of the year. The tartan should be supplied from Scotland, and each man supplied with the same by the regimental authorities. This is no reverting, only an extension of the present practice of allowing the hose and sporran to be supplied by these same regimental authorities. A man of 5 ft. 8 in. to 5 ft. 11 in. takes at least 7½ yards for making up his kilt. The extra quantity thus falls on the regimental officers, who, to make the men look decent, have to supply the deficiencies in War Office supplies. How truly ludicrous is such a system! If Wilson of Bannockburn has really supplied shoddy tartan, and not Pimlico, it is, at all events, Governmental goods. Too low a limit must have been allowed to Wilson; moreover, the disgrace of supplying shoddy tartan, whether from Pimlico or Bannockburn, is all one. If the stuff is bad, this must be exposed. No respectable firm would turn out bad tartan unless compelled so to do by Government stinting too much, and allowing too low a limit. To say, we'll take away the bonnet in order to pay for kilting the extra regiments, is too truly ludicrous almost to be true, but truth is stronger than fiction, as we all know. If bad tartan is supplied by Government, and the quantity insufficient, who is to blame? Wilson of Bannockburn, or the authorities? It is, of course, patent to every one that Wilson has not had a fair chance. The Governmental shabbiness in shoddiness is by no means excused by the answer,—Wilson of Bannockburn made the stuff. The present modus operandi is a scandal, and little short of an insult to our gallant regiments.—I am, &c.,

Archibald Campbell.

From Cape Coast Castle we learn, in date Feb. 21, that the English and French Commissioners appointed to settle the boundaries of the English and French territories have finished their labours, though for a time both parties were in considerable jeopardy from the hostilities of the natives. The Commissioners on the English side were Lieut. Pullen and Mr. Firminger. The King of Kinjaboe assumed a very warlike attitude towards the English Commissioners. So serious were matters that the District Commissioner at Axim made several applications to the Governor for a man-of-war to be sent to his assistance. No vessel was sent, and according to the latest accounts affairs were reported to be an unsettled state.

CAVALRY TRAINING.

The following special memorandum has just been issued from the Horse Guards, War Office :—"As a corollary to G. O. 30 of this year, each squadron of cavalry will be annually put through a course of instruction by its own officers. The following instructions will regulate the training, which will take place between March 1 and June 30, and which will include only trained soldiers and first-class recruits. The course will be limited to one month ; only one squadron of each regiment will at a time be under instruction. This course will be generally adhered to ; but where special circumstances, such as the absence of proper training-ground, necessitate a deviation from it, general officers will make such alterations as may appear expedient, taking care that the whole course of instruction is fully utilised. Considerable scope is left to commanding officers in arranging details, to which their careful attention is directed. In making their arrangements, the principle will be followed that each elementary subject must in turn be completely mastered before another is proceeded with. When mastered, it will afterwards be only incidentally adverted to in combination with more advanced subjects. During inclement weather, and where no special accommodation or drill-shed is available, instruction will be given in the barrack-room by means of lectures, explanations, and questions. Every available officer, non-commissioned officer, and man will be present with his squadron, and relieved from all other duties while under instruction. No leave or furlough whatever is to be granted, except in peculiar cases of emergency, to any one belonging to the squadron, when struck off for this duty."

PORT SAID.

A correspondent says, writing by last mail :—"We have been quite gay in Port Said during the last week, and on Monday afternoon Capt. Nicholson and the officers of the Temeraire gave an afternoon dance, and a most enjoyable time was spent by those who were invited. On the afternoon of the 7th inst., the Naval athletic sports were held in the square behind the Dutch House. The weather was everything that could be desired, and most of the residents at Port Said witnessed the events. The most amusing, perhaps, were the donkey race and the Arabs' race. In the latter, all the competitors seemed to consider themselves entitled to a prize. The fine band of the Temeraire played a selection of music during the afternoon. The thanks of the community are due to Capt. Nicholson for the trouble he has taken to provide them enjoyment, and the departure of the Temeraire will be regretted by not a few. On the evening of Friday, Feb. 29, an entertainment was given at the Dutch House, Port Said, by the naval force under the command of Lieut. Reginald Yorke Smith, which was landed from H.M.S. Orontes to garrison Port Said, relieving the 35th (Royal Sussex) Regt., which has since proceeded to Cairo. The tennis court was very prettily and tastefully decorated, under the direction of Sub-Lieut. Ernest Barton, forming an excellent bijou theatre. The string band of the Temeraire, by kind permission of Capt. Nicholson, played a selection of music during the evening. The first part of the programme consisted of a performance by the minstrels of the force, their songs being all well executed and received. These were followed by a hornpipe, danced by two men evidently masters of their art. The entertainment concluded with the farce, "Turn Him Out," and the way in which it was represented evidently gave great satisfaction to the audience. The parts of Nicodemus Noggs and Moke were especially well represented, and reflected the greatest credit on Jno. Nash, chief boatswain's mate, and Jno. Darthey, A.B., who performed them.

THE NAVY ESTIMATES.

Mr. Campbell-Bannerman, on the House going in Committee of Supply on Thursday night, brought fo ward the Navy Estimates. In moving the vote f 56,950 men and boys for the Fleet and Coastgu service, including 12,400 Royal Marines, the Par mentary Secretary of the Admiralty said that he wishe to commence by explaining how the Estimates compare with those of last year. The net amount required to be voted for the service for the year 1884-85 was £10,811,770, a decrease of £87,730 below the total amount which had been voted for the current year. In reference to the personnel of the Navy, he felt sure that the committee would agree with him in warm admiratio of the conduct of the operations in which our sailor and Marines had been recently engaged. Thoug limited perhaps in extent, those operations were in many respects trying and difficult, and he must take the opportunity of expressing his deep regret at the loss sustained by our seamen and marines, and at the death of those four gallant officers—Lieuts. Royds, Montressor, Almack, an Houston-Stewart. The commanders spoke in the highes terms of the conduct of their crews. In order fully t maintain the number, they had increased by 150 the boys to be trained, while the reduction in seamen was in the non-combatant class of domestics, and was in a large degree owing to the suppression of the London at Zanzibar. It was upon the petty officers that the maintenance of the high spirit and sound tone of the Navy depended. They must be men of great steadiness and of quick intelligence, and the Admiralty had carefully considered the memorials which had been presented on their behalf. They had accordingly provided an improved rate of pay for seamen, petty officers, and chief petty officers, based on the principle of giving rewards to men of good characte who kept their rating. Seamen petty officers of the 2n class would have their pay raised from 1s. 11d. to 2s. a day. The 1st-class petty officer would commence at the present rate of 2s. 2d., and after four years' service would receive an increase of 3d. a day. The chief petty officer's initial rate of pay would be increased from 2s. 7d. to 2s. 8d., and after three years he would receive an increment of 6d. a day, which would bring the maximum up to 3s. 2d., instead of 2s. 9d., as at present. It was proposed to establish a new rating of armourer's mate, a class intermediate between the armourer and the armourer's crew, at 2s. 8d. a day. It was further proposed, considering the importance of signalmen, to give them some improvement in pay, but the details had not as yet been absolutely agreed to by the Treasury. Another subject which had engaged the attention of the Admiralty was the sick-berth staff and the nursing staff in Naval hospitals. A committee, under the presidency of Admiral Hoskins, having reported that the present arrangements were unsatisfactory, they would be remedied. As regarded the hospitals, the Committee recommended a test staff of lady nurses. This scheme had, in its general outlines, been approved by the Admiralty, and provision for its adoption would be found in the estimates. Consequent upon representations that had been made as to the position of the warrant officers of the Navy—a most deserving class—the Admiralty, whilst unable to recognise that there was any necessity for a change in the pay, retirement, and widows' pensions, yet had decided to allow a larger number of good-service pensions, to admit their orphans to compassionate allowance, and to raise them to a similar position to that occupied by the warrant officers of the Army. As to the commissioned officers, he could say that they had never better senior officers to command ships or better junior officers to serve under them. With regard to the Admirals' List and promotions to flag rank, a large number of vacancies would occur this year. The Commanders' List was in a better position this year, but the same could not be said of the Lieutenants', which was a most efficient branch of the service—a branch, however, the members of which could not all, or nearly all, be promoted. The present board had done much to improve the position of the lieutenants ; it had increased the chances of promotion, but now it was further proposed to make a substantial increase in their pay. The establishment at the Admiralty of a small but carefully constituted intelligence department had been decided upon. He was glad to be able to inform the Committee that at the end of this financial year they would have built 19,099 tons in all, and out of that 12,558 tons was armoured, and 6,661 unarmoured. The Admiralty had thought it right this year to lay down and make progress with a new ironclad ship to be named the Hero, which would be practically a second Conqueror. The last-named vessel was now complete, and it was considered that they could not make a more useful addition to the Navy they by repeating her. This was the only new armoured ship of which he was able to speak definitely, although it was intended later in the year to lay down a new ironclad at Portsmouth, the details of which were not yet settled. With regard to the protected ships, two were under construction, and it was proposed to lay down three more of the class of the Mersey, which would be admirably suited for service as cruisers, and, if mounted with heavy armour-piercing guns, would also form effective battle-ships. Among the other new vessels proposed to be built was a torpedo cruiser to be named the Scout, with an estimated speed of 16 knots, carrying a light armament of guns, and designed for the employment of the Whitehead torpedo. The Admiralty was about to build of ironclad ships 10,500 tons in the dockyards and 2,114 tons by contract, and of unarmoured ships 5,555 tons in the dockyards and 2,510 tons by contract, giving a total of armoured and unarmoured, in dockyards and by contract, of 20,679 tons.

The petition to be presented by the Hon. Thomas Bruce, M.P., praying that the power whereby courts-martial can sentence to penal servitude for service offences may be abolished, has received close upon 14,000 signatures from Portsmouth and the neighbourhood.

The Admiralty have given directions for the construction of two new despatch boats, the Surprise and Alacrity, in place of Salamis, condemned, and the Lively, wrecked off Stornaway last year.

THE CHANNEL SQUADRON.

Suda Bay, Crete, Sunday, March 9.

We were lying at Terranova the week before last, under the impression that we were to leave at the end of the week for Gibraltar, and resume the original programme of the cruise, when we were suddenly ordered off to Palermo, to await orders. On Tuesday, the 26th, at noon, the Admiral hoisted the blue-peter and fired a gun, and made the signal prepare for sea. We left that evening at 5.30, and made sail to a strong, fair wind, as soon as we cleared the harbour. We held the wind all next day, and remained under sail alone (with the exception of the Neptune), with studd.-sails set, from 9 in the forenoon till 4 in the afternoon, chasing on our course. The Minotaur and Sultan, as usual, showed best to the front. We remained under sail during the night, and furled at daylight. As the Squadron approached the Bay of Palermo on Thursday morning, in columns of divisions, line ahead, the signal was made to invert the line from van to rear, and soon afterwards to alter course together eight points to starboard, bringing us into columns of divisions line abreast, the first division leading, in which formation, with the columns closed to two cables, we stood in, and came to off the town at 8.30. The next day we received orders for Suda Bay. The Forward left for Malta in the afternoon, to rejoin at Suda. When we left Terranova, Admiral Wilson and several other officers were away on leave at Rome. They were telegraphed to, and all arrived at Palermo by steamer from Naples, and rejoined their ships. We weighed at 5.30 p.m., and stood along the land, to the eastward, passing between the Lipari Islands and Sicily during the night. On Saturday we passed through the Straits of Messina, steaming in single column line ahead, with top-gallant masts housed and yards braced up, against a strong head wind. After clearing the land the wind went down, and we picked up a light, fair breeze, which continued for the next three days. On Monday we had a forenoon's drill, shifting main-topsail-yard and jibboom from plain sail twice; and on Tuesday we had steam tactics. About noon on Tuesday the P. and O. steamer Gwalior, with the outwardbound China mail on board, passed us. She made a signal that she could give us some newspapers, if we would send for them; so we stopped, and the flagship sent a boat, and afterwards semaphored the principal news to the other ships. We arrived here on Wednesday morning, the 5th, at 9 o'clock; the previous night had been a very unpleasant one, dark, drizzling, and blowing rather hard, and we came in and anchored in a steady downpour of rain. We steam up the harbour, and came to in columns of divisions line ahead, the columns two cables apart. Outside the harbour we met the torpedo-boat Childers, on her way to Melbourne, for the Victorian Government. She had put into Suda Bay for coal, having found the sea outside rather heavy; she left, however, next day for Port Said. There is a Turkish Admiral here, flying his flag on board a small ironclad, and the usual salutes were exchanged. The day after we came in a steam-collier arrived, and since then all the ships have completed with coal. Yesterday a signal was made that the Squadron would leave here on Tuesday next, the 11th, for a cruise among the islands, visiting Santorin, Syra, Rhodes, and Marmarice Harbour, returning by the 28th to meet the Tyne, which is due here on the 29th. We are very badly off for mails; we have not received any since we left Terranova, and do not know exactly when we are likely to. The mail here is only once a week; it comes in and leaves on Monday, and takes eight or ten days between this and England. As we have been accustomed lately to a daily mail, only three or four days old, we feel the difference very much. The weather is very unpleasant; ever since our arrival it has been overcast and drizzling. The Forward arrived this forenoon from Malta; she was five days en route, and encountered very heavy weather.

Monday, March 10.

The Alexandra arrived here this forenoon from Cyprus; she is awaiting orders, and expects to go on to Malta.

THE NAVY.

A Parliamentary paper has been issued showing that At the beginning of the year, there were 28 armoured and 122 unarmoured ships in commission. The number of the former class, in commission, complete, in reserve, preparing for the 1st Division, waiting repair, building, and ordered to be built, was 62. Of the latter class, there were altogether 221, making a total of 283 ships. The latest estimates of ships building and completing amount to 16,099 tons, 11,490 for armoured, and 4,609 for unarmoured vessels. The total of tonnage in 1884-85 is 16,055:—Armoured ships, 10,500 tons; unarmoured, [illegible] tons. Of the ironclads, the Anson is to have 1,56[illegible] [illegible] built; the Conqueror, 4,200 tons, is to be completed by April; the Collingwood is to be advanced 421 tons, and the Rodney 1,267. The armed despatch-vessel Mercury and the corvettes Cordelia and Canada are to be finished by the end of the year 1884. The shipbuilding work to be constructed by contract in 1884-85 amounts to 4,624 tons; in the Estimates for 1883-84 the tonnage proposed to be built was 4,252, but the amount now expected is only 3,000 tons. The ironclad Benbow, now building at the Thames Ironworks, is to have 2,114 tons built into her in the course of the coming financial year. The total number of tons proposed to be built in Dockyards and by contract in 1883-84 was 19,424; the total now expected is 19,099. The total proposed to be built in 1884-85 is 20,679 tons, made up as follows:—In Dockards, 16,055 tons; by contract, 4,624 tons. Admiral Sir John Hay called attention to this subject on Thursday evening in the House of Commons, and asked for a select committee to report thereon. Sir Thomas Brassey contended that the Navy was in a very good state, and ready to meet all emergencies.

The Director of Contracts has accepted Messrs. Henry Potter and Co.'s tender for supplying musical instruments to the whole of the British Army for three years.

THE ROYAL MARINES.

On Thursday evening Viscount Lewisham moved for a Select Committee to inquire and report whether the administration of the Royal Marine Forces adequately provides for the due representation of their special interests, and sufficiently secures economy and efficiency of the public service. A committee could, he said, in a short time ascertain whether the present system was a good one or not, and he thought the Marines would be willing to abide by their decision. Rightly or wrongly, dissatisfaction existed through all branches of the Marine force, and the Admiralty should be glad of the opportunity of vindicating their administration, especially as the request for inquiry was not made in a spirit of hostility. The special grievances of which the Marines complained were the hopelessness of advancement of officers of rank, the non-employment of Marines in the Intelligence and Ordnance Departments, the careful exclusion of Marine officers from employment on Committees on Military and Naval subjects, and the fact that there was no proportion of Marine officers on Naval courts-martial. He believed that the Marines were perfectly satisfied while serving under the Army Discipline Act, but when serving under the Naval Discipline Act and the Admiralty Instructions the whole system of discipline was entirely changed. The responsibility of officers became nominal, they had no power to punish their own men, and they themselves might be tried by captains and commanders of ships without any one of their body sitting on the court-martial. It was extremely prejudicial to the service and humiliating to the officers and demoralising to the men. He referred at length to the case of the Gilsland, and said he was informed that "the men went on board cheerfully, and agreed among themselves that there should be no grumbling." The cheerful way in which officers and men had taken the indignity was beyond all praise. Although promises had been made last year, nothing had so far been done for the Marines. Com. Price seconded the motion, complaining of the manner in which the Marines recently sent out from England had been treated, and advocating Marine officers being allowed to sit on Naval courts-martial. Lord Henry Lennox was quite sure that the Admiralty intended no slight upon the Marines by placing them on board the Gilsland, but provided the best accommodation in their power. He thought the Government ought not to refuse to appoint a Committee. If the Marine force was in a satisfactory condition, that fact would appear more clearly after inquiry. If it was not, the Committee would render an important service. Mr. Puleston and Mr. Gorst having likewise spoken in support of the motion, Mr. W. H. Smith said it seemed to him wise that an inquiry should be made by a Royal Commission, which should consider the very important questions raised by the motion which referred to the professional training and technical instruction of officers in the Royal Marine Artillery and Royal Marine Light Infantry. Such an appointment would enable the Government in selecting the members to go beyond the House of Commons, and obtain an inquiry and a report which no ordinary committee of the House could possess. Mr. Campbell-Bannerman expressed his satisfaction at the tone of the debate. He deprecated any attempt to set up the Marines as a separate corps from the Navy, and he did not see any need for inquiry. There could be no doubt about the Marines' position when away from their ship and acting with the Army; but there were cases in which they were placed in a somewhat anomalous position. They might be acting with an army, and yet being on a ship's books might still be liable to be recalled to their ship; and it was not desirable that they should be under the Army Discipline Act one day, and subject to that of the Navy the next. With a view of remedying this defect, it was intended to give the senior officer commanding a detachment power to administer punishment to those under his command. He could not believe that this complaint about the Gilsland came from the officers of the Marines engaged in the expedition, and those who made such a complaint on the part of the Marines were doing the corps a very sorry service, and he could not help regretting that it was made so much of. He believed that no Board of Admiralty had done so much for the Marines for many years as the present, which had increased the pay of the men to the extent of £24,000 a year, and had equalised and improved the promotion of officers, and introduced other smaller reforms. If any discontent existed, they would only be too happy to remove it, but to appoint a committee on the whole of the subjects mentioned in the motion could not conduce to the public service. Sir J. Eardley-Wilmot was disappointed at the speech of the hon. gentleman, yet he was glad that he had announced the willingness of the Government to go so far as he had stated. While great compliments were paid to the Marines, yet, so far as their grievances were concerned, very little was done for them. There might be some difficulty in putting officers of the Marine forces on the Admiralty Board, but whenever the good things were given away they never found their way to the Marines. He did not say that it was the fault of any Board of Admiralty, but there was something wrong about the system by which this gallant corps was always left in the lurch. The House divided,—For Viscount Lewisham's motion, 36; against, 63; majority, 27. So inquiry is shelved for the time.

The Queen has presented to the military libraries at Aldershot copies of "More Leaves from the Journal of a Life in the Highlands."

EPPS'S COCOA.—GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.—"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.—Made simply with boiling water or milk. THE SCHOOL OF ENGINEERING.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Will you kindly allow me space in your valuable paper to make some criticism on the leader which appeared in your issue of March 1 on the School of Military Engineering at Chatham? First, as a Royal Engineer, allow me to thank you for that article, which I sincerely hope may bear much good fruit, not only among us, but in the rest of the Army. English Military Engineers have never looked upon themselves as a fourth arm, the idea never took root in England; nothing they would like better than to be allowed to have their place in military operations, which you so well describe as that of directing, but not in executing, the engineering operations of an army. The only campaigns in which I have had the privilege of serving and drawing experience, were the two successive campaigns in Afghanistan, in which the energies of the Royal Engineers were most severely taxed, not only in directing, but also in the execution, of every detail of the military engineering carried out in those campaigns. Demands for working-parties were strenuously opposed by regimental officers, and were rarely acceded to, and only then when coolie labour could not be got. The result was that coolie labour, demanding incessant personal supervision, was resorted to, and the sapper companies were at work 300 days out of the year, while the remainder of the troops had as many days' complete rest. Royal Engineer officers worked unceasingly every single day, Sundays included, as the work had to be done, and the avaricious coolie did not recognise that day as one of rest. Every one in that campaign will own to the untiring energy with which Royal Engineer officers worked at their often thankless and apparently unglorious work, which indirectly was so beneficial to the course of the campaign in facilitating the march and supply of the troops. The mere fact that only one company of Engineers is told off to a brigade or division shows that their work is one of direction, and of only executing any skilled labour required, yet in Afghanistan the company of sappers (containing 90 to 100 men) I belonged to, on arrival at camp, had often to prepare the watering-places for the various arms, and nearly always, when marching in a new part of the country, after a long, weary, and trying march, had to go on and get ready the road, sometimes three or four miles ahead, to facilitate the next day's march, furnishing their own covering party, and finally, they had at night to take their share of the outpost duty. The above is quoted merely as an example to show how we are forced to do more than our duty of mere direction. With regard to the School of Military Engineering, as concerns the instruction of the Army generally, it is hardly the fault of the authorities there if the Army instruction at the school is, as you consider it to be, of a desultory, undecided nature. Every effort is honestly made to make it otherwise. When the School of Military Engineering was organised, the main or even only object in view was the military and technical education and instruction of the Royal Engineer officers and men; the addition of Army instruction was an after-thought, being added on to existing arrangements, and not included in the original scheme. Consequently, the efforts of the instructional staff are greatly taxed by the addition of Cavalry, Line, and Pioneer classes to the corps instruction, especially as this staff is barely sufficient for the instruction of the Royal Engineer officers and men alone; while financial considerations have apparently prevented any addition to be made to it, as also the fact that the Corps of Royal Engineers have a fixed establishment, while the work for it is yearly increasing, producing a scarcity of Royal Engineer officers. With regard to our former wish to monopolise Army signalling, which has called on us your displeasure, probably if it had not been for us Army signalling would not have held the place it now does, and being introduced by us at a time when regimental, corps, and departmental jealousies ran far higher than they now do, it was only natural to cling to it. To show the change of feeling and the higher spirit that now exists in the experiments on entrenching tools for the Army, the Royal Engineers had a pattern spade which they advocated, but when the Wallace spade—now adopted—was brought forward, they at once advocated it, although it was, in principle, in direct opposition to the Inspector-General of the Forces memo. issued on the subject,—that the entrenching tool was not to be a combined one, no successful combination having been invented until the Wallace spade appeared. Royal Engineers quite realise their place, and are ready to take it if the Generals in command will only give it them. As you say, there is nothing mysterious or inherently difficult in the engineering works required in the field; but simple as the theory of engineering works is, yet they are full of minutiæ which requires the direction of an engineer who has made a study of them; but we are compelled besides directing them to personally execute them. That is where the flaw is. The fault does not lie so much with us as with those who employ us; our time is so often taken up with execution, but we fail in time for direction. With regard to your scheme of making the School of Musketry Engineering an Army school, instead of mainly a Royal Engineer school, as it is at present, much may be said in its favour; but to make it a school for teaching trades to soldiers of the Line is hardly practicable. To learn a trade men must make various articles, and the expense would be too great to allow men to erect buildings or make various things not wanted, which would have to be done to give them the necessary work, unless an arsenal for the manufacture of barrack-furniture for the United Kingdom was started at Chatham, which idea would hardly be accepted. Perhaps the true line of reform in the Corps of Royal Engineers is to organise them in technical bodies, such as siege or garrison engineers, railway engineers, telegraph and torpedo engineers, and so on. In ordinary life, a civil engineer makes a profession of one subject; we make a profession of all, becoming Jacks-of-all-trades, though, let us hope, master of one of them, at least. Military buildings (exclusive of forts) could be built and maintained by civil contract, as our public buildings are, at probably the same, if not at less, cost; and the siege or garrison engineers for fortification work should have an intimate connection with the siege artillery, doing away with the necessity of a universal knowledge of the art of permanent engineering, our theoretical raison d'être in the present organisation of the corps, and thus allowing it to openly remain in the hands of a few, as it at present does, instead of pretending that all of us have a complete knowledge of the subject which in our varied work it is impossible to have.—I am, &c., R. E.

THE PEPYS MEMORIAL.

It takes a long time for the country to discover the work of its public servants. Indeed, so long ago is it, some 230 years, since Samuel Pepys was born, and 180 since he died, that at the present day few Naval officers remembered him except as the writer of an amusing "Diary," until they this week were informed by the daily papers that a memorial had been erected in the ancient church of St. Olave's, near the Tower of London, to the memory of "the Clerk of the Acts and Secretary to the Admiralty." There was a large company present on March 18 to do honour to the memory of Samuel Pepys. These represented the various Corporations or City Guilds to which Pepys belonged 200 years ago. After prayers had been read, the Hon. J. Russell Lowell, the American Minister, made an excellent speech, as is his wont, and said he should have been glad if the First Lord had been present, for he should then have had the opportunity of expressing publicly the high appreciation of the American Government and people at the graceful act lately performed by the British Government in the gift of the ship Alert. The contemporary account which Lord Northbrook sent him said:—"Pepys was, without exception, the greatest and most useful Minister that ever filled the same situations in England, the acts and registers of the Admiralty proving this beyond contradiction. The principal rules and establishments in present use in these offices are well known to have been of his introducing, and most of the officers serving therein since the Restoration of his bringing-up. He was a most studious promoter and strenuous asserter of order and discipline. Sobriety, diligence, capacity, loyalty, and subjection to command were essentials required in all whom he advanced. Where any of these were found wanting, no interest or authority was capable of moving him in favour of the highest pretender. Discharging his duty to his Prince and country with a religious application and perfect integrity, he feared no one, courted no one, and neglected his own fortune." Mr. Lowell thought Pepys what was now called a "Philistine." No word in English was equivalent to the French word bourgeois; but, at all events, Samuel Pepys was the most perfect type that ever existed of the class of people whom this word described. He had all its merits, as well as many of its defects. With all those defects, however—into which it was there unnecessary to go—Pepys had written one of the most delightful books that it was man's privilege to read, in the English language or in any other. Sir Richard Collinson unveiled the memorial, which is very handsome. It bears simply the inscription, under the bust, "Samuel Pepys; born Feb. 25, 1652, died May 16, 1703."

Lord Claud Hamilton has laid the case of the Naval Reserve men, who are agitating for more liberal arrangements as to the age at which pensions are granted, before the Lords of the Admiralty. It is not expected, however, that any concession will be made.

A military tournament on a grand scale will be held in Dublin in May next, in aid of the Irish military charities, modelled on those which have been so very successful in London.

Rowland's Macassar Oil is universally in high repute for its unprecedented success during the last eighty years, in promoting the growth, restoring, improving, and beautifying the human hair. It may now also be had in a golden colour, and is especially suited for fair-haired children. Ask anywhere for Rowland's Macassar Oil, and avoid spurious imitations. THE week opened with gloom, although some journals were disposed to take a light-hearted view of the news from the Soudan. Our policy hangs upon the telegraph wire. With astounding pertinacity, the Times renewed the cry for the despatch of a small cavalry force on the Berber road, whatever our contemporary may have meant by that. There is no road to Berber. There is a desert between the Red Sea and the Nile, with certain wells, the position of which, of course, determines the route of the caravans. But how a small cavalry force could give moral or material reinforcement to Gordon at Khartoum by its presence at Berber, we cannot for the life of us understand, supposing a few hundred horsemen could make their way at the end of March or beginning of April, in execution of the mandate of our great contemporary. When General Gordon first went to Khartoum, in the time of Ismail Pasha, one of his staff wrote some interesting letters which were published in the Times, in one of which there was a very clear account of the difficulties to be met with in a journey from Suakim to Berber, when the weather was cooler; but now is the time when the Nile is almost at its lowest, and it would be quite impossible for any force to make its way from Berber up against the stream, and past the Upper Cataracts by boat. There is a route from Khartoum striking directly across the Desert from Hadjia above the Sixth Cataract, crossing to the Nile near Karnek. The river from that place makes an extraordinary sweep at right angles to its course, and turning northwards from the Fourth Cataract strikes eastward to Abbou-Hamed, whence it pursues its southerly course by the Fifth Cataract towards Shendy. Gordon's ride from Korosko to Berber was a matter of small moment, and of easy execution. The march from Suakim by Ras-el-Wady and Kokram would be a very different matter. The real difficulties would begin when the Nile was reached. It would be insanity to send a small force, and to despatch a large force at this time of the year would be impossible. We inserted a paragraph last week, on information supplied by good authority, that the Government had issued orders for the hydrographical survey of the Nile, by Captain Molyneux and other officers, with a view to the despatch, it was presumed, of a flotilla. We do not assert that such orders could not have been given, but with the information at the disposal, with Lord Alcester at the Admiralty, with Admiral Spratt handy, and dozens of officers who have been along the coast, it would be quite easy for them to obtain information which would, we imagine, conclusively knock the idea of a flotilla, at this time of the year, on the head. It would be practical to send up pinnaces of very light draught of water by rail as far as Assiout, where they might be put on the Nile, and make their way up to the First Cataract at Assouan. What will be done with them there? The smallest of Cook's steamers and the postal boats of the Khedive can scarcely find water after February, in the shifting channels of the Nile. The river rises in July, and there are no enemies up to Assouan. From the First Cataract to Wady-Halfa, on the Second Cataract, the river is pretty deep, but there are in places very dangerous shallows and shoals and barriers of rocks, and the best soundings will be rendered useless by the constant changes which are marked day after day by the local boatmen, who stick palm branches in the sand to mark the new channels. At last, that impossible project has been abandoned. The march to Berber, for which there has been so much clamour, against which we protested from the beginning, has been sent to the limbo of impossibility. Osman Digna's hovels have been burned, by way of increasing the number of friendly Arabs; the woolly-headed rabblement which had gathered among the rocks in the valleys have scrambled away, under pressure of rifles and artillery; and General Graham is by this time back at Suakim. The campaign, according to Admiral Hewett, is at an end. The question of the occupation of the Red Sea ports, which we have promised to guard, is one rather for politicians and diplomatists, than for soldiers and sailors. The latter, indeed, would be the very last to desire to garrison or cruise about in those regions, unless there was a prospect of fighting; but still, there is an extraordinary tenacity in the minds of some of our contemporaries in favour of their beloved project of opening the road from Berber to Suakim, or vice versâ. Now, any one who knows the country and the climate, would, we think, at once declare that the natural and feasible route for troops between Cairo and Berber is by the Nile, for the simple reason that there is water the whole way; that there is food to be had all along the banks; and that there is continuous communication—certainly not always the best in the world, but often, at the worst, better than the Desert route—by the banks of the stream. Because a few ragged natives have been induced by good pay to act as scouts for Major Chermside, whose knowledge of the language and well-known energy have enabled him to do good service, it seems to be thought probable that we shall obtain the services of the tribes generally to cover our communications through the Desert, while Colonel Kitchener and Major Rundell are to work from Berber with the same object. The common point, therefore, of the two schemes will be Berber; and we maintain, that starting from Cairo, with the railway to Assiout, and availing ourselves of the inexhaustible flotilla of the Nile boats and swarming river population, we would make much better and more permanent way to open communication to Khartoum than we should effect under any circumstances by the Desert from Suakim. In fact, if that route were open to-morrow, English troops, or men, could scarcely make use of it. Perhaps there is no great use in retrospect, but as to what might have been done, we reprint a memorandum, of which the authorship is well known, that appeared in our paper on the 1st of last December. Some time before its appearance, a letter in the Times, under a well-known name, recommended the immediate despatch of Indian troops to Suakim and Massowah. We are told that service out of India is unpopular for any length of time, but if the Government were willing to pay, they would find any number of Sikh mercenaries ready to garrison the Red Sea ports to the end of all time, as long as their lives and their money lasted; or, if they were not to be trusted, good material could be found among other races in India, not Hindoo, to do the same work, under similar conditions. To show what an imbroglio we are getting into, we have been shouting out for the creation of a great empire in Equatorial Africa, where the climate is deadly, and the heat intolerable for many months, and for the domination of the Red Sea; and yet we cannot even march twenty-five miles from Suakim, or look forward to holding a single port on the coast in another month, the force of which observation lies in its application of it, that any sort of rule we might establish would be dependent upon foreign mercenaries or on natives, and that, therefore, we should from time to time be liable to the overthrow of all our arrangements by revolts or insurrections, increasing the responsibilities of the taxpayer, and harassing the Army and the Navy by inglorious military operations which are not war.

THE Navy Estimates this year leave much to be desired. The usual excuse for not adding to the strength of the Navy is put forward. It would never do to frighten foreign Governments. The celebrated French programme was decided upon, adopted, and set in operation, without any regard to what England might say or do. Why, then, should the British Government evince such great concern for the susceptibilities of foreigners, who never take any heed as to how or in what manner they hurt our feelings? Admiral Sir John Hay was met by a "No, no!" from Sir Thomas Brassey when making the statement that the ships of the French Navy have the advantage of ours in speed. Sir Thomas Brassey in his work on the Navy, Vol. III., page 49, says:—"The French claim for their ships superior speed, and much greater coal-carrying capacity than we have succeeded in obtaining. It is worthy of consideration how far these assumed advantages have been realised, for if they have been obtained without sacrificing more important considerations, then we ought not to allow our ships to continue inferior in these particulars to those produced by the French constructors." This was written after Sir Thomas Brassey had made a careful comparison of the ships of the two Navies, class for class. In Vol. II., we find this comparison. "The second-class cruisers of the French Navy have a conspicuous advantage, both in speed and in coal-endurance, over the English ships." Again:—"When the compiler passed through the China Seas in the Sunbeam, the French had a corvette on the station, which, in speed and coal-endurance, far exceeded any vessel in the British Squadron." Speaking of third-class cruisers, Sir Thomas wrote:—"With 770 tons less displacement and 550 less horse-power than the Comus, they have an advantage in speed of two knots." And again:—"Comparing the Chasseur with the Flamingo or the 'Bird' class . . . . . . the Chasseur steams 12·18 knots and the Flamingo 11·55 knots, and that, too, with about 100 horse-power less." Sir Thomas Brassey also says:—"Amid many conflicting opinions, there is, perhaps, only one essential point as to which unanimity prevails in regard to our shipbuilding policy. By universal consent, an advantage in point of numbers is of the last importance for the defence of our wide-spread dependencies." Yet what Sir John Hay complained about was, in that point of numbers and in speed, the French have the advantage over this country, so far as armourclads are concerned. We have in previous articles quoted Sir Thomas Brassey's "conclusions" when not in office as to the speed of French armourclads. The Parliamentary Secretary of the Admiralty made a great show with the material he had to deal with. The policy of construction pursued by the Admiralty remains unaltered. The programme contains few new vessels to be built, and the repairs have been sadly neglected. Of Mr. Campbell-Bannerman's sanguine views of promotion in the Navy, and the general aspect of the Navy List, we will only say at present that we do not share them; but we are glad to hear that the Naval Intelligence Department is at last established and working. The petty officers have at last had their case considered. The Admiralty regard them in light of the "backbone of the Navy." To reward these deserving men, their Lordships have generously granted them an increase of pay of from one penny to sixpence a day, according to class. No one will grudge the continuous-service chief petty officer his hard-earned three-and-twopence a day, nor the Warrant officer his increased number of good-service pensions and compassionate allowance for children, nor the Lieutenant his increase of pay of two shillings a day, after having served ten years in that rank. Mr. Bannerman was forced to admit that insubordination was rapidly increasing among the young seamen of the Fleet, and, we may add, that we think it will continue to increase so long as the Admiralty pander to the agitation in favour of curtailing the powers of courts-martial. What is really wanted is to make punishments equal and certain as far as possible. Were the Queen's Regulations and Admiralty Instructions made as binding on the Admiral as on the seaman, were a man's duties certain and fixed, and his privileges assured to him, the great cause of discontent would be removed, and the Navy would be far more popular than it is. But where everything affecting the comfort and happiness of both officers and men is left to the caprice of the officer in command, everything depends upon that one man's temperament and tact, and he as often fails as succeeds in governing those under him with even-handed justice and impartiality.

THE Memorandum just issued on Cavalry Field Training (a corollary of General Order 30, of this year), provides that each squadron is to be put through a four weeks' course, of which a synopsis is appended, and that during that time officers and men are to be struck off all duties. Only one squadron of each regiment will be under instruction at a time, that each elementary subject must be completely mastered before another is proceeded with, that men in hospital, prison, &c., who are unable to attend with their "companies" (?), will, as soon as available, join, "mounted on their own horses," the next squadron struck off for training, and that a return will be forwarded to the General Officer Commanding on the completion of the training of each "company." Reduced as our Cavalry regiments now are, in officers, men, and horses, it would be impossible to strike off two squadrons at one time to practise defending posts, banks, ditches, &c., camping, cooking, bivouacking, with a few tents and "military precautions." From October 15 to March 14, duties are almost doubled by absence on leave. For three and a half months more, one-fourth of the regiment is struck off all duties. From October to March, in our climate, the weather seldom permits regimental field-days, and the regulations prohibit them. In future, from March 1 to the end of June, a commanding officer can only exercise three troops,—for more he could seldom put in the field. Meanwhile, his officers are under disadvantages as regards the leading of their troops and squadrons. And when, in July or August, a commanding officer is handed over to the mercies of a brigadier, he will find himself unassisted by his leaders, and subjected to censure; but we admit that field training is most desirable, and that we must submit to some disadvantages to secure it.

Captain Rising has now been on half-pay for over three years. As he only completed a year's service when in command of the Eclipse, he still requires five years full-pay to qualify him for promotion to the Active List of Flag Officers. We think it would be a graceful act to give him another ship.

The Admiralty appear to think that as long as a vessel holds together, it is advisable to recommission her, to save expense, and so keep down the Navy Estimates. Accordingly, vessels are recommissioned on distant stations, where there is no opportunity of giving them a thorough overhaul, they are kept away from England for years, and have therefore no opportunity of being fitted with the latest improvements in torpedo warfare, the electric light, machine-guns, &c. The Briton, Carysfort, and Ranger are examples. The officers and crew of the Tourmaline, in the West Indies, and the Kingfisher, in the Pacific, both nearly four years in commission, can scarcely be expected to regard with complacency the fact of vessels like the Briton and Ranger—which have only this month completed three years in commission—being paid off, before their reliefs are even named. In the long-run, the system will prove more expensive for the country.

Vice-Admiral Sir William Dowell was at Hong Kong on March 21.

The Admiralty a couple of years back modified the inquisitorial annual report. But Captains, after they have paid off their ships, proceed to Whitehall, and in a back room, in the presence of a Naval Lord and his Secretary, make or mar the future of those who have been serving under them. If an officer has committed any offence or is an undesirable person, he should be informed of it, so that he may know exactly how he stands. The publication of the volumes of confidential reports now at the Admiralty would be of deep interest to the service, and would occasion some startling surprises.

Lord Henry Lennox, M.P., has given notice that on April 22 he will call attention to the case of Lieutenant Conway-Gordon, R.M.A., and at the same time move for a Select Committee to investigate all the circumstances under which so serious a wrong has been inflicted on this young officer.

The vacant good-service pension has been bestowed on Captain P. H. Colomb, R.N. There is probably no officer on the Active List who has done so much for the service, and has received so little reward. It is no exaggeration to say that the system of flashing signals, of which he was the inventor, has effected a revolution in the Navy, while his improved method of lighting ships has proved both economical and highly successful. As a reward for his flashing signals he only received £500, which, we believe, did not cover the expenses, and his promotion was deferred sufficiently long to render it impossible that he can ever reach the Rear-Admirals' List. By his compulsory retirement the service will lose an officer of great merit.

The Admiralty have determined to enter this year an additional 150 boys, but, so popular is the Naval service at the present moment among parents and guardians, that it is no exaggeration to say that their Lordships could easily increase the entries by ten times that number, did they desire to do so, and even then be able to select only lads of good parentage and physique. Day after day the recruiting depôt in Hemmings Row is besieged by a whole army of martyrs, crying their eyes out because they have been rejected. Many of these are the sons or wards of professional men. It would appear as if parents and guardians regarded the Navy as a useful institution into which to pass their sons or wards, and thus get them off their hands, and save further outlay on their behalf, at an early age. Boys will often do anything to get away from school, and adopt with a light heart a profession which, when older, they would give all they possess never to have heard of. The lower deck is hardly the place for the sons of country clergymen, doctors, and lawyers, and the recruiting officer does well to throw every obstacle in the way of such lads entering the Navy, as he has the command of a supply far exceeding the demand, and can afford to pick and choose his recruits.

We are given to understand that the name of Lieutenant F. White, R.M.L.I., has been brought to the special notice of the Admiralty for conspicuous gallantry during the recent operations in the Soudan. Lieutenant White served during the Egyptian Campaign of 1882, and was present during the bombardment of Alexandria.

Whoever inspired Mr. Alderman Cotton to ask the Secretary of the Admiralty, on the 20th inst., "whether many of the Assistant-Paymasters in the Navy had not been upwards of 14 years in the service," and whether it was the intention of their Lordships to alter the regulations, in order to relieve the block which at present exists to promotion, did not take the trouble to frame the question in accordance with facts, as it is patent to all that the Assistant-Paymasters of the standing of 1868 have been some 20 years in the Navy, instead of 14; and though it was no part of the business of Mr. Campbell-Bannerman to set Alderman Cotton right, we consider that, in his reply, he should have been candid enough to say that the Alderman understated the case. We happen to be aware that if every Paymaster who reaches the age for optional retirement (55) up to December 31, 1889, avails himself of the clause allowing him to then leave the service, the total of 41 will be reached. As the junior Assistant-Paymaster of the year 1871 is No. 56 on the List, he cannot under any circumstances anticipate promotion before December 31, 1889 (allowing a good average of deaths of Paymasters), when he will have been some 22 years in the Navy, and will have arrived at the mature age of 39. It is thus plainly shown that it is only by a stretch of Admiralty imagination that the stagnation in the promotion of Assistant-Paymasters can be considered as "purely temporary," as the period served by these officers prior to promotion will tend to increase until the year 1890, at least. Under these circumstances, we would suggest to every Assistant-Paymaster in the Navy to use the legitimate channels of the service to place before their Lordships a straightforward statement of his hard case, as it is manifestly impossible for an officer promoted at the age of 39 to put in the 11 years' senior service necessary to enable him to count all "junior service," until upon the eve of retirement; and if compulsory retirement of Paymasters were introduced at 55 years of age, this hardship would assume a more aggravated form the longer a man served in the junior rank. Something must soon be done for these officers, and the sooner the better. We can commend to their notice the fable of the ancients, in which the old man whose cart was in a slough called upon Jupiter to help him, and called vainly, until it was suggested he should put his shoulder to the wheel, upon which he extracted his vehicle, and put on record the moral that "the gods help those who help themselves." We draw the attention of their Lordships, and of the service generally, to the statement placed in the hands of Members of Parliament relative to the Accountant branch of the Navy, as their case is therein moderately and temperately stated; and we trust means may be found, if even of a temporary nature, to make some concession, to compensate the Accountant branch for their long service in the junior rank.

Captain and Brevet Major Tucker, Royal Marine Artillery, mentioned in Major-General Sir G. Graham's despatches of March 2 and 3, for gallantry and efficiency in working the enemy's captured Krupp gun, served throughout the Egyptian Campaign of 1882, being mentioned in despatches for similar conduct in the action of Kassassin Lock (August 28) as that for which he is now again so highly commended by the Major-General commanding the Tokar Expeditionary Force. On the termination of the campaign of 1882, Captain Tucker received his brevet majority and the Medjidie of the 4th Class, in recognition of his distinguished services on that occasion.

The Admiralty have appointed Admiral Sir Lewis Tobias Jones, G.C.B., to be Visitor and Governor of Greenwich Hospital, in succession to the late Admiral Sir Sydney Colpoys Dacres. Admiral Sir Lewis Jones entered the Navy in 1808. When Midshipman of the Granicus, he was wounded at Algiers (medal and clasp for Algiers). He commanded the Princess Charlotte at St. Jean d'Acre in 1840 (Syrian medal). In 1849, he commanded the boats at the destruction of the slave barracoons at the Gallinas, under Sir Charles Hotham. When Captain of the Samson, he commanded the forces at the capture of Lagos, which, from being a large depôt for slaves, became a free settlement under the British flag; was honourably mentioned in despatches in 1851; commanded steam squadron at the bombardment of Odessa, for which he was gazetted, assisted at the destruction of Redoubt Kaleh on the coast of Circassia, and bombardment of Fort Constantine, Sebastopol, 1854; the Samson having been dismasted and otherwise damaged in the hurricane on November 14, 1854, he was appointed Captain of the London, commanded her during the blockade of Sebastopol, 1854-55, and assisted at the capture of Kinburn (Crimean and Turkish medals, Sebastopol clasp); was second-in-command in China, and assisted in the operations which led to the occupation of Pekin in 1860 (China medal); was senior officer in command at Queenstown, April, 1862, to April, 1865; K.C.B., 1861; Officer of the Legion of Honour; 3rd Class Medjidie; G.C.B., G.S.P.

The second series of Danish armour-plate trials commenced last week on the Island of Amager, near Copenhagen. There were four plates, one of solid steel, from the Creuzot Works, one of iron from the works of Marrel Frères; two compound plates, one made by Cammell and Co., and one by John Brown and Co. These plates were each 9 in. thick, and were about 6 ft. 6 in. long by 5 ft. wide. They were attached to the backing of 9 in. of wood, with skin plates and frames, by bolts. The guns used were 6-in. and 10-in., firing steel projectiles. The shot from the 6-in. gun appeared to have much the same effect upon each of the competing plates. The shot from the 10-in. gun knocked the left-half of the Creuzot steel-plate completely away, and laid open the target. The shot from this larger gun pierced the other competing plates, but it is said that they were broken up by the English compound armour plates, which were not otherwise seriously damaged. It appeared as if the energy of the 10-in. gun was too great for any plate having a thickness of only 9 in.

The Admiralty have issued a new Circular regulating the smoking hours of officers and men on board ship. The new rules to be observed differ but little with those in force for the last thirty years. Officers are now granted the privilege of smoking for 55 minutes after their breakfast, and until 11 p.m. in harbour and 9.20 p.m. at sea. Smoking during the night watches is to be permitted by the Captain, "if he sees fit," for a short period, not exceeding one hour. But what is to prevent one Captain "seeing fit" and another not "seeing fit," under exactly similar circumstances? The men allowed to smoke will be contented. Those not allowed the privilege will be discontented; and will argue, that, because Captain Brown allows his men to smoke, Captain Jones should do so likewise. But Captain Jones will answer that he "does not see fit" to allow the indulgence. Then, again, officers on shore, in uniform, are prohibited from smoking in the public streets; but who has not seen officers in the Army, in uniform, smoking when returning from duty, and whole battalions marching at ease, doing the same in the streets of the metropolis itself? Surely it is time that the question of the cigarette or cigar should be disposed of once and for all. Were foreign officers prevented from smoking when in uniform they would never smoke at all, as they are always in uniform, and no one will venture to say, we suppose, that the German officers are any the worse for smoking in uniform in the public streets. The Admiralty are only driving officers into plain clothes by making uniform irksome.

Naval and Military officers who have had the benefit of the ministrations of the Rev. S. A. Bullen, M.A., while Vicar of St. James's, Devonport, for the last seventeen years, will be glad to learn that a testimonial is about to be presented to him on his leaving Devonport for Dawlish, and that they can assist by subscribing to the fund of which Dr. Archer, R.N., residing at 2 Donegal Terrace, Stoke, is the treasurer.

In the Pall Mall Gazette of the 26th, there is an interesting account of a visit to the Small-Arms Factory at Enfield, from which it would seem that every possible care is taken to provide the infantry with effective bayonets, but it looks as if the manufacture of swords for the cavalry was not carried on at Enfield. At the last Paris Exhibition the jurors from Germany stated positively that the bulk, if not all the sabres used in the English Army were made at Solingen, and that they had been turned out there for many years past. It is satisfactory to know that the attention of the Government has been directed to the matter, and that specimens of the weapons of which the quality, according to the account of correspondents, is by no means satisfactory, are to be forwarded for inspection from Egypt to this country.

Mr. Dawnay will, on going into Committee of Supply on Army Estimates, Vote 4, call attention to the report of the Committee of Inquiry into the Army Hospital services, and the recommendations there made for the future organisation of those services; and move,—"That in the opinion of this House, the present method of appointing Medical officers in the Army, according to the Unification System, has not contributed either to the efficiency or economy of the service, and that such efficiency and economy would be better secured by a return to a modified form of the regimental system."

A recent French work, entitled "John Bull and His Island," by Max O'Rell, gives a much fairer account of the manners and customs of the English than is usually accorded by French writers. It is with regret, but not with surprise, that we see the status of the British soldier adverted to in the following terms:—"The love of John Bull for his soldiers is somewhat curious. He gives them ovations, showers decorations on their heads when they return home after rounding off his estate; but if he goes to a public place of entertainment and meets a soldier there, away he hurries, exclaiming, 'This place is not respectable, soldiers are admitted.' In the singular, the warrior loses all his prestige. So he who admires hair in the mass on the head of a lovely woman, would make a wry face if he happened upon one hair in his soup, even though it had strayed from the tresses of his beloved." We hope the custom of the times will change with regard to the social light in which our soldiers are viewed as individuals, and that when Mons. O'Rell again writes, he may be able to give a more satisfactory account.

Mons. Max O'Rell smiles at our 400,000 Volunteers; speaks of them as "very inoffensive," "pretty sure to end their existence in their beds," and that life insurance companies, who charge extra upon soldiers and sailors, proclaim that "Volunteers pay the ordinary premium." However this may be, it is satisfactory to us to know that the Volunteers have arrived at a marvellous state of efficiency, and that the fact of their existence has on more than one occasion been a check upon the carrying-out of certain subtle intentions on the part of our neighbours.

The revision of the prize-list of the National Rifle Association for the forthcoming Wimbledon Meeting, strikes us as being in all cases most judicious. The £1,000 additional prizes will certainly be a great feature in the Meeting of 1884. The "abolition" of the Snider is, all things considered, a move in the right direction, though it will no doubt be disappointing to many to find that their chances of winning prizes are now reduced. Still, the Martini-Henry is the recognised service arm. Intending competitors are given every facility for practising with the improved weapon, and, ultimately, the Volunteers will have it issued to them. There is much, therefore, to be said in favour of the decision which the Council of the Association have arrived at to discontinue all Snider competitions. The changes in the programme may be summarised as follows:—The members of the Association will have a new series of prizes open to them, value £200, and another £150 is to be added to the Queen's Prize in 75 awards of £2 each. The "Glen Albyn" and "Windmill" are to be thrown together, and another £100 added, for a series at 200 and 500 yards, instead of single-range series, the entrance fee being doubled; while all the "bi-diurnals" will have their lists augmented. As the "Snider Aggregate" Series will now become a thing of the past, its place will be taken by a "Volunteer Aggregate" for those series open only to efficient Volunteers, and which includes the "Queen's," "St. George's," and "Martin's Cup." Besides this, instead of a "Martini-Henry Aggregate," there will be an "All-Comers' Aggregate" for those series not included in the "Volunteer," and the grand aggregate, including them all, for the Dominion of Canada Trophy. These changes ought to give general satisfaction, and if this year's meeting is not more largely attended and generally more successful than previous meetings have been, it will certainly not be due to any fault on the part of the Association itself, which has shown a praiseworthy desire to do all in its power to encourage the use of the rifle, and foster a martial spirit.

The secret of the proposed withdrawal of the ostrich feather bonnet from the Highland Regiments is now out. Lord Hartington states it was to counterbalance the increased cost incurred by placing four regiments in kilts, in accordance with the Territorial scheme. Such paltry economy is unworthy the War Office of a great country.

The Government, which has to submit to interrogatories in Parliament every sitting about Egyptian affairs, would be more puzzled than ever if it were to take counsel from the Press. Some of the organs have gone clean demented. The leading journal, having set its mind on the march (in March) of a column from Souakim to Berber across the Desert, is quite ready, apparently, to order a correspondent to perish with the last man of the expedition, who would probably die on the fourth day out. "If," says the Pall Mall on Wednesday, "we can send the two squadrons of Cavalry through to Berber General Gordon asked for, it ought to be done." But our contemporary "gives up the relief of Khartoum by an army at present." How, then, could two squadrons at Berber save Khartoum? "We cannot get the garrisons out just now, that is obvious. What, then, ought to be done?" We rub our eyes as we read the answer:—"What we have now to do is to give General Gordon carte blanche to establish his own authority at Khartoum, and to stop there. If he wants money, he ought to have it." Certainly. But how is he to get it? By balloon? Our contemporary talks of "fellah soldiers who want to return to the Delta" and "the arsenals" (!), "fortresses" (!), and steamboats, which are to found a civilised, independent State on the wreck of the Soudan,—making Khartoum a base for operations on the Congo!!! Gordon is, willy-nilly, to become Sovereign, Khartoum the capital, of the new Empire!

The following particulars of the physical requirements for recruits for the British Army in 1727, taken from an authentic document, present a striking contrast with the present diminutive standards:—"Men not under 5 ft. 10 in., in stockings, is a sufficient size for the Horse and Dragoons, and they must be chosen men, with good countenances, good limbs, and broad shoulders. The size of the men for the Foot Guards to be 5 ft. 9 in., and for the Marching Regiments 5 ft. 8 in." In 1727, we were at war with Spain; our army was very much larger in proportion to the population than it is now; and, if we may rely on statistics and estimates from various sources, the average size and strength of the people were less than they are today. Yet there appears to have been little difficulty in obtaining then ample supplies of such men as our military administrators now sigh for in vain. But the difference is easily accounted for. In 1727 the Army had not been reorganised and made popular and attractive.

A correspondent writes:—"I was pleased, as well as surprised at seeing two soldiers in uniform in the dress circle at the Princess's Theatre last week. One of them was a trooper in the Blues, and the other a trumpeter in the 3rd Hussars. Several of the leading papers have lately deprecated the unpatriotic and inexcusable custom of excluding men from places of public entertainment and amusement, solely because they wear that uniform by which they should be elevated in social consideration, and not degraded. The incident I have mentioned above, and many others, show that more reasonable opinions are being disseminated, and that better taste prevails. We may fairly hope that for every soldier and sailor who conducts himself in a manner worthy of his honourable profession, her Majesty's uniform will soon be generally recognised as a passport, instead of being stigmatised as a reproach. On my return from the theatre, I saw a staff serjeant of some infantry battalion (there are no regular infantry regiments now, except the Guards). A neat and tasteful badge on his forage-cap conveyed no information; and the legend on his shoulder-strap was a hopeless puzzle, as I had not a powerful magnifying glass, and was not near an electric light. But if I had been able to read the title, it would not have told me anything I wanted to know. As I find others do in such cases, I asked the serjeant what he belonged to, and he, as a matter of course, told me the number by which his 'line battalion' is unofficially called. He said he believed that the army were looking forward to the restoration of their old numbers, and that he knew the territorial titles of four regiments only, including his own!"

A regimental court-martial was recently held at Plymouth, the officers sitting thereon being three Majors of the Royal Marines, whose united length of service was 72 years. The junior Major had 24 years, and 10 months' service. The senior Major, and president of the court, had 23 years and nine months' service, and the "middle" Major had 23 years and two months' service, both the two seniors being junior in the service to the junior, who came to hold that enviable position through having been reduced, as a reward for efficient recruiting service, which duty, having taken him to the North of England, prevented his passing in tactics. Since this officer has qualified, the Admiralty have restored him his rank, but not his seniority. Thus are zealous officers rewarded!

It is gratifying to observe that the strictures we passed recently on the culpable remissness of Militia officers in availing themselves of the voluntary examinations in tactics have apparently had some effect, nineteen having passed last January, as compared with a solitary individual in the previous July. Let us be thankful for even this small beginning, and hope that, in spite of much discouragement, Militia officers may increasingly avail themselves of these and other means of adding to their professional knowledge. The names of those who have passed are as follows:—Senior Class.—Colonel Walker, 3rd Battalion, Royal Scots Fusiliers; Major Davis, 3rd Battalion, Royal West Surrey Regiment; Captains Rhodes, 3rd Brigade, Cinque Ports Division, R.A.; Ditmas, 2nd Brigade, Northern Division, R.A.; Ewart, 3rd Battalion, Royal Scots Fusiliers; Chaplin, 3rd Battalion, Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders; Pead, 3rd Brigade, Eastern Division, R.A.; Reade, 3rd Battalion, Welsh Regiment; Gretton, 3rd Battalion, Royal Warwickshire Regiment; Panzera, 2nd Brigade, North Irish Division, R.A.; Chanter, 3rd Brigade, Western Division, R.A. Junior Class.—Captains Trafford, 3rd Battalion, West Yorkshire Regiment; Rendall, 3rd Battalion, Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry; Outhwaite, 3rd Battalion, Highland Light Infantry; Lieutenants Powney, 3rd Battalion, Hampshire Regiment; Walters, 4th Battalion, Yorkshire Regiment; Napier and Eaton, 3rd Battalion, Cheshire Regiment; and Ripley, 3rd Battalion, Norfolk Regiment.

A serious accusation brought by several French papers against General Campenon has met with a satisfactory refutation. The War Minister was accused of having given orders to some German manufacturers for 10,000,000 francs' worth of iron piping, for various military establishments. It appears that only one contract for piping was passed, and this for 800 francs, with a firm the directors of which are French. The mention of 10,000,000 francs reminds us that General Campenon has just signed contracts for the clothing of the French Army by which that amount will be saved yearly. Several large firms, such as that of the Godillots, who have supplied the army for many years, sent in no tenders. The contracts have been taken up by new men at reduced prices, and it must be added that in military quarters this change is viewed with some apprehension.

NOTES FROM ALDERSHOT.

[FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.]

The annual course of musketry commenced here on Monday last. The preliminary instruction of non-commissioned officers will be concluded this week.

The Spring drills of all arms have also been steadily practised during the week, under the superintendence of commanding officers.

In accordance with instructions contained in the Syllabus of Military Training (Appendix to G.O. 30, of 1884), the whole of the companies of Infantry, which will commence the annual course of military training on Tuesday next were put through a course of field-work instruction during the week, on Church Plateau, North Camp, under directions issued by the Colonel C.R.E.

All young officers of the Division who have not been through the prescribed course of gymnastic instruction have been ordered to attend at the gymnasium for that purpose on the 1st prox.

The Amateur Dramatic Society of the 1st Battalion 21st Royal Scots Fusiliers, give four performances next week in the Royal Engineer Theatre, for the Charitable Fund of the Female Hospital, a most laudable purpose. The pieces selected are "The Ticket-of-Leave Man" and "His Last Legs."

Deputy-Surgeon-General R. Wolseley, M.D., will assume the duties of Sanitary Officer of the Division on the 1st prox.

Deputy Surgeon-General J. J. Thompson has been ordered to Dublin for duty as P.M.O.

The official residence of the General Commanding the Division, recently erected near the North Camp, hitherto known as "Cove Park," has now been designated "Government House."

Edward Head, commissioned boatman, of H.M.'s Coastguard, has been awarded the medal for long service and good conduct.

GORDON'S ORIGINAL IDEA.

In the Army and Navy Gazette of December 1, 1883, was published a paper which it is interesting to reproduce, in connection with the present shiftings about, on March 29, 1884; and we may, at the same time, call to the attention of the Times that they printed a letter from Dr. Russell at a still earlier date, in which he advocated the dispatch of troops and the employment of Indian auxiliaries. The paper was as follows :—

"Memo. upon the present state of affairs in Egypt, consequent upon the defeat of Colonel Hicks' Army :—

"November 25, 1883.

"The line of communication between Khartoum and Suakim no longer exists.

"The soldiers, if they can be so called, and the people of Khartoum would join the Mahdi, should he advance. With Khartoum would fall Sennaar and all the provinces South-east and West, with their garrisons.

"The revenue received from the Soudan would cease, and all expenses would fall upon Egypt Proper.

"No remarks are necessary upon the ill-fated march to Obeid, more than that, in case of defeat, the position of Khartoum should have been secured.

"Should Khartoum fall, there would be no object in defending any position south of Assouan, the more especially as the Nubian and the Bahluda deserts lie between Khartoum and Assouan.

"Assouan being within the limits of Lower Egypt, the objection to employing Sir Evelyn Wood's forces in defensive operations would cease. That force, therefore, should be moved to Assouan for its defence. It could readily be transported to Siout by rail, and thence by steamers.

"The British garrisons in Cairo and Alexandria would preserve order there.

"With regard to offensive operations, the White Nile should be secured to where the Siubat River enters it. This would be the western frontier. A line running north-west from this point to the Abyssinian territory, and then along that frontier until it reaches the Red Sea at Mansourah, would bound it on the south and south-east.

"There are two ways of securing this object. First, for Turkey to take the initiative; second, for England to do so.

"In the event of the latter, 6,000 native infantry, two regiments of native cavalry, and the Aden troops should be landed at Kossier, and move across to Keneh, on the Nile, in the same way as Sir David Baird's force did in 1802. The distance is 120 miles, which could be covered in eight marches. (See 'Annual Register,' 1802, p. 814.)

"The force could be moved to Assouan, whence active offensive operations could commence."

"HIGHLAND HONOURS."

The Highland Society of London entertained Lieut.-Gen. Sir Archibald Alison at dinner on Friday, the 21st inst., at the Freemasons' Tavern. The gallant General is not at all a Highlander, and his ancestors of the Baillie Nicol Jarvie time regarded Highlanders as Ulster Orangemen of to-day look on mere Irish Papists and Fenians; but the Highlands under the ægis of the Queen has come down on Scotland from the north, swept over the Grampians, and carried the poor Lowlands by storm, so that Bruce, and Wallace, and Rabbie Burns, and Walter Scott are all at this moment, in the mind's eye of the world, set down as phillibegged Highlanders. About 150 gentlemen were present to do honour to the guest, including some 50 officers in the uniform of the Highland Regiments. In the course of the evening, the chairman presented Gen. Alison with the gold medal of the Highland Society, remarking that these medals were first given to the sons of Sir Ralph Abercromby, as tokens of the Society's admiration of their father. Gen. Alison acknowledged the compliment, and said that he should always value the gift most highly, and on his death he should hand it down as an heirloom to his family. Sir C. R. MacGregor, Bart., President of the Society, in proposing the toast of the evening, said :—"Like Lord Wolseley, he began his military career in the Crimean War, which, with its great hardships and dangers, was probably a good school of training for young soldiers. That distinguished Scotchman, Sir Colin Campbell, afterwards Lord Clyde, was then serving in the Crimea. No doubt his penetrating eye and his long experience, which had first been gained in the campaigns of Wellington, soon discerned the merits of Alison, for immediately after the Crimean War was at an end, he took our guest with him to India as his military secretary, where he was severely wounded. Our officers during the Indian Mutiny were exposed to the climate in the worst season of the year; but bad and trying as the climate of India may then have been, I can hardly think that the climate on the West Coast of Africa could have been an improvement. As second in command in the war against the Ashantees, he was present in every action, and at the capture of Coomassie. The last service of this veteran soldier—veteran not in years, but in service—was in Egypt. There he commanded the Highland Brigade. One account which I have read, and which is said to be authentic, states that the Highland Brigade at the battle of Tel-El-Kebir was enclosed in a triangle of fire, that the enemy's breech-loaders were good, that their ammunition was abundant, that the air was a hurricane of bullets, through which shells tore their way. We all know, however, that the Scotch regiments, instead of being daunted by these dangers, rushed onwards, stormed the enemy's intrenchments, and captured all their works and batteries. But what Scotchman would not fight to the last extremity under the command of Gen. Sir Archibald Alison? He has served his country in Europe, Asia, and Africa, so ably, that he has been more than once thanked by both Houses of Parliament. We members of the Highland Society thank him for the honour of his company here to-night. We are especially glad to see him on March 21, the anniversary of the battle of Alexandria, because we see in Sir Archibald Alison a proof that Scotland, which formerly gave birth to Sir Ralph Abercrombie, Sir David Baird, Sir John Moore, and others, can produce good Generals still. I think we may be certain that his name, like theirs, will be preserved in the hearts and minds of his countrymen." Sir Archibald Alison said the greatest object of his ambition was attained when he received the command of the Highland Brigade in Egypt. He wished to propose to them the toast of the Highland Regiments, who, he said, could in these latter days have no reason to complain that they had not had their full share of service. In Ashantee, in Afghanistan, in Egypt, nearly every one of the Highland Regiments had been represented. But since the last-mentioned operations, by far the hardest hand-to-hand fighting he could recollect since he joined the Army had taken place on the eastern shores of the Soudan, forming the severest trial which British soldiers had gone through for a long time, and there also the Highlanders had taken their part. The enemy was superior in courage, in determination, and in fearlessness of death to any we had almost ever encountered. One could now see how such Mussulmans, animated by the same spirit and under the same religious excitement, were in days gone by able to conquer almost the whole western part of Europe, and threaten even to subdue France. Under that gallant, distinguished, and most able soldier, Sir Gerald Graham, two battles had been won—as hard battles as could be fought. In the first we were entirely successful. In the second, at one time and for a certain interval, victory trembled in the balance; in fact, it seemed to have almost turned against us, when one of our squares was broken. The square, of all formations, was one of the best to resist attack, but it was one of the worst to make an attack. There seemed little doubt, although the accounts were somewhat conflicting, that the front face of the 2nd Brigade, composed of half-battalions of the Black Watch and the York and Lancaster Regt., instead of waiting the attack, charged into the midst of the enemy in the most gallant way. The flank of the advance force became thus exposed, the enemy rushed in, and many of the officers in its rear were speared before the men in the front ranks actually knew what had taken place. The square, composed of three as fine regiments as were in the British Army, became entangled in a mass of the enemy, and were driven back 500 or 600 yards in one throng of fighting, struggling, bleeding, dying men. To those who knew what war was, the rallying from that attack must appear one of the finest things in the history of British arms. When soldiers were once broken in a fight like that, usually a panic seized them, they fled, and could not be rallied. The very reverse happened at Tamanieb. They went back, struggling, borne down, overpowered, crushed; but there was no panic flight. No man fled one foot further than the spears of the enemy actually drove him. When Buller brought up his brigade on the right in magnificent order, and caused a cessation in the pressure of the enemy, the men instantly rallied to the call of their officers, they re-formed their ranks, they resumed the offensive, they joined in the line of the general advance, and there was no pause, no stopping, no hesitation, until, with one united attack, the British army swept on, and drove the enemy from his position, broke his power completely, and left between 2,000 and 3,000 of their foes in the dust. As Scotchmen, they had reason to be proud of the Highland regiments, just as Englishmen had reason to be proud of the gallant York and Lancaster. In sentiment the two were united, and all must feel a pride in the way in which their gallant comrades served their country, fought for it, and died for it.

COURTS-MARTIAL.

A propos of the discussion in the House of Commons on the 20th inst. on excessive punishments, the following circular has been issued from the War Office :—"The attention of the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief has lately been called to the large number of courts-martial and the severity of the sentences awarded. The Army, especially the home Army, is largely composed of very young men, the number of recruits who join annually being nearly double that of former years. In addition to instruction, young soldiers require encouragement and consideration, and, as a rule, it is not advisable to deal with them at first with the same severity in proportion to their offences as may have hitherto been requisite with older and more experienced men. Many causes are often now disposed of by courts-martial which might with the same result as to discipline be dealt with by the commanding officer. A crime which when summarised into a charge before a court-martial appears deserving of the severest punishment may, if carefully considered with regard to the intent, character, and temper of the prisoner and the circumstance of the case, resolve itself into an offence which should not even be a subject for trial. The conditions under which soldiers serve have been much changed of late, and every facility is now given for the discharge of those bad and worthless men whom some years ago it was impossible to get rid of, and his Royal Highness is disposed to think those changes in the condition of our Army all point to the possibility of reducing the scale of punishment. Except in cases of determined desertion and aggravated insubordination, the imprisonment that can be awarded by a district court-martial varies from one day to two years, with the intention that the punishment should be commensurated with the offence, but a comparison of courts-martial affords grounds for the impression that courts are often too much guided by custom in their awards. His Royal Highness does not by these remarks impute any want of care to the officers of the Army, but thinks it right to draw their attention to the altered terms of enlistment, which call for a modification of the scale of punishments hitherto found necessary. General officers are directed to devote particular attention to this subject, and endeavour to impress upon courts-martial the maxim that the proper amount of punishment to be awarded is the least amount by which discipline can be effectually maintained."

FIRE TACTICS.

F. P. Forteath, Colonel Commandant, 4th Bombay ifles sends the following remarks, which we think worthy of attention :—"I think those who have had opportunities of observing the results the Bombay Army have attained during the last two years by practising the system of fire tactics and double-company column drill, introduced by its present Commander-in-Chief, must admit that it has been a great success. Troops that have been previously well instructed in steady drill can be handled with great ease and rapidity under any circumstances on Gen. Hardinge's system. It has, however, often occurred to me that triple companies would be even better than double companies. For instance, a battalion of six companies formed into two columns of three companies each, commanded by a major, would be self-supporting. Each triple company column could almost instantaneously be formed for either attack or defence, without the slightest confusion or unsteadiness. For attack, column formation is generally used. In this case, the front company of each column would advance, preceded by scouts (right files of sections). The second company would follow as the support, and the third company as the reserve. It seems to me that, according to the Field Exercise, the files of the fighting line are too much extended. I would prefer extending them only two paces, instead of four, and have intervals of three paces between sections. For defence, troops are generally in line. In this case, the two front companies would be in line extended two paces,—that is, one pace between files for the rear-rank men to move up on the order to commence firing; and the third company in rear as a support and feeder. As regards the respective merits of double and triple company columns for rapidity of manœuvring, the latter can deploy outwards almost as rapidly as the former can deploy to either flank. The plan of leaving everything as much as possible to individual intelligence is admirable, and should be carried out as far as it is practicable; but I think it is absolutely necessary to lay down fixed rules for all formations, whilst it may be left to the individual intelligence of officers to decide, in ordinary circumstances, which formation is most suitable to the occasion. In these few lines it is impossible to enter into details, but if you consider the suggestions I offer worthy of consideration, perhaps you will be good enough to afford them a place in your paper."

THE EXAMINATION JUGGERNAUT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—I see by this day's paper that at last some one has had the courage to expose in the House the present iniquitous system of examination, by which many old and deserving officers are suffering the grossest injustice. What can be said in defence of a system which produces such flagrant cases as the following, and it is well known that there are many others just as hard, if not harder?—A enters the service, and obtains both his first commission and his lieutenancy by purchase. He remains a subaltern 14 or 15 years. About the time he obtains his company this new order for examination to rank of major comes out, but on applying to be permitted to go up for the same, is informed he cannot do so until he has served for two years as captain! (What could be more illogical?) Well, this brings him to, say, 16 years' service before he can go up, but on applying to go through the garrison class a second time, he finds his regiment either ordered on active service, or else the exigencies of the service will not admit his absence for so long; and to make a long story short, he is unable to go up until he has 18 years' service then fails by a few marks either in one subject or in the aggregate, and finds himself superseded, no matter what service he has seen, by a man who may never have been out of his native country, but, having nursed his brain in a cool climate, manages to get through by the "skin of his teeth"! The authorities seem to forget that men during the Purchase days came in on a very low standard of examination, and many of these, in spite of real hard work, and with the very best private instructors (to whom high fees must be paid), fail to qualify by a few marks. Every military man knows full well that these examinations get harder and harder, and in Earl Percy's speech last night he mentions that the per-centage of failures amongst captains has increased from 2·75 in 1881 to 40 in 1884! In spite of this, the authorities state that the standard has not been increased. How can these two statements be reconciled? In common justice, permit these poor, deluded officers, who came in under the Purchase system, to be placed on the same footing as officers who, having been five years captain in 1881, were let through on a very low standard. At the last examination six or seven artillery officers (one of them had been an instructor at Woolwich) were plucked, and I also hear that an engineer was spun in fortification! This will give some idea of the character of the examination.—I am, &c.,

March 18. Passed Over and Disgusted.

We (Daily News) believe that we are correct in saying that Col. Synge, who died in Cairo on Monday night, never fully recovered from the effects of his captivity among Albanian brigands some years ago. His actual treatment at the hands of the brigands was not very severe, but the anxiety of mind as well as the physical privations which he had to undergo, gave a shock to his system from which it never completely rallied.

The annual general meeting of the Army and Navy Hotel, Limited, was held at the Hotel, Victoria Street, S.W., on Saturday, the 22nd inst., when the chairman, Sir James Mackenzie, Bart., stated that the trading accounts related only to a period of seven months, and that a small profit of £300 had been earned. He did not know of any hotel company which had paid a dividend in its first year. A letter was read from a visitor of the hotel requesting that a vote of thanks should be given to the sub-manager and the resident staff for their willing and efficient services, and such a resolution was accordingly passed on the motion of Gen. J. T. Harris. A vote of thanks to the chairman and board of directors were proposed by Gen. Lowry, who said the shareholders had unbounded confidence in the management, and had every reason for satisfaction at the progress that had been made.

COLONEL HALE ON THE STAFF COLLEGE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—In your issue of the 15th inst. there appeared, treating of the Staff College, an article roseate in the view it took of Staff-College education, and yet, in this respect, if I may venture to say so, somewhat self-contradictory. Having, only a few months since, quitted the College, after working there as Professor for between five and six years, I would ask your permission to offer a few remarks on some of the points touched on in the article in question. The education given at the Staff College is, in truth, a matter of national importance; the potentialities of the College for giving regimental officers the necessary education are vast; but, regretfully I say it, the in esse is very different from the in posse; and at the outset I must demur most strongly to the assertion in the article that the College is in a state of "thoroughly workmanlike efficiency," an assertion inconsistent, as I shall show, with statements made subsequently in the article, and, moreover, contradicted by the experience of nearly every student who has passed through the College. And if the College is not in the condition claimed for it, it is difficult to say on whose shoulders the responsibility for the existing situation rests. The authorities at the Horse Guards are primarily interested in the efficiency of the Staff College, but between them and the College interposed the Department of Military Education, which for the last seven years has held strong and decided views of its own on the training at the Staff College. The collegiate authorities are not free agents, for they have also to work up to the Education Department. On examination, it would probably be found that whilst on all three sets of authorities a certain amount of responsibility rests, the Education Department is the one which has been the real power at the College for the last few years. It is, I own, with utter amazement, that I learn from the article that there is at the College an "exhaustive course of strategy and tactics." Perhaps, sir, you are not aware that there is not at the College teaching power available for conducting such a course. There is, it is true, a Professor of Military Art, History, &c., within whose province fall these subjects, but for him or any other man to teach them "exhaustively" under the existing system is simply an impossibility. Every week is that unfortunate Professor required to deliver two lectures, with an additional lecture every other week, and during the year he has, besides, to read over and carefully criticise nearly one hundred essays written by the students. What time possibly can be available for either Professor or student to do any practical work, without the execution of which tactics cannot be even superficially, much less exhaustively, taught or learnt ? The want of tactical instruction is a scandal to the College. Not more than three or four times at the outside whilst I was at the College did the students receive practical instruction even in taking up an outpost line, that most elementary and necessary branch of practical tactics. It is true that the present Commandant has during the last four or five years encouraged the introduction of quasi-tactical work into another branch of study; but of direct systematic practical instruction in tactics there is nothing to be found at this institution, which is in a state of such "thoroughly workmanlike efficiency." and one of the causes of this lamentable shortcoming is not so much want of time, as misemployment of time. As the article most truly, but not half-strongly enough, says, "ambitious and zealous officers have their energies sapped and valuable time wasted in endeavouring to discover whether the moon's lower limb will be visible above the horizon on a certain night, at an hour when all sober people should be in bed, or perhaps in estimating the amount of friction called into play on the faces of a wedge." Now, there can be no denying that for staff work there is no knowledge which may not be useful; and, therefore, even a knowledge of the spectacle presented by the moon at the hour named may, at some time or other, be useful to a staff officer. No doubt the ideal staff officer should be a walking encyclopædia,—he should be as full of information as an egg is of meat; but does it not strike one that we should take care that into what I may call his mental valise for service, we should first stow away the articles he is sure to want most whenever he takes the field, and afterwards fill up the odd corners with the less necessary articles, according to the time allowed for packing, the probability of their being wanted, and, permit me to add, the carrying power of each valise. It is not the mere hours of attendance at the mathematical instruction which sap the energies and waste valuable time; it is the time out of study required by a great number of students to work their mathematical knowledge up to examination pitch. Students have said to me, "I am very sorry I cannot read military subjects here as I should like to, but I am weak in mathematics, and, of course, I must grind at them." And they do "grind" with a vengeance, to the detriment of their professional work. Mathematics are useful either as a part of general education or as a part of a Staff officer's education. If the former, they should not be taught at the College, which is an institution intended for giving a special education; if the latter, the knowledge of them can be obtained before entering the College, which exists because there, and there alone, are there opportunities for giving regimental officers the special portion of the Staff officer's training; but, believing as I do that only a very small amount of mathematical knowledge is required by a Staff officer, I should be very sorry to see, even if mathematics were got rid of at the College, anything like the present College examination standard being taken as the standard for entrance. I pass on to another flaw in this "thoroughly workmanlike efficiency" of the Staff College, also mentioned in the article, the "absurdity of highly-educated men being sunk to the level of copying-clerks," as they are in the process of note-taking at the lectures delivered by the professors. But remember, Sir, here you are on delicate ground, for the College is in its curriculum "lecture mad." It matters not whether the lecturer be good or bad, whether he is preaching an old sermon, the notes of which, handed down by members of his previous congregations, are stowed away in the quarters of members of the congregation he is addressing; no matter whether the topic of the lecture is one that the student either knows well or would prefer to study for himself; then to the lecture-hall, with rare exceptions, must the student come, and form part of an "obligatory" congregation prepared for the professor. No doubt, great improvements have taken place in respect to note-taking very recently, but there is still much room for further progress in this direction. The subject of lecturing is one too wide to be dealt with in this letter, but on one point there can be no doubt,—namely, that students who are anxious to employ their time to the greatest advantage, as are, with an exception here and there, the officers studying at the Staff College, should never be compelled to listen to matter which from its standard character can be supplied to them either printed or lithographed. Of some of the lectures delivered, exist notes made by previous generations of students, and the fortunate possessors of these invaluable legacies regard, with a suppressed chuckle, their less fortunate brethren striving might and main in the lecture-hall to take notes of the oft-told tale. A similar shortcoming involving misemployment of time lies in the making and tracing of maps or plans required for practical work. I have known two or three hours lost by a student in getting hold of maps and tracing them for the work out of doors, when, by a little forethought, the tracing or map could easily have been supplied beforehand. This mere mechanical work is most irritating to the worker, as being utterly unnecessary. Surely the thoroughly workmanlike efficiency of the Staff College is somewhat an ideal picture. Nevertheless, this most desirable condition is not difficult of attainment. Let the idea of "work for work's sake" be got rid of; let the time of the students be strictly economised, and not wasted in doing mechanical work which might easily be done for them; let the authorities keep steadily in view the primary object for which the College exists, namely, the training regimental officers for staff work; let the courses of the professors be so arranged that whilst they are carried out in combination, no work is done unnecessarily twice over under different professors; let practical tactics be really taught; finally, let the students be regarded as sensible men, and not boys,—as men who want to learn, and do not need scholastic restrictions in doing their work, and then the educational millennium will be at hand at the College. Worked on these principles, the College will send out men who will have acquired a maximum of practical knowledge in a minimum of time. In the latter part of the article an announcement is made which is almost too good to be true, namely, that it is intended to sever the connection between the Staff College and the Military Education Department, and to bring the College under the immediate control of the Commander-in-Chief. It is well-nigh impossible to exaggerate the beneficial results of such a change. In the first place, Generals and commanding officers will be extremely careful in signing certificates as to the competency of officers who will thus come at once under the eye of the head-quarter authorities; that they will so come, will be a direct incentive to enable officers to come to the College; and the College Educational Staff, being responsible to an executive and not an educational authority, will naturally strive to make their teaching as practical as possible, being no longer hampered by the traditions of a period when theoretical teaching and paper-examinations were supposed to be the training and the test of scientific soldiering.—I am, &c., LONSDALE HALE, Colonel, Retired, R.E.

Athenæum Club, March 24.

The Special Committee appointed by the Dominion Parliament to obtain information in connection with the navigation of Hudson's Straits and Bay met on Feb. 21 for the first time, the Hon. Mr. Royal in the chair. Professor Bell was called, and gave some interesting evidence. He said he had spent six years in Hudson's Bay and Straits, and was fully satisfied that navigation was good for at least four and a half months during the summer season, and there was a probability of the ports being accessible the whole year round to steamers. Heretofore, only sailing-vessels were used, and were obliged to round the thin ice, instead of breaking it. He was a civil engineer, and having traversed over the proposed route, did not hesitate to pronounce it feasible on either side of Lake Manitoba, but he was not as well acquainted with the east as with the west route. Muskegs might have to be encountered on the west side of the lake, which would make the road somewhat expensive to build. He was satisfied that the mean temperature of the water in the bay was much higher than that in Lake Superior. He referred at length to the mineral wealth of the country along the proposed route. At Churchill there were millions of tons of iron ore broken up and washed clean. This ore contained a large per-centage of manganese, and would make a splendid Bessemer steel—better, in fact, than that used in England for this purpose. There were also rich lead deposits and anthracite coal of excellent quality, but the extent of the fields was not known to him. Silver, gold, and copper were also found. He thought there was probably a large quantity of the latter, as the rock formations were very favourable. He referred also to the fish prospects, expressing the opinion that haddock, codfish, salmon, white-fish, speckled trout, and other good food fishes were abundant.

The Vienna correspondent of the Times says:—"Archduke John, who has already been successful in dealing with other military problems, has constructed a repeating-rifle with an attached chamber. A commission, including three of the most prominent constructors of small arms, has been trying the new weapon at the rifle-range in the arsenal, and the results of the experiments are said to have been highly satisfactory."

The Bombay Gazette says:—"The Secretary of State has decided that the India medal with the North-West Frontier clasp shall be granted to all the survivors of the troops who took part in the operations under the command of Col. A. Macdonell, C.B., against the Momunds between Dec. 5, 1863, and Jan. 2, 1864."

THE WORN-OUT CLOTHING QUESTION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—As too many could not possibly raise their voices against the injustice of taking old clothing from the soldier, I wish to say a few words on the subject in your columns. This pilfering economy has done more harm to recruiting, and created more dissatisfaction amongst clean and well-inclined soldiers than it is possible to describe. The question was thoroughly argued and ventilated last year, the danger and dissatisfaction were fully pointed out; but no, reason would not be listened to, commanding officers' experienced opinions must be thrown aside, to give to Moses and Co. the rightful property of half-paid and well-fleeced "Tommy Atkins." It has always been graceful custom to give way to the wish of the majority, and in this case we go no further than to ask that the wishes of the majority be acceded to; we ask that the soldier be allowed to retain his clothing at double the contract price, and try how many will wish to return them. I know the soldier does not be allowed to decide much for himself; however, by way of experiment, we might see if he could decide on the proper time to remove his old clothing from the barrack-room to the ash-pit, instead of making a marine store of the quartermaster's department, and over-working every functionary there in turning up musty records to decide how much of the clothing of 1882 becomes the property of Moses in 1884. I was on leave some time ago in a well-populated part of Ireland, near Dublin, and was in hopes of obtaining many recruits, but soon before I returned an Army Reserve man came on the scene; he told little but the truth, and he referred with an extra tinge of bitterness to "the old-clothing question." He described the suit given to him on leaving "as the convict suit," and invited an inspection of them; and, in a word, he put me from getting one recruit. I was certain of six. So if cause why recruits are scarce be required, I think I have given you one strong reason of it. The minds of the raw material are poisoned and terrified by the accounts of the Army Reserve men, as they arrive. If it is intended to remove one of the soldier's worst grievances, leave him his clothes mended again and again at his own expense. Give them to him either at their usual price, or increased by the worn-out value, if you will; but "leave him his clothes."—I am, &c., A.

It has been notified that H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief has no objection to regiments and battalions at home contributing from canteen funds to the expense of the Army Athletic Meeting of 1884, as sanctioned last year and the year before.

The Standard learns that "Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, on terminating his command of the Portsmouth District at the end of April, will be entertained, with the Princess, at a banquet, at which the Mayor (Mr. R. Marvin) will preside. An illuminated resolution, expressive of the public appreciation of the Prince's services to the community, will be presented. The Princess will be asked to accept a souvenir of her residence at Portsmouth, during which period she has given valuable assistance to local charities, besides being mainly instrumental in the establishment of a home for soldiers' wives."

Joseph Clayton, who fought through the Peninsula and at Waterloo, died at Dudley on Saturday in his 95th year.

A meeting of the supporters of the Egyptian War Fund was held on Thursday at Carteret Street, Westminster, Lord Wemyss presiding. It was stated by the Hon. Secretary, Capt. T. Tully, that temporary pensions had been given to widows and mothers of soldiers, and 237 invalided soldiers and sailors had been assisted, the amounts given reaching the sum of £3,424. Lord Wemyss referred to the necessity that existed for the fund to supplement the aid given by the Government, as well as to assist the widows of the soldiers who perished from fever and dysentery in the Egyptian war, many of whom would have been left helpless if it had not been for Lady Jane Taylor's Fund. The Government dealt differently and more liberally in these matters with sailors, inasmuch as death from sickness arising through the operations of war was recognised as entitling the widows to relief at the hands of the Admiralty. The report was adopted, and some other business having been transacted, the meeting concluded.

We gather from the Grenada press, says the Colonies and India, the particulars of an extraordinary and exciting episode, which arose in connection with the recent visit to the island of a detachment of the Naval squadron. The Fleet arrived on Feb. 9, and it seems that in the Grenada People of the previous day there had been published an article reflecting on the personal character of his Excellency Sir William Robinson. A copy of the paper found its way into the hands of the Naval officers, and Capt. the Hon. V. A. Montagu, the commanding officer, who is a personal friend of Sir William, denounced the article, and expressed his opinion that the editor ought to be horsewhipped, and even went so far as to vent a threat that he would send his crew on shore to wreck the newspaper office and plant. Capt. Montagu despatched a sailor, armed with a horsewhip, to the office of the Grenada People, where he left a letter to the editor. This missive informed Mr. Donovan that the captain intended to come on shore and horsewhip him. Mr. Donovan, as soon as the communication reached him, sent back a reply, in which he invited the captain to come alone, or along with a friend, and he (the editor) would show him that "two could play at the game" of horsewhipping. Mr. Donovan also warned Capt. Montagu against carrying out his expressed threat of destroying the People premises, and wound up by stating that he would lay a copy of the captain's threatening letter before the Lords of the Admiralty, and would also take measures to have the attention of Parliament directed to the matter.

THE ROYAL ARTILLERY.

An Artillery officer writes the following long letter, which is one of many on the same subject. We insert it without the least hope that any practical result will come of it, or of any number of similar letters:—"Surely the time has come for the reorganisation of the Royal Regiment of Artillery; we have seen many reforms lately, but none of our reformers appear to have the courage to grapple with the really serious question of reorganising this unwieldy and overgrown regiment. We do not wish to see any further reduction in the personnel. It has long been notorious that the Regiment of Artillery is far below its proper strength, to say nothing of the recent reductions in the number of batteries,—eleven batteries struck off the Indian establishment in 1883, and since that date five batteries reduced on the home establishment, to meet a deficiency of over 2,000 rank and file. It is a point worthy of note in contemporaneous history, that about this time Germany increased her force of artillery by the addition of 30 batteries. It is high time that the reorganisation of the Artillery be immediately taken in hand, and its separation into horse, field, and garrison artillery fairly and fully discussed by those who have no personal interests at stake, and no party object to serve, instead of allowing it to be relegated to committees sitting at the War Office with closed doors. We have been officially informed that it is not contemplated to inaugurate any change in the coming year, and it is pretty well known that some high in office are opposed to any separation of the regiment; but we believe that the opposition in this quarter is not entirely upon public grounds; administrative difficulties are much overrated. On the ground of efficiency there can scarcely be two opinions. The service of Garrison Artillery is daily becoming more complicated and scientific, and nothing but special aptitude, constant practice, and careful study, can make an officer thoroughly conversant with the working of this arm. The Germans recognise this fact, and not only is their fortress Artillery a separate arm, but it has a special system of mobilisation which in time of war brings every man back to the same fortress where he originally was trained in his duties as a gunner. In addition to this there are annual manœuvres of the most complete description for the fortress Artillery, in order to render officers and men thoroughly at home under the ever-varying conditions of a siege on an extended scale. England cannot of course enter upon anything in the shape of military manœuvres, which cost money; but this is simply another argument for making the shoemaker stick to his last and the gunner to his gun. There is absolutely nothing in common between the Garrison Artillery and the Mounted branches, in fact, the service of Garrison Artillery is much more nearly allied to the active and strictly military work of the Royal Engineers; it is most unfair to transfer officers from the Mounted Artillery to the Garrison Artillery and at the same time is a fraud on the public, which has a right to demand that the best possible value be obtained for the money voted in the Army Estimates. With regard to the separation of Horse from Field Artillery, the case is not quite so strong, the difference between these services being more tactical than technical. Looking at the question from another point of view, viz., that of the officers concerned, it will readily be conceded that the officers in each branch of the Royal Artillery would be in every way more competent to perform their various duties, and more eager to perfect themselves in everything connected with their profession, in a word, more imbued with esprit de corps, and in a better situation to cherish it, if they were certain of remaining for the whole of their service in one branch of the regiment, instead of being shuttlecocked about from one to the other. An officer who is within a few months of his promotion comes home from India in a Horse Artillery battery; he has to purchase two chargers, he cannot tell until the day he is gazetted where he will fall on promotion, it may be to a garrison battery at Hong Kong; the idea of such a fate will not encourage him to spend more than is absolutely necessary in buying chargers for use in the battery which he is shortly going to leave; his commanding officer, at the same time, is bound to look at the other side of the question, and insist that the said chargers shall be in every respect what they ought to be; in any case, the unlucky officer who gets his promotion finds that it costs him a good deal of money. Take another case: an officer who has served all his time with the Horse and Field Artillery, is promoted major of a garrison battery at Gibraltar or Malta. Is he fit to take charge of the complicated machinery of one of these batteries? No, and he knows it himself, and all the time that he is condemned to perform duties which he hates, and is utterly unfitted for, he is at the time 'working the oracle' to obtain a transfer to the Mounted branches. If the transfer does not come off, and he is a moneyed man, he gets an exchange; but if he cannot afford such a luxury, he must, perforce, make the best of a false position. Again, an officer whose service has been principally with the Garrison Artillery is promoted to command a field battery in some pleasant country quarter. He does not understand the work and does not care about it; but he finds his lines are laid in pleasant places, his conscience has been seared by many a hard struggle with the Pay Department for numerous small sums which have been under various pretences filched from him from time to time, and the result is that he stays where he is, and 'shoves along somehow,' and his battery suffers in consequence. There are many cases such as the following:—Lieut. X, to proceed from Candahar to Canterbury, on appointment to the Horse Artillery; Lieut. Y, to proceed from Cabul to the Cape, &c.; Capt. Z, to proceed from Newcastle to Meerut, &c. What, then, are the obstacles in the way of separation? It is presumed by those who oppose the scheme of separation that every one would elect for the Mounted branches, and almost every one for the Horse Artillery; that it would be most unfair to compel any officer to remain for the rest of his service in a branch of the regiment which he did not like, and that every one ought to have his chance of the Horse Artillery, if he wishes for it, in the due course. We know how easily the last objection can be overruled! Some such scheme as the following would work well, and many imaginary obstacles would vanish, if they were fairly faced:—1. Place the Garrison Artillery on the same footing as the Royal Engineers with regard to pay and allowances, &c. 2. Every officer of Artillery at present holding a commission to record his wish to serve with Horse, Field, or Garrison Artillery for the remainder of his service, and to post every officer accordingly, so far as the exigencies of the case would admit. 3. Every cadet, upon passing the final examination at the Royal Military Academy, to be allowed his choice (according to seniority) of Horse, Field, or Garrison Artillery, or Royal Engineers." Our correspondent ends thus:—"We know that the feeling on the part of the great majority of officers of the Royal Artillery is in favour of separation, and we also know that for the present no officer is likely to be encouraged to express his opinion." We cannot corroborate or deny the statement as to the feelings of the majority. Who can?

CORRECTING A CORRECTION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Under the heading of "A Correction," Lord Archibald Campbell, in your paper of the 22nd inst., writes that we have supplied the War Office with tartans for the kilts of the Highland Regiments, made of shoddy, and so utterly bad that no respectable firm would make them. To our many business friends, the quality of the goods we make, both in tartans and tweeds, is so well known, that the statement referred to does not call for a reply from us; but as your valued paper is read by many who are not acquainted with the circumstances, we venture to ask your permission to make the following statement in reply. We have been manufacturers of tartans for about 150 years, and have, we believe, had the honour (of which we are justly not a little proud) of supplying the Highland Regiments with their tartans, both through the regimental authorities and through the Clothing Department, since tartans were worn by them, and we confidently assert that the quality at present in use for kilts is the best for wear, comfort, and all practical purposes, that they have ever worn, and was only fixed on after very careful trial and consideration. In the manufacture of these tartans, not an ounce of shoddy, mungo, or other waste is used, but they are made of the finest qualities of the best and purest Cheviot wools grown on the best sheep farms of Caithness, Sutherland, and the North of Scotland, specially selected for the yarns these tartans are woven of. These yarns are dyed in the best manner, and with the greatest care, with the best dyestuffs, no expense being spared to have the colours as fast and permanent as they can possibly be, and no aniline or fugitive colours at all being used. If Lord Archibald Campbell had made inquiry at us as to these matters, before rushing into print and making the misstatements he has done, we should have been glad to have given him every opportunity of testing the truth of what we have written; and we shall still be glad to give him practical proof of the truth of our statement, if he will come and see the tartans made. As to the quantity allowed for a kilt we have nothing to do, except that the greater the quantity put into a kilt, the likelihood is that the orders will be the larger to the manufacturers. The proof of a pudding is in the eating of it, and we think the best proof of what we have written as to the above is that the reports from the various regiments, who have had these tartans to wear in kilts, have invariably been favourable. We think we may, therefore, ask Lord Archibald Campbell to withdraw the misstatements he has made with regard to us, evidently in ignorance of the true facts of the case.—We are, &c.,

WILLIAM WILSON AND SON.

Bannockburn, March 26.

Obituary.

The late Capt. Harry George Wakelyn Ford, 1st York and Lancaster Regt., who fell in the action at Tamanieb in the Soudan on March 13, was born on March 22, 1848, and was the youngest son of William M. Ford, staff surgeon, A.M.D., who died at Cephalonia, Ionian Islands, in 1850, while in the exercise of his profession during the outbreak of cholera among the British troops there, and who had seen active service in China, winning medals, and at the Cape of Good Hope during the Kaffir war. The deceased officer was grandson of the late Lieut.-Col. Charles Smith, of Whittlesea, Cambridgeshire, J.P. and D.L. of the Isle of Ely, who was wounded at Waterloo, in which he took part with his brothers, the late Lieut.-Gen. Sir Harry G. W. Smith, Bart., of Aliwal, G.C.B., and the late Col. Thomas Lawrence Smith, C.B., for many years barrackmaster at Chatham and Aldershot. Capt. Ford entered the Army as ensign in the 11th Foot in Nov., 1865, and subsequently served in India, Ceylon, Aden, and at home with the 7th Royal Fusiliers, the Ceylon Rifle Regt., the 56th ("The Pompadours"), and the York and Lancaster Regt. He was gazetted lieutenant in Nov., 1871, and captain in May, 1880.

Mr. Edward Hay, Midshipman, R.N., died at St. Thomas's Home, London, on March 5, aged 19, of wounds received while forming part of an expedition up the Niger. Mr. Hay was serving on board the Opal, and accompanied Capt. Brooke and the expedition in the Alecto to Aboah, where he was mortally wounded. He was the second son of Col. K. J. Hay, D.A.G., Royal Artillery, at the Horse Guards. Was present at the bombardment of Alexandria (medal, clasp, and Khedive's bronze star).

THROAT IRRITATION AND COUGH.—Soreness and dryness, tickling and irritation, inducing cough and affecting the voice. For these symptoms use Epps's Glycerine Jujubes. In contact with the glands at the moment they are excited by the act of sucking, the Glycerine in these agreeable confections becomes actively healing. Sold only in boxes, 7½d, tins, 1s 1½d, labelled "JAMES EPPS and Co., Homœopathic Chemists, London." A letter received:—"Gentlemen,—It may, perhaps, interest you to know that, after an extended trial, I have found your Glycerine Jujubes of considerable benefit (with or without medical treatment) in almost all forms of throat disease. They soften and clear the voice.—Yours faithfully, GORDON HOLMES, M.D., Senior Physician to the Municipal Throat and Ear Infirmary."

2ND LIFE GUARDS. Major Viscount R. Downe, A.D.C. to H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught, has passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

1ST DRAGOON GUARDS. The leave from India to England granted to Lieut. Lowry has been extended to July 10.

3RD DRAGOON GUARDS. In reference to the obituary notice of the late Major and Pymr. W. Dawes, we were in error in saying that the deceased served in the Egyptian Campaign. He volunteered his services, but they were not accepted, on account of the delicate state of his health.

4TH DRAGOON GUARDS. Major Tynte completes his period of service as adjt. of the Royal East Kent Yeomanry in May next, when he will rejoin head-quarters.

2ND DRAGOONS (ROYAL SCOTS GREYS). Capt. the Hon. W. P. Alexander has been selected for the adjutancy of the Royal East Kent Yeomanry, and will take up duty after the annual training in May next.

10TH HUSSARS. A requiem mass and service was celebrated on March 14 in the Roman Catholic Church in the Ismailiyeh, Cairo, in memory of the late Major Slade and the Roman Catholic soldiers who fell at El Teb.

12TH LANCERS. Capt. Montagu is about to retire from the service. Lieut. Broadwood has been granted leave from India to England for 15 months, on private affairs.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

The following movements are announced from the Horse Guards:—H Baty. A Brig., from Exeter to Woolwich, on April 7; B Baty. B Brig., from Woolwich to Exeter, on 31st inst.; the C Baty. B Brig., from Woolwich to Aldershot, on April 3; and F Baty. B Brig., from Aldershot, to Canterbury, on April 3.

A correspondent at Rangoon writes to the following effect:—"With regard to the mysterious disappearance of Major Innes, R.A., who has been advertised as a deserter from her Majesty's service, it may interest your readers to become acquainted with the following fact. Major Innes's battery being about to proceed to Tonghoo, a station of British Burmah, he wrote to Major Sands, commanding the relieving battery at that station, and purchased certain portions of that officer's kit. Shortly afterwards Major Sands received an anonymous communication bearing the Calcutta post-mark, which stated that the articles purchased would not after all be required, the writing being that of Major Innes." There was no need (the Times of India remarks) for a man bent on suicide—since self-destruction has been suggested—to seek the banks of the Hooghly with a view to carry out his wild design. Probably the unfortunate officer went off his head, and started—having money in his possession—upon an aimless career of globe-trotting. He will probably be heard of in Australia or Japan.

The Irish Times announces that Major J. H. G. Browne is to be allowed to retain his appointment as Garrison Instructor at the Curragh Camp for an extra period of two years.

The detachment of the 1st Baty. 1st Brig., Southern Division, R.A., stationed in the earthworks on the Mokattam hills, overlooking Cairo, with their seven-pounders, were inspected recently by Gen. Stephenson.

Lieut. W. Lloyd, I Baty. B Brig., R.H.A., left Aldershot on Wednesday morning for Windsor, to present the Mahdi's standard captured at Tokar to the Queen. Lieut. Lloyd, who is a relative of Mr. Clifford Lloyd, received permission to accompany the Army in the Soudan, and on his return home towards the expiration of his leave was commissioned by Gen. Graham to convey the trophy to her Majesty. He left Trinkitat on March 5, travelling viâ Cairo and Alexandria to Venice (where he was detained in quarantine five days), and thence to London, where he arrived on Sunday. Lieut. Lloyd arrived at Windsor about noon, and immediately proceeded to the Palace. The standard, which is about two and a half yards long and two yards wide, is composed of red and yellow silk. On one side is an Arabic inscription to the effect that it was presented by the Mahdi to the Governor of Tokar, and on the other a text from the Koran,—"There is no God but God, and Mahomet is his Prophet. Every one professes the knowledge of God." The Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice, received Lieut. Lloyd in the corridor after luncheon. Lieut. Lloyd was included in the Queen's dinner-party. Lieut. Lloyd is the son of Col. Lloyd (late 68th Light Infantry) and of Annie, daughter of Mr. George Savage, late 13th Light Dragoons, of Ballylowan, County Down, and brother of Mr. Clifford Lloyd. He joined the Army in 1876, and served in the Kaffir War of 1877-8, and throughout the Zulu War of 1879, where he was in command of the Royal Artillery of Pearson's column, and was at the battle of the Inyezane, and the defence of Ekowe. He was four times mentioned in despatches. In 1882 he was appointed temporary Resident Magistrate in County Clare, Ireland. He was attached to the cavalry, and was present at the battle of El Teb and the relief of Tokar.

Lieuts. F. J. A. Trench, R.H.A., and A. J. Hughes are candidates for admission to the Staff College.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

Col. W. A. Baker, Under-Secretary to the Government of Bombay, in the Public Works Department, and formerly chairman of the Port Trust, retires from the service this month, and will probably be succeeded by a civilian member of the Department. Col. Baker was to have left for England by the mail steamer yesterday.

SCOTS GUARDS. The Irish Times says:—"We can positively state on perfect authority that there was no foundation whatever for the rumour that cases of cholera had occurred in the Scots Guards at Richmond Barracks. Not only was that statement not true, as we on Tuesday intimated, but neither was it correct to say that the two men who died had perished from blood-poisoning, owing to having drunk impure water. The deaths took place on the 18th and 19th inst., and were due to lung disease only. No epidemic of any kind has broken out in the barracks, or did or does exist there, and the rumour may, therefore, be dismissed from the public mind. Since the foregoing words were written, a letter as follows from the surgeon in charge reaches us:—'Richmond Barracks, March 25.—Sir,—There is no foundation whatever for the "extraordinary rumour" that cholera, or any epidemic, has broken out in these barracks.—Francis B. Baker, Surgeon-Major, Grenadier Guards, in charge.'"

7th Royal Fusiliers. Major Chard, 2nd Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for six months, on private affairs. Lieut. Malcolm, 2nd Batn., joins the Wellington Depôt, Madras, for duty.

11th Devonshire Regiment. Capt. Astley, 1st Batn., is a probationer for the Pay Department.

12th Suffolk Regiment. Major Hely, 2nd Batn., has completed his term of appointment as Adjt., 4th Batn., and will revert to duty with his battalion at Galway. H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief has notified to Capt. Claude Kennedy his satisfaction at the highly creditable examination passed by him for promotion in January last.

13th Somersetshire Light Infantry. Lieut. Little, 2nd Batn., succeeds Capt. Bradshaw as Adjt.

14th West Yorkshire Regiment. An exchange has been sanctioned between Capts. Penno and Adye, Capt. Penno joining the 1st and Capt. Adye the 2nd Batn.

18th Royal Irish Regiment. The 1st Batn. will come home from India next winter.

19th Yorkshire Regiment. The Morning Post says:—"A very handsome cross has recently been erected in the churchyard of All Saints, at Aldershot, to the memory of Col. B. M. Deane, who was killed in the Transvaal war whilst leading the attack at Laing's Neck. The cross has been erected at the expense of the brother officers and other friends of the gallant colonel."

21st Royal Scots Fusiliers. Major Bridge, 1st Batn., has been appointed commandant of the School of Instruction at Aldershot. Lieut. Churchill, 2nd Batn., succeeds Lieut. Davidson at the Wellington Depôt, Madras. Qrmr. Lapham, 2nd Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for six months, on private affairs. The 1st Batn. went through a most useful day's shooting at Aldershot on the 22nd inst. A shooting club having been established, of which almost every man is a member, the use of five ranges were procured to carry out the first monthly practice this year; the weather was most favourable, and the men enjoyed the outing thoroughly. The classification of shots on the merits of last year's shooting gave great satisfaction, and brought many unexpected prizes. The amount of funds were divided into prizes alone, the men having to buy their own ammunition, which they did in abundance. By the time every class had completed it was 4 o'clock, shooting having gone on without interruption (only one half-hour for refreshments) from 10 in the morning. Close on 300 men out of a weak battalion were made available. Men who never fired before had the benefit of "Morriss's tubes," but these are not many, only a few who enlisted at head-quarters inside the last two months. The prizes were given out by Mrs. Gildea on the 25th inst., outside the officers' mess, when upwards of 80 successful competitors received their prizes from her hands.

24th South Wales Borderers. Major Harvey, 2nd Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for 15 months, on private affairs. Lieut. Beresford, 2nd Batn., from the Wellington Depôt, Madras, is ordered to join the detachment of his regiment at Mulliapooram.

27th Inniskilling Regiment. Capt. C. W. Hare died at Singapore on Feb. 23, from the effects of an accident. Capt. Hare, who was a son of Major Hare, of Surbiton, Surrey, joined the Army Nov. 18, 1868; became lieut., Oct. 27, 1871, and capt., Nov. 18, 1878.

33rd West Riding Regiment. Col. Castle has been retired from the 15th inst., although he would not have completed five years' service as a lieutenant-colonel until July 23. Having, in 1879, exchanged from the 107th with Lieut.-Col. Johnstone, he was obliged, under the regulations affecting such changes, to undertake to retire at the same time as that officer, whose five years as lieutenant-colonel would also have expired on the 15th inst., had he not already gone to half-pay.

35th Royal Sussex Regiment. Surg. F. G. Gallwey proceeded with the 1st Batn. to Assiout from Cairo. We understand that the regiment is encamped four miles from Assiout, in the Desert, and one mile from the Nile. The camp is being entrenched, and a depôt of supplies formed in it.

38th South Staffordshire Regiment. During the absence on sick-leave of Qrmr. Jarret, the duties will be performed by Serjt.-Major N. Billings.

39th Dorset Regiment. The extract from the Pioneer, republished in our issue of the 22nd inst., contains, among other inaccuracies, a statement that the senior major of the 39th "is now seconded, and only dates from January, 1859." This is not the case, Major Wynen being the senior, and having been senior captain of the 39th on July 1, 1881, he is, under Clause 30-I. of the Royal Warrant, entitled in ordinary course to the vacancy arising when Col. Dixon completes his command.

40th South Lancashire Regiment. According to present arrangements, the regiment will return home in 1885-86.

43rd Oxfordshire Light Infantry will return home, according to the present programme, in 1885-86.

44th Essex Regiment will come home from Aden next winter.

45th Sherwood Foresters (Derbyshire Regiment). Capt. Hudson has been permitted to exchange to the 2nd Batn. (the 95th), with Capt. Coney.

ROYAL MARINES.

The Lords of the Admiralty have directed that when a recruit enlisted into the Royal Marines shall deposit £10 for his discharge within three months from the date of his entering the service, his discharge shall at once be carried out by his commanding officer, without reference to the Admiralty.

The Admiralty have sent orders to Chatham directing a detachment of the Royal Marines, consisting of 70 men, one colour-serjeant, one serjeant, one corporal, and one bugler, to prepare to proceed on foreign service. With the exception of the colour-serjeant, who will be attached to the Carysfort, the detachment will fill up vacancies caused by the casualties in the Naval Brigade on board ships serving under Admiral Hewett. The detachment will probably leave on the 4th prox.

Brevet Major C. S. C. Webb, R.M.L.I., senior on the list of captains, reached the limit of age for compulsory retirement on Wednesday last, the 26th inst. By Major Webb's retirement, Lieut. A. E. Houghton, Adjutant of the Portsmouth Division, obtains his company.

Major H. Gritton, R.M.L.I., at present serving on board H.M.S. Pembroke, has been selected by the Admiralty for the duties of Pymr. of the Royal Marine Battalion, at present stationed in Egypt.

Major Gritton, pymr., Capt. J. A. R. M'Kechnie, Capt G. Hobart, and Capt. A. St. L. Burrowes, R.M.L.I., have been ordered to hold themselves in readiness to embark in H.M.S. Malabar, for conveyance to Egypt on the 4th prox.

Capt. J. W. Walker, R.M.L.I., will relieve Major H. Gritton, R.M.L.I., in command of the detachment of Royal Marines at present serving on board H.M.S. Pembroke.

Major A. Donald, R.M.A., will assume charge of the Recruiting Station, Exeter, in the place of Capt. A. St. L. Burrowes, R.M.L.I., ordered to embark for service in Egypt.

The following detachment will embark on April 3 in H.M.S. sloop Pelican, ordered to be fitted out at Devonport for service on the Pacific station, viz., one serjeant, R.M.L.I.; one corporal or bombardier, R.M.A.; one drummer, R.M.L.I.; three gunners, R.M.A.; and 18 privates, R.M.L.I.

On April 5 one colour-serjeant, R.M.A., one serjeant, R.M.L.I., five gunners, R.M.A., and 19 privates, R.M.L.I., will embark in H.M.S. Malabar for passage to Malta, thence by H.M.S. Tyne to H.M.S. Briton, ordered to be recommissioned at Port Said.

Capt. G. A. L. Rawstorne, R.M.A., one serjeant, R.M.A., one serjeant, R.M.L.I., one corporal and one bugler, R.M.L.I., 13 gunners, R.M.A., and 65 privates, R.M.L.I., will embark on the 4th prox., in H.M.S. Malabar, for passage to H.M.S. Temeraire, ordered to be recommissioned at Malta.

One colour-serjeant, R.M.L.I., will embark in the Malabar for passage to H.M.S. Carysfort.

Lieut.-Col. J. D. Broughton, R.M.L.I., has been granted one month's leave of absence.

54th Dorsetshire Regiment. The Pioneer says:—"Lieut.-Col. Gosset, who has just rejoined his battalion at Peshawur, from being officiating Military Secretary to his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, will not remain long unemployed, he being now fully qualified for Staff employ, having recently passed in languages. Col. Wolseley, Assist.-Adjt.-Gen. at Lahore, is likely to go home for six months shortly, which will leave an officiating vacancy open; while on Aug. 8, Lieut.-Col. Combe will complete his five years' tenure on the Staff." Into one of these vacancies Col. Gosset will no doubt slip.

62nd Wiltshire Regiment. Capt. Hatch has been permitted to exchange to the 2nd Batn. (the 99th), with Capt. Clarke.

65th York and Lancaster Regiment. Capt. Brooke, a probationer, wing-officer 17th Bengal N.I., is about to be admitted to the Bengal S.C., from July 11, 1882.

68th Durham Light Infantry. As at present arranged, the regiment will return home from India in 1885-86.

70th East Surrey Regiment will come home from India next winter. Lieut. Hamilton, a probationer, wing-officer 39th Bengal N.I., is about to be admitted to the Bengal S.C., from July 5, 1882.

77th Middlesex Regiment. Major Royds and Lieut. Lumley are ordered to join the Wellington Depôt, Madras. Lieut. Oliver rejoins head-quarters.

95th Sherwood Foresters (Derbyshire Regiment). Capt. Coney has been permitted to exchange with Capt. Hudson, of the 1st Batn. (45th).

99th Wiltshire Regiment. Conspicuous amongst the memorials in the interior of S. Fin Barre's Cathedral stands a tablet which has been erected to the memory of the late Mr. W. Johnson, also of Mr. Geo. C. J. Johnson, sons of Mr. Johnson, of Vosterberg. Mr. William Johnson was killed riding at Carrigaline Races two years ago, and Lieut. G. Johnson, late of the regiment, fell at Ginghilovo during the Zulu war. The memorial is the gift of the numerous friends and admirers of the deceased gentlemen. Capt. Clarke has been permitted to exchange with Capt. Hatch, 1st Batn. (62nd).

Pay Department. Last Monday, in the House of Commons, Mr. J. Talbot asked the Secretary of War whether of the seven departments of the Army six had a representative at the War Office, and whether the only department without such a representative was the Army Pay Department; and if so, what was the reason for treating that particular department differently to all the rest of the Army? The Marquis of Hartington replied,—"Yes. The Army Pay Department is the only department of the Army without a representative at the War Office. The reason is that all the Departments except the Pay Department have executive duties to perform connected with the administration of their departments, such as the Supply and Medical services of the Army. No such duties connected with the Finance at Head-quarters can be delegated to an officer of the Pay Department. The only work which could be entrusted to him would be that connected with the posting and appointment of officers, and this would not be sufficient to warrant the employment of such an officer." The following particulars respecting the Department are taken from the Army Estimates for 1884-5, which were brought before the House of Commons last Monday week. Compared with last year, provision is made for 15 instead of 12 chief paymasters, and 87 in place of 82 staff paymasters. This increase in the higher ranks, however, was actually carried out last year. Thirteen Warrant officers and 87 serjeants are estimated for. The distribution of the establishment is as follows:—

Home and Colonies—
Chief Paymasters	15
Staff Paymasters	87
Paymasters and Assistant-Paymasters	162
	264
For India—
9 Cavalry and 50 Infantry Paymasters	59
	323

The increase on the vote is £5,000, being £138,600 for 1884-85, against £133,600 last year. No provision is made for a chief paymaster for North Britain, one up to a recent date having been stationed at Edinburgh. In view, however, of the character of the duties in some general's districts, now occupied by staff paymasters, we have reason to believe that it is in contemplation to increase the number of chief paymasters at any early date.

Medical Department. The following transfers have been ordered in India:—Surgs.-Major J. J. O'Reilly, from the Lahore Division to Rawul Pindee, and A. W. Roche from Meerut to Umballa; Surgs. R. H. Forman, from the Sirhind Division to Meean Meer; A. O. Geoghegan, from Oudh to Umballa; and W. R. Henderson, from the Presidency to Meerut. Surgs. G. R. Morse and R. W. O'Donnell have been posted to Abbassiyeh for duty.

The Auxiliary Forces.

MILITIA.

Royal Scots Fusiliers. Col. Walker and Capt. Ewart, 3rd Batn., have passed the senior voluntary examination in tactics. Both these officers hold, in addition, first-class Hythe certificates, and certificate from the Schools of Instruction.

THE EASTER MANŒUVRES.

The following orders have been issued for the marching column to Portsmouth:—

"Orders for the advanced Brigade proceeding from Petersfield to Portsmouth on Friday and Saturday, the 11th and 12th prox.: 1. The Fifth Column, under command of Lieut.-Col. Routledge, will, as soon as possible after arrival at Petersfield, endeavour to prevent the retreat of a convoy, returning by road from Petersfield to Portsmouth. 2. The Second Column, under command of Col. Lumsden, will throw out outposts on Butser Hill, covering Petersfield. As soon as the outposts have been inspected, the column will march to its billets. 3. A second line of outposts will be taken up with the right, one mile west of the 'Bat and Ball,' on the Clanfield-Hambledon Road, to Chalton Down on the left. First Column, commanded by Lieut.-Col. Robinson, will occupy the roads from the right to the point where Chalton Lane meets the Petersfield-Horndean Road; Fourth Column, commanded by Lieut.-Col. Richards, will occupy Windmill Hill; Third Column, commanded by Lieut.-Col. Brown, will occupy Chalton Down, watching the country to the south-east. Special instructions will be forwarded to officers commanding columns respecting the advance of the Brigade on Portsdown Ridge, on Saturday, the 12th prox.

General Instructions.—1. Companies not to be less than 20 files. 2. The organisation of each battalion is entrusted to the commanding officer of each column. 3. Each corps will furnish a state on Army Form B, 237, on the morning of the 11th and 12th prox. On Friday, the 11th, they will be collected by the staff officers of columns on arrival at Petersfield, and handed over to the Brigade-Major when possible. On Saturday, the 12th, they will be collected by staff officers of columns at the rendezvous. 4. Brigade head-quarters on Friday, 11th, Idsworth House, Horndean; on and after Saturday, 12th, Officers' House, Portsmouth.—(Signed), C. A. Broadwood, Lieut.-Col., Acting Brigade-Major."

The request of the Admiralty to be furnished with a return of the men available at Devonport as drafts for the new crews of the Temeraire and Carysfort, in the Mediterranean, and the Briton and Ranger, in the East Indies, all of which are about to be recommissioned on their respective stations, has given rise, says the Western Morning News, to some comment in local naval circles upon the great scarcity of seamen available for sea service. Nearly 1,200 men are required to commission the four ships, and though, of course, the other Naval ports will furnish their contingents, Devonport cannot spare the number of men proportionate to its importance as the second naval port without taking men who are not yet on turn for sea service, and consequently doing them some amount of injustice. This want of men is all the more inconvenient, as at the other ports there is also a great scarcity of men. Of artificers and stokers, on the other hand, there is a plentiful supply, the Indus being able to furnish far more than are likely to be required. Of the four ships to be recommissioned, the Briton alone belongs to Devonport, having been commissioned at that port in March, 1881. The Temeraire belongs to Portsmouth, and her usefulness on a station like the Mediterranean is demonstrated by the fact that this will be the second time she has been recommissioned abroad. By the time she returns to England at the end of her third commission, she will have been fully ten years in the Mediterranean. The other two are Sheerness vessels, where they were recommissioned, the Carysfort in September, 1880, and the Ranger in March, 1881. The Malabar, which takes the new crews out, will leave Portsmouth on the 4th prox., calling at Devonport on the following day for the embarkation of the local drafts.

Army & Navy Gazette.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 29, 1884.

LORD SALISBURY, on Thursday night, did good service in calling attention to the changes in, and the character of, the examinations at Sandhurst, in lowering the value of English composition, with the result, as he contended, that English literature will be swept out, and that candidates must take up Latin and Mathematics, or German and French, while a smaller value is attached to Natural Science and Physics. Lord Morley gave a very elaborate answer, minute and technical, in which he referred with more deference than, we confess, we at all feel, to the knowledge of Lord Enfield, and of the other Civil Service Commissioners. It is so large a question that even in the exhaustive and rather exhausting reply of the noble Earl, which certainly could not be found fault with for vagueness or want of specification, there were points left untouched which have a very practical effect on the minds of those who have to go through examinations, or are interested in their results. On the whole, we do not feel at all satisfied that the changes which we are told are intended to ensure a sounder education among officers, by assimilating the subjects of examination to those taught in the public schools, are likely to be obtained. The Duke of Cambridge's desire to do away with crammers is one which all parents and guardians share, but we really cannot see why his Royal Highness should be so anxious to make an observation, and not to give an opinion. It is very difficult to understand the idea that the condemnation of a particular movement is rather dangerous, if the movement itself be dangerous, too. But, anyway, the Duke of Cambridge's objections to cramming were completely disposed of in the hard, practical, and smashing manner for which Lord Salisbury is famous, hitting out straight from the shoulder, right and left, at friends or foes. He truly observed that "you will never get rid of cramming, as long as you have a system of competitive examinations. You might as well dream that it would be possible to have racers without trainers." In the end, what was the practical result? There were some speeches, good, bad, and indifferent; a great many details; some general principles; considerable diversity of opinion; results nil, except that Lord Salisbury expressed an opinion, in which most of us must agree, that there is no civilised country that treats its own tongue as badly as we do ours. We think that, on the whole, the country will agree with Lord Salisbury that if the object of the military authorities is the establishment of sympathy between them and the public schools, then constant changes and reversals are mischievous, and that the authorities are pursuing their object in a dangerous way. In his own words, if there is a difference of opinion between the great public authorities presiding over the education of officers and those who direct the public schools, it is the former who should hold out, and not the latter. When, in deference to the wishes of the Public Schools, any particular branch of education is abandoned, the influence of public opinion to which they ought to be subjects is lost, and by deferring to schools in educational matters, systems and methods of education which public opinion is condemning may be perpetuated, to the detriment of the service.

A correspondent calls our attention to the remark, in the excellent speech of Sir Archibald Alison, that England might be proud of the York and Lancaster Regiment, and observes that, according to the names, it would appear that Ireland might be proud of them, too. Our correspondent, however, overlooks the fact, as it well may be, that those Irish names were borne by men who had been enlisted in the districts in which the regiment was raised,—descendants of the Irish settlers to be found in considerable numbers in Lancashire and Yorkshire. "X" may be quite sure that all possible credit will be taken, in Ireland at all events, and that the claims established on the national gratitude by the appearance of the names of killed and wounded in the Gazette will not be overlooked on the other side of the Channel.

Captain C. H. Des Vœux, Bengal Staff Corps, has been appointed Infantry Staff Officer and Instructor of Musketry to the Queensland Volunteer Force for three years.

It has been intimated to officers commanding battalions of Infantry whose Serjeant-Instructors of Musketry, abolished by G.O. 50 of 1883, have been absorbed, or are otherwise not available for reappointment on April 1 next, that the new appointments will not be made until it is known whether the non-commissioned officers who hold these appointments in the linked battalions on foreign service will be sent home. In the meantime, Acting Serjeant-Instructors may be appointed to carry out the duties.

A Committee on "Moveable Field Hospital Equipment" has been appointed. Members:—Colonel R. Harrison, C.B., C.M.G., R.E., A.Q.M.G. of the Aldershot Division; Surgeon-General W. A. MacKinnon, C.B.; Deputy-Commissary-General of Ordnance J. T. Barrington.

The following appeared in the Morning Post of Monday:—"Major A. N. White, R.A., has been selected for the appointment of Instructor at the School of Artillery Range-Finding, at Aldershot, in succession to Major E. Bainbridge, R.A." This information appeared in our columns on Saturday last. Scarcely a day passes but the Standard and Morning Post reproduce, without acknowledgment, information which is culled from our pages. We cannot, for a moment, suppose that the editors of these papers can be aware of the dishonesty which is being practised by some members of their staff. We do not, of course, object to our contemporaries making use of information which appears in our pages, but they might, at least, acknowledge the source whence that information is obtained.

DEATH OF THE DUKE OF ALBANY.

ONE more great sorrow to be borne by Her who has suffered so much! One more cruel bereavement to be added to the many which have afflicted the Royal Lady whose sympathy with the feelings of her people causes them to regard her grief as if it were their own! Terrible in its suddenness as was the news which shocked the nation last night, almost the first thought connected with the dreadful event which took from us one who had won so high a place in the estimation of his countrymen as the Duke of Albany, was expressed in the words which were uttered by many in the groups assembled to learn the details of his death, "The poor Queen!" All the surroundings of the calamity are in the last degree melancholy. The last news from Cannes represented the Prince as being in better health than he had been for years past. The life and soul of the society which rejoiced in the presence of the Duke and Duchess of Albany, who won all hearts and charmed all who approached them by their affability, kindness, and ready participation in the amusements of the place, their Royal Highnesses were looking forward to a reunion which would gather round the Queen, at the marriage of her granddaughter presently, all the members of the Royal Family who could be spared from their duties; and it was hoped that, in the happiness of the youthful couple, her Majesty might for a time find consolation. There was every promise of a gay season, and the return of the Duke and his young wife to London was looked forward to as one of the contributions to its graces and its pleasures. It was regarded with a deeper interest by those who were aware of the powerful aid which the Prince's rare acquirements and culture would enable him to give to the furtherance of the serious work and worthy objects he had promoted by his advocacy and patronage. Well might the Queen say, "Miser, ego miseris succurrere disco!" and if it could be any alleviation of her sorrow to know that the nation laments with her over her son, it is hers in full measure. His Royal Highness was a Colonel on the Active List of January 21, 1882, and was Colonel of the 3rd Battalion (Highland Rifle Militia) of the Seaforth (Ross-shire Buffs, the Duke of Albany's), but the delicacy of his health for some years previous to his marriage did not permit him to take any very active part in Military duties. He appeared to be much benefited by his residence at Cannes, and only the night before his death he was at a brilliant ball given by the Bachelors' Club, of which he was President, and remained till late. On Thursday night the Prince had dinner at the Club, and set out to walk home, having to mount the high hill so well known to the visitors at Cannes, and, according to our information, he was attacked by hæmorrhage, which proved fatal at 2.30 yesterday morning. The Houses did not adjourn on the announcement of the Prince's death last night, as there was, it seems, no precedent for it; but the melancholy event will cast a great gloom over Society and the country, and break up many of the arrangements which were made by the Royal Family, involving very widespread consequences. Prince Leopold George Duncan Albert, K.G., Earl of Clarence and Baron Arklow, Prince of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, was born at Buckingham Palace on April 7, 1853. He matriculated at the University of Oxford in 1872, and was created a D.C.L. in 1876. On his attaining his majority, Parliament voted him a grant of £15,000 a year; and in May, 1881, his Royal Highness was created a Peer of the Realm, with the title of the Duke of Albany. On April 27, 1882, he was married at Windsor Castle to Princess Frederica Augusta, daughter of his Serene Highness the Prince of Waldeck and Pyrmont, and an additional £10,000 a year was voted to him by Parliament.

In consequence of the death of his Royal Highness the Duke of Albany, Lord Northbrook's reception at the Admiralty for April 2 is postponed to Wednesday, April 23.

The Morning Post and Standard are in the habit of giving their readers day by day what they call military news. But this same "news" is generally several weeks old, and is simply taken from our own columns. The Standard, for instance, announced on Monday that "General Sir John Lintorn Simmons, G.C.B., has been offered, and has accepted, the position of Governor and Commander-in-Chief of Malta, in succession to Sir A. Borton, whose term of command will expire in June next." This information appeared in our columns a month ago. On Saturday our contemporary had the following:—"The Queen has approved of Major-General T. C. Lyons, C.B., being appointed to command the Infantry Brigade at Aldershot, vice Major-General M. Walker, V.C., C.B., transferred to command the Infantry at Gibraltar, to date from April 1 next." This announcement was made in our columns a fortnight ago.

At this time last year, Colonel Synge, whose death has been just reported from Egypt, was recovering from an illness which appeared at one time very likely to be fatal; and now we learn, with very great regret, that he has succumbed to what was probably the result of the severe attack of dysentery by which he was prostrated for many weeks in the German hospital at Alexandria. All who know him will share the sorrow we express for the loss, in the prime of his life, of a gallant soldier and a perfect gentleman. His name, at one time, was known through the length and breadth of these isles; for the capture by brigands near Salonica, where he had a property, of Colonel Synge, created unusual interest, and it was feared that he would meet the fate which befell the unhappy gentlemen who were taken off by the robbers at Marathon some years before. He was a man of great personal strength and of commanding stature; and his powers of enforcing discipline and ordering men were well exemplified in the control he had over the rather disorderly elements of the Gendarmerie, to one of the chief commands of which he was appointed soon after Baker Pasha was entrusted with the organisation of that unfortunate force. Among his old comrades in the Army, in Greece, and in Egypt, the death of Colonel Synge will be sincerely mourned.

It is stated by a contemporary that two vacancies have been created among the Militia Aides-de-Camp to the Queen by the deaths of the Marquis of Donegal and the Earl of Sandwich. The Marquis of Donegal's vacancy has been filled by Colonel the Earl of Meath, 5th Battalion, Royal Dublin Fusiliers, and the demise of Lord Sandwich, who was an extra aide-de-camp, creates no vacancy.

An Indian paper makes a bitter thrust in a paragraph announcing the hanging of a soldier named Day. "Poor man!" it says, "in an evil hour he took a white man's life, and so he had to go without the benefit of the plea of "diseased spleen." He was tried in the Lahore Chief Court, found guilty, and sentenced to capital punishment for murdering a comrade. Of course, there was no agitation for a reprieve, and he was hanged." Our readers, with Indian experience, need not be told the meaning of the observation respecting the spleen. Even the more moderate papers among the Indian Press indulge in jibes and comments indicative of a very evil animus; but we must say that if some of the facts we see stated as excuses for such remarks be true, there should be inquiry, and if the facts be true, punishment. In Reis and Rayyet of March 1 an outrage from Ahmedabad is reported, on the part of two soldiers, Europeans, who beat some villagers, because they would not allow them to drink out of their pots. The natives offered to lead them to a tank, but that did not suffice. The editor adds:—"It is this impunity which encourages these offenders to multiply outrages upon poor natives." In the same paper it is reported that a native shekarry, who was in attendance upon a European official, shot game close to a village, and was deprived of his gun by the villagers. He reported the matter to his master, who was encamped close at hand, whereupon the latter summoned the whole of the villagers to appear before him. They came out, "a trembling mass of humanity" (a good phrase, to please the Baboo English), among which the shekarry identified the offenders. "They were," goes on the writer, "bound separately on trees, and unmercifully belaboured, the master flogging one and the shekarry flogging another. When their madness was appeased, the villagers were ordered to produce the gun, and were told that the village would be burned down, if it were not forthcoming." The gun appeared, and "the worthy duet," as the Reis and Rayyet calls them, having levied a fine of a certain number of rupees, retired! No names are given, and it is very probable the whole matter is an invention. These feathers are an unpleasant indication of the direction of the wind.

The Liverpool Courier asks a most pertinent question affecting the provincial Volunteers. The Metropolitan Volunteer officers have been meeting together, under military authority, to discuss the wants of the force. The Courier desires to know whether similar meetings will be permitted in the provinces, and points out that there are many wants of the Metropolitan Volunteers which do not affect the provinces, while on the other hand the metropolitans have most important advantages to which the others are strangers.

The Navy.

Syra, Friday, March 14.

We left Suda Bay last Tuesday afternoon, the 11th, at 2 o'clock. H.M.S. Alexandra remained at anchor there, expecting to receive orders shortly to proceed to Malta. We stood out in columns of divisions line ahead, the columns two cables apart till we cleared the entrance of the harbour. After proceeding under easy steam during the night, we arrived off Santorin at 8 o'clock the next morning. The island of Santorin is a narrow strip of high land, running nearly north and south, roughly crescent-shaped, with several detached islands between the horns, on the western side; the cliffs, which are high and almost perpendicular, have a very remarkable appearance, showing the various strata of which the island is formed with great distinctness. There are two or three large villages perched along the top of the cliffs; the houses come close up to the edges, and look as if a very slight convulsion of nature would send detachments of them sliding down to the bottom. They are very closely packed together, and are so white as, at a few miles' distance, to resemble snow on the tops of the hills. Three small islands, the Kaimeni Islands, which form the central group of the detached islands nearest the main land, are volcanic; they are mere heaps of cinders and lava, and a light, sulphurous smoke can be plainly seen issuing from the highest point of the largest of them, where the crater is situated; in fact, the whole place is volcanic. It was once a circular island, but at some remote date the present small islands were separated from the main land by a great eruption. There are two anchorages, one outside between Aspro Island, the southern of the detached islands, and the south-west point of the main island, and the other inside, between the Kaimeni Islands and the main land. We approached the islands in pairs, in group order, the Minotaur and Neptune forming the first group, the Sultan and Achilles the second, and the Agincourt and Northumberland the third; the second and third groups anchored in the outer roads and the first group separated, the Neptune going out for target practice, and the Minotaur proceeding inside and coming to in the inner anchorage. A number of officers landed for a few hours, some visiting the Kaimeni Islands to have a look at the crater, while others climbed the winding road that leads from the small port at the foot of the cliff, where the island traders embark and discharge their cargoes, to visit the principal village and the country beyond. At 4 o'clock the Neptune returned, and went inside to join the Minotaur. The second and third groups weighed, and, led by the Agincourt, proceeded in line ahead through the southern passage, and joined the first group. The Squadron then resumed their usual formation of divisions, and went on in single-column line ahead, passed along the western side of the island, between the small islands and the main, and out through the northern passage. We afterwards passed between the island of Nios and Sikinos, and then between Paros and Siphenos, after which we formed columns of divisions line ahead, and shaped course for this place. We arrived here yesterday morning at 8 o'clock. As there is not room for all of us in the Bay, the 1st Division—Minotaur, Neptune, and Sultan—anchored off the town, and the second—Agincourt, Northumberland, and Achilles—about a mile and a half to the southward, between Gaidaro Island and the mainland. We found the Forward inside the mole, as she had come straight from Suda Bay. Yesterday afternoon, the combined bands played on shore, in the square. There was a large attendance of the good people of Syra, who appeared to thoroughly enjoy and appreciate the music. We have received all our back mails that we had missed at Terra Nova and Suda since we arrived here. We now get a Fleet telegram every day we are in harbour, and sometimes more than one, if there is anything of special import. They are received on board the flagship, and semaphored to the rest of the squadron. Their arrival is looked forward to with great eagerness just at present. The Achilles left this morning to return to Suda Bay, taking invalids and supernumeraries, whom she will turn over to the Alexandra for passage to Malta and England. Among others she takes several sub-lieutenants from different ships of the Squadron, who have been appointed to training-brigs for the summer season. We leave at 6.30 a.m. to-morrow for Rhodes.

The ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE this week contains four pages extra.

Several Naval and Military letters are in type, but are forced to stand over through want of space.

Tuesday's Gazette contains a long list of Soldiers' Unclaimed Balances.

The ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE exchanges with or receives the following Service papers abroad:—L'Avenir Militaire; Bulletin de la Réunion des Officiers; L'Armée Française; L'Italia Militare; Rivista Europea; Rivista Militare; Memorial de Ingenieros; La France Militaire; Moniteur de la Flotte; Le Progrès Militaire; Der Veteran; Streffleur's Oesterreichische Militärische Zeitschrift; Jahrbücher für die Deutsche Armee und Marine; Militär Wochenblatt; Giornale d'Artiglieria e Genio; Organ der Militär-Wissenchaftlichen Vereine; Vedette; Deutsche Heeres Zeitung; Militärische Zeitschrift; Armeeblatt, Wien; Army and Navy Journal of New York; The American, Philadelphia; Revista Maritima Brazileira; in addition to all the home and colonial professional periodicals and journals.

The barbette ship Collingwood, built at Pembroke Dockyard, made a trial of her engines outside Milford Harbour on Wednesday. A speed of nearly 12 knots was obtained at three-quarters speed. After the trial the Collingwood proceeded direct for Portsmouth, where she will be completed for sea.

An order was received at Sheerness Dockyard on Wednesday directing the Wanderer, Dolphin, and Ready to be commissioned for foreign service. The Dolphin and Wanderer were recently built for the Government at Middlesbrough, and the Ready has just completed a thorough overhaul and repair, at a cost of £13,000.

New crews were selected at the Naval Barracks at Sheerness on Wednesday for her Majesty's ships Carysfort and Ranger, both of which are stationed at Suakim. The men will be conveyed to the Red Sea in one of the Indian troopships.

The Turquoise, attached to the 4th Division of the Medway Steam Reserve, having undergone a preliminary trial of her machinery, is now being brought forward for the relief of the Tourmaline, senior officer's ship on the coast of Madagascar.

Major-Gen. T. Wright, appointed in succession to Gen. W. T. Hughes, arrived at Bombay on Feb. 21. Lieut. E. L. Wright, 2nd Cavalry, Hyderabad Contingent, will probably be appointed A.D.C.

SPECTACLES v. BLINDNESS.—Imperfectly adapted Spectacles are the cause of most cases of blindness and defective vision. Mr. H. LAURANCE, F.S.S., Oculist Optician, 1A Old Bond Street (late 39), has made the adaptation of spectacles his especial and sole study for upwards of thirty years. Testimonials from Earl Lindsay, Sir Julius Benedict, F. D. Dixon Hartland, Esq., M.P., Thomas Cook, Esq., the well-known Tourist Agent, &c. Pamphlet, containing valuable suggestions, post free. City Branches, 6 Poultry, and 22 Fenchurch Street, E.C.

Capt. A. H. Markham and the torpedo officers of H.M.S. Vernon have decided on presenting a sword, with a finely-tempered steel blade, to Capt. A. K. Wilson, of the Hecla, in lieu of the one that broke in his hand while protecting a Marine from no less than three assailants, in the hand-to-hand scuffle that ensued on the sword breaking Capt. Wilson himself being cut down and wounded. The sword, which is from Messrs. Wilkinson and Sons, the well-known establishment in Pall Mall, the best sword-makers in England, has the following inscription on it:—"To Capt. A. K. Wilson, R.N., from the Captain and torpedo officers of H.M.S. Vernon, in admiration of his gallantry at the battle of El Teb, Feb. 29, 1884;" and on the reverse the crest and motto of H.M.S. Vernon. The former is a torpedo-boat with a torpedo in position, and the words "Magna pericla latent" in an arc above, and the latter is the Vernon motto, "Vernon semper viret," in a ribbon. The work has been beautifully executed, and the sword goes out to the Soudan by the hands of a brother-officer.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS.—CHEST AND STOMACH COMPLAINTS.—The source and centre of almost every ailment is impurity of the blood; dislodge this poison, and disease departs. Holloway's Pills exercise the inestimable power of thoroughly cleansing each component of the blood, and rendering the fluid fit to perform its important functions. They cope most successfully with chest diseases, stomach complaints, liver disorders, and many other maladies, which were once the besetting dangers of mankind at certain seasons in town and country. The directions for use enable every one to regulate the operations of these Pills with the greatest nicety. Chronic invalids, valetudinarians, and all whom other treatment has failed to relieve, are respectfully invited to try Holloway's celebrated medicine, which will strengthen and cure them.

"Recommends itself not alone to those of limited means, but to the wealthy, who, when frequenting large gatherings, whether at racecourses, theatres, public meetings, or even on that sacred thoroughfare, the king's highway, have known what it is to be robbed of their valuables."

OROIDE GOLD WATCHES,
The "SERVICE" KEYLESS WATCH,
Open face, jewelled in eight holes, Two Guineas, post free.

"The watches of this patent are in no respect different from gold ones. The degree of finish, of course, regulates the price, but the cheapest class is capable of performing with accuracy for from fifteen to twenty-five years. As to strength and solidity, the Oroide cases are undoubtedly superior to those of gold watches. No other form of amalgam can rival Mr. Rowe's in the general essentials of a substitute for gold."

"Thousands of persons who, though not wishing to impose on their friends by a display of what is but a semblance of the real metal, have not been indisposed to find an equally good-looking metal, which, reproduced in a watch, a chain, or article of jewellery, would not be a costly thing to buy, nor a dear thing to lose." OROIDE GOLD SCARF PINS, 2s 6d to 5s, post free.
LINKS and STUDS, Complete Suite, 5s 6d, 6s 6d.
ALBERT CHAINS, in all the Leading Fashions of fine Gold, 7s 6d and 10s 6d.

THUS 4 lb. of TWO-SHILLING TEA can be sent to any address free, by post, on receipt of 8s 3d. Thus 6 lb. of Half-Crown Tea can be sent free of post on receipt of 15s 3d. Thus 5 lb. of Three-Shilling Tea can be sent free of post on receipt of 15s 3d.

THE POSTAL LIMIT of 7 lb. will only really cover 6 lb. of Tea, as the weight of paper and twine has to be deducted, so that COOPER COOPER and CO. will send 6 lb. of Three-Shilling Tea free of post for 18s 3d, or 6 lb. of Two-and-Sixpenny Tea free of post for 15s 3d, or 6 lb. of Two-Shilling Tea free of post for 12s 3d.

PACKAGES containing 12 lb., 20 lb., 60 lb., or 100 lb. of TEA will be sent to any railway station in the United Kingdom absolutely free of carriage on receipt of remittance for the value of the Tea.

THE PARCELS POST.—4 lb., 5 lb., or 6 lb. of TEA will be delivered free of charge at your own houses by the postman, for 3d in addition to the cost of the tea.

THUS 4 lb. of TWO-SHILLING TEA will be delivered free at your own house for a remittance of 8s 3d. Thus 5 lb. of Two-Shilling Tea will be delivered free at your own door for a Post-Office Order for 10s 3d. Thus 6 lb. of Two-Shilling Tea will be sent free to your own homes for a cheque for 12s 3d.

THE PARCELS POST.—4 lb., 5 lb., or 6 lb. of THREE-SHILLING TEA despatched to any part of England, Wales, Scotland, or Ireland, by post for 3d in addition to the price of the Tea.

THUS 4 lb. of THREE-SHILLING TEA can be sent to the remotest address on receipt of remittance for 12s 3d. Thus 5 lb. of Three-Shilling Tea will be forwarded to any place where letters are delivered, postage paid, for 15s 3d. Thus 6 lb. of Three-Shilling Tea will be sent to any address in any postal district in these islands for 18s 3d.

TEAS of all descriptions on COOPER COOPER and CO.'S LIST, posted in parcels containing 4 lb., 5 lb., and 6 lb. each by parcels post to any part of England, Wales, Ireland, or Scotland, in exchange for cash (in registered envelope). Post-Office Orders, cheques, postal orders, or stamps for the value of the tea, and 3d extra.

FOR example, a Package containing 4 lb. of TWO-SHILLING TEA can be sent to any place in the United Kingdom in exchange for 8s 3d in cash, enclosed in a registered envelope, and addressed to any of COOPER COOPER and CO.'S establishments in London.

OR, a Parcel containing 6 lb. of TWO-SHILLING TEA can be delivered by parcels post, carriage free, by remitting a Post-Office Order for 12s 3d.

OR, 5 lb. of TWO-SHILLING TEA will be despatched, free of post, for a postal order for 10s, and three penny postage stamps.

THUS, in the same manner, THREE-SHILLING TEA in parcels to the value of 12s 3d, 15s 3d, and 18s 3d each, containing respectively 4 lb., 5 lb., and 6 lb. of tea, will be sent on receipt of postal orders, cheques, or cash for the several amounts.

CO-OPERATION. — COOPER COOPER and CO. also invite attention to the new System of Co-operation in the purchase of Tea by persons living in the country through the medium of the Parcels Post.

CO-OPERATION.—Thus, as COOPER COOPER and CO. are enabled to send packages containing 6 lb. of any of the Choice TEAS on their List to any place in the United Kingdom for 3d, it follows that if six families in a village are willing to club together, each can have a pound of tea sent for one halfpenny.

CO-OPERATION.—Or, as two parcels containing 6 lb. each can be sent for 6d, six families would be enabled, by joining together in one remittance, to order 2 lb. of TWO-SHILLING TEA each, at a cost of one penny only, in addition to the price of the tea.

CO-OPERATION.—This system will apply to every kind of TEA offered for Sale by COOPER COOPER and CO., and if followed out will practically enable them to place before customers in every county town and village in England, Scotland, Ireland, and Wales, in the Channel Islands, and the Isle of Man, in the Hebrides, and the Orkneys, Tea of the same choice kinds as sold in their various Establishments in London, at the same prices, with the addition of the nominal sum of one halfpenny a pound.

THE OPERATIONS IN THE SOUDAN.

The Special Correspondent of the Times, whose despatch is dated "Waters of Tamanieb, March 27, 11 a.m.," says:—

"The force bivouacking at Buller's zariba, passed a quiet night. The regiments paraded at 5 a.m., and advanced at 5.40 in two squares, in échelon of brigades; the 1st Brigade, under Gen. Buller, leading. The first square was composed of the Gordon Highlanders, the Royal Irish Fusiliers, and two companies of the King's Royal Rifle Corps. Four nine-pounders, under Major Holley, and two seven-pounders of the Camel Baty., were stationed between the two Brigades.

"The 2nd Brigade, under Gen. Davis, followed. The square consisted of the Black Watch (Royal Highlanders), the Royal Marines and details, and the detachment of the York and Lancaster Regiment. Capt. Chermside's natives were on the left flank of the 2nd Brigade, to be used as occasion required.

"The Cavalry and Mounted Infantry, on the front and flanks, were scouting the entire country for a radius of two miles. Gen. Graham and his staff rode about a quarter of a mile in front of the 1st Brigade.

"For the first few miles our route lay over practicable ground, along the bottom of the valley leading to the khor; but further on, the valley began to wind and take a long circuitous direction round the bases of the hills. The troops, therefore, climbed these hills, and advanced along the rocky ridge. After proceeding another mile the ground became broken and difficult. It was covered with loose rolling stones, and strewn here and there with huge boulders. The infantry advanced slowly, making frequent short halts, in order to avoid tiring the troops more than was necessary.

"Meanwhile the Cavalry and the Mounted Infantry, following the course taken yesterday, had advanced towards the khor. The Mounted Infantry engaged the enemy shortly after 7 o'clock. Major Gough, with a squadron of the 10th Hussars, was scouting on the extreme right front and flank, and a squadron of the 19th Hussars was disposed in a similar way on the left. From the summit of a hill, whence he could watch the enemy's movements, Gen. Stewart directed the action of the Cavalry.

"The Mounted Infantry advanced steadily and cautiously, driving the rebels from behind the rocks, where they crouched firing. After some time, as the Mounted Infantry became scattered in various directions, Gen. Stewart despatched two squadrons of the 19th Hussars, acting as a dismounted force, to support them. The rebels clung to the rocks with great tenacity, and replied vigorously to our fire. It required, indeed, very excellent firing to dislodge them.

"During all this time the Infantry was halted near the tall hill already mentioned, where water was served to the men, who suffered cruelly from thirst. After a halt of 15 minutes they again advanced; but by the time the 1st Brigade was within shooting distance, the morning's work was practically over. There remained some 50 scattered rebels among the rocks. In order to dislodge these, and to give a wholesome warning to any others who were possibly concealed, Major Holley brought up his guns, and threw two or three shells into the khor. This finished the contest. A few more desultory shots were fired, and then all was still. The cavalry pushed forward into the khor, and took possession of a stream of water running along the bed within.

"The whole force is now drinking at the stream.

"In half an hour we shall advance and take the village, which is about a mile distant from us.

LATER.

"A few minutes after the dispatch of my last message, the Cavalry and Mounted Infantry were paraded, and ordered to advance up the khor, following the course of the stream, the village being situated about half a mile from the nearest point where the troops were watering. The infantry remained at the watering-place, and the artillery was posted on the heights.

"The Mounted Infantry led, the enemy firing at them in a desultory manner from the heights. Our men, however, by their excellent shooting, soon forced the few rebel riflemen who remained to quit their positions. Gens. Graham and Stewart and their staffs accompanied the Cavalry. The khor winds considerably, and splits into two or three smaller ravines, in one of which was situated the village of Tamanieb, consisting of some 300 huts. Round the village we found traces of large flocks and of droves of camels, but no loot of any description was discovered in the huts. The khor was of very wild and picturesque appearance. On either side perpendicular rocks rose to a height of seven or eight hundred feet. Occasionally we could see through our glasses some of the rebels perched here and there on the summits of the rocks; some having rifles, others being without them. When these men saw that they were perceived, they at once hid behind the boulders. Of course, it was impossible to get at them by any means whatever.

"The village was burnt. The Mounted Infantry explored the ravine in all directions to find out if any body of the enemy were lurking in the neighbourhood. None having been found, the men returned to the watering-place, and then all the troops were ordered to retire.

"The force accordingly marched back to Buller's zariba, the Cavalry and Mounted Infantry covering the rear. Gen. Graham went to the first zariba, and the troops are to follow in the morning. Gen. Stewart, with the Cavalry, has returned to Suakim, and the Infantry will follow to-morrow.

"All the work this morning fell on the Cavalry and Mounted Infantry. Of the Cavalry force, Major Gough, with his squadron of the 10th Hussars, had the hardest work to do, and he did it admirably. The Mounted Infantry deserve all possible credit for the operations carried out by them. The steadiness and daring of the men proved clearly how great was their confidence in their officers, who are all picked men. To Capt. Humphreys and his officers is due the present admirable state of efficiency of this branch of the service, which during this short but brilliant campaign has performed most admirable work.

"As the troops are now returning to Suakim, and as it is impossible to pursue Osman Digna with any hope of success, it may now at last be said that the campaign is over.

"I hear that 500 natives are to proceed within three or four days to open up the road to Berber. Personally, I believe that no opposition will be offered to any advance of natives on Berber. Caravans have already come thence, and there is no reason why caravans should not go there.

"It is hard to say how many rebels were present at the fight to-day. They perhaps numbered 500, but certainly there were not more. This shows that Osman Digna's influence is waning, if not entirely lost. All that now remains to do is to reassure the natives. This will be a work of time, but it had better, perhaps, be left to time and diplomacy than to the action of an armed force."

We have received the following communications from the War Office:—From Major-Gen. Sir G. Graham to the Secretary of State for War (despatched Suakim, March 26, 7.45 p.m., received 7.50 p.m.).—"Near Tamanieb March 26, 1884, 4 p.m.—Day being cooler, one brigade of Infantry followed Cavalry, starting at 11 a.m. About 50 men fell out from heat, and were brought on in ambulances; no serious cases. Infantry have arrived at entrance of broad rocky valley, very difficult, if not impassable, for wheels. Cavalry seven or eight miles in front in heliographic communication."

Message received from Gen. Stewart at 3.50 p.m., March 26:—"Pushed on towards enemy, who opened fire from position over a mile long. Difficult to estimate strength, but drove back several lots of 20 or 30. Ground bad, so shall fall back gently on you.' 'I am concentrating in zariba, and will advance to-morrow on enemy's position, if, by report of cavalry, it is practicable."

From Major-Gen. Sir G. Graham to the Secretary of State for War (despatched Suakim, March 27, 11.10 a.m., received 11 a.m.):—"Zariba, near Tamanieb, March 27, 1884, 5 a.m.—Yesterday Gordon Highlanders and Irish Fusiliers, with 9-pr. battery, four guns, advanced at 11 a.m., followed by convoy with camel battery, six guns, and Royal Marines at noon. At 4 p.m., on receipt of message from Stewart, telegraphed to you yesterday, I formed zariba here, and heliographed for Royal Highlanders and Rifles, who arrived at 8 p.m. in excellent condition, not a man having fallen out. Evening cool. Réveillé sounded this morning at 3.30, and troops are now in formation for advancing upon Tamanieb, Cavalry in front, Infantry in échelon of brigade squares, guns between brigades. Col. Colville has returned to duty. No men sick in advanced zariba."

Telegram from Sir G. Graham to Secretary of State for War, dated Valley of Tamanieb, March 27, 10 a.m., received 5.30 p.m. (despatched, Suakim, 4.30 p.m.):—"Have occupied enemy's position and springs without serious opposition; enemy firing a few shots and retiring on approach of infantry. No casualties. Ground very rocky, unfit for Cavalry; very difficult for Artillery. Cavalry and Mounted Infantry had no water since yesterday morning, and have worked splendidly. I, after watering, shall reconnoitre up valley and retire on zariba occupied last night. Water supply on (sic). Troops in excellent condition. As yet see no signs of friendly tribes, and consider this position unfit for occupation."

From Major-Gen. Sir G. Graham to the Secretary of State for War (despatched, Suakim, March 27, 4.30 p.m., received 5.15 p.m.):—"Tamanieb, March 27, 1884, 1.30 p.m.—Force returning to zariba occupied last night, after burning Osman Digna's villages, having met with no opposition worth mentioning. Two horses killed Mounted Infantry."

From Major-Gen. Sir G. Graham to the Secretary of State for War. (Telegram.) Suakim, March 28, 1884, 7 a.m.:—"Arrived here with staff and cavalry last night. Infantry bivouacked at advanced zariba 17 miles to front, excepting York and Lancaster, left in near zariba, 10 miles to front; whole move at daybreak this morning towards Suakim. Sun powerful, but there is a fresh north breeze which blows in the men's faces returning, and makes heat endurable. Officers commanding brigades, acting on medical reports, will keep all weakly men at nearest zariba for to-night. Orders have been given for frequent and long halts, and plenty of water will be taken."

A Supplement to the London Gazette was issued on Thursday evening, with the despatches which have been received at the War Office and the Admiralty concerning the operations around Suakim. The following are the principal letters:—

FROM MAJOR-GEN. SIR G. GRAHAM, COMMANDING TOKAR EXPEDITIONARY FORCE.

Camp, Tokar, March 2, 1884.

MY LORD,—I have the honour to submit the following report on the operations of the Tokar Expeditionary Force since the 28th ult.

In the despatch then sent I informed the Chief of the Staff in Egypt that on the evening of that day I sent an officer to the front of Fort Baker, carrying a white flag on a staff, to which a letter was attached, calling upon the Sheikhs of the tribes to disperse their forces now in arms before Suakim, informing them that the English were not at war with the Arabs, and recommending them to send delegates to Khartoum to meet Gen. Gordon.

Capt. Harvey, who is on Gen. Baker's Staff, and now attached to my Intelligence Department, advanced about two miles, the latter part of which was under an ill-directed fire of musketry, and after planting his staff, he retired according to my instructions. The following morning, at daybreak, the same officer went out to see if any answer had arrived, but the staff, with all attached, had been taken away.

At about 8 o'clock a.m., I gave the order to advance in the formation of a rectangle, having an interior space of about 200 by 150 yards.

In front were the 1st Gordon Highlanders, in rear the 1st Royal Highlanders, on the right the 2nd Royal Irish Fusiliers (supported by four companies of the 3rd King's Royal Rifles), on the left the 1st York and Lancaster, supported by 380 of the Royal Marine Artillery and Light Infantry.

On the march, the front and rear faces moved in company columns of fours at company intervals, and the flank battalions in open columns of companies.

Intervals were left at the angles for the guns and Gatlings, the Naval Brigade occupying the front and the Royal Artillery the rear angles.

The men marched off with their water-bottles filled and one day's rations.

The only transport animals were those carrying ammunition and surgical appliances, all being kept together in the centre of the square.

To secure my base, I had left a company of the 3rd King's Royal Rifles, all sick and weakly men, and all departmental details armed, under Lieut.-Col. Ogilvy, and three companies of the same corps at Fort Baker, with a Krupp gun and two bronze guns at each place, manned by the Royal Marine Artillery.

About an hour before daybreak, on Feb. 29, there was a short, but heavy fall of rain, which caused the ground for the first two miles of the march to be very heavy; the Naval Brigade and Royal Artillery dragged their guns by hand, so that frequent halts had to be made to rest the men.

The front and left of the square was covered by a squadron of the 10th Hussars, the right by a troop of the 19th Hussars, the Cavalry being in rear under Brigdr.-Gen. Stewart. About 10 a.m. reports came in from the front that the enemy were entrenched on our left, on which I inclined the square to the right, but about 11.20 a.m. I found that we were immediately opposite to a work armed with two Krupp guns, whose position had not been reported to me by the reconnoitring party, so I moved the column still more to the right, on which the guns of the enemy opened fire with case and shell. Fortunately, aim was bad, so that few casualties occurred, and I succeeded in getting on the left flank of the work which was on the proper left rear of the enemy's line.

The square was now halted, men ordered to lie down, and four guns of the Royal Artillery and machine-guns were brought into action at a range of about 900 yards; the practice from the guns was carried on with remarkable accuracy and great deliberation, and with the help of the machine-guns of the Naval Brigade, which poured in a stream of bullets, the two Krupp guns were completely silenced, as they were taken slightly in reverse, and the gunners were driven from the guns.

The Infantry now advanced, the square moving by its left face, which, by the flank movement, was opposite to the work attacked. The fighting-line was, therefore, composed of the 1st York and Lancaster, supported by the Royal Marines, the 1st Gordon Highlanders and 1st Royal Highlanders moving in column of fours on either flank, the rear of the square being formed of the 3rd King's Royal Rifles and the 2nd Royal Irish Fusiliers. The York and Lancaster advanced steadily till within a short distance of the works, when, with a cheer, a rush was made to the front, and, assisted by the Blue-jackets on the right, who managed to bring their guns into the fighting-line, the work was carried and the guns captured; the enemy made several desperate counter-attacks, sometimes singly and sometimes in groups, on the advancing line, many hand-to-hand fights taking place with the York and Lancaster and men of the Naval Brigade.

About 12.20 p.m., the battery which is marked "A" on the accompanying plan was taken, with two Krupp guns and a brass howitzer.

At this period the Cavalry, under Brig.-Gen. Stewart, moved round the present right flank of the square, and charged in three lines across the plain to its right front where the enemy were in large numbers, who attacked the flanks of the lines, so that they had to change front in order to shake them off. Col. Barrow, of the 19th Hussars, was severely wounded in executing one of these charges, when, I regret to say, many other casualties occurred.

The enemy, as reported by Brigdr.-Gen. Stewart, fought simply with fanaticism, and spared no wounded or dismounted men, although in most cases, instantly paying their penalty with their own lives; and it is to the desperate character of the struggle that the large proportion of deaths in the Cavalry Brigade is to be attributed.

The enemy were still in possession of the village and wells of Teb, but by the capture of the work on his left flank my infantry had got in rear of his position, and the captured guns were turned on another work also armed with two Krupp guns, which they took in reverse. These captured guns were admirably worked by Major Tucker, of the Royal Marine Artillery, and with the aid of the guns of the Royal Artillery the enemy's remaining battery was soon silenced. The enemy's infantry, however, still clung with desperate tenacity to the numerous rifle pits and entrenchments they had constructed, and large numbers occupied some buildings in the village, which were afterwards found filled with dead bodies; they seemed not to dream of asking for quarter, and when they found their retreat cut off would charge out singly or in scattered groups to hurl their spears in defiance at the advancing lines of infantry, falling dead, fairly riddled with bullets.

About 2 p.m. the battery marked "G" on plan, now abandoned, was occupied, and the whole position taken.

The enemy had now given up all ideas of further fighting, and the last work on the right of their line was occupied by the Gordon Highlanders without opposition, as they streamed away in the directions of Tokar and Suakim.

Nothing could be better than the dash with which the charges of the Cavalry were executed in the midst of a horde of desperate fanatics, who displayed extraordinary activity and courage, nor could anything exceed the cool deliberation and efficiency with which the Royal Artillery served their guns under fire, or the skill and gallantry displayed by the Naval Brigade in keeping up with the front line of infantry and protecting their own guns by hand-to-hand encounters with the enemy, when at least one deed of gallantry was executed of which I shall make a special report.

The first time the square came under fire was a very trying one for young troops, as we were then moving to a flank—an operation at all times difficult, and especially so when in such a cramped formation. A slight disorder occurred, which was, however, speedily rectified, and nothing could have been better than the steady advance on the first battery.

In advancing on the scattered entrenchments and houses, the formation became somewhat disordered, owing to the desire of the men on the flank faces of the square to fire to their front.

The Gordon Highlanders speedily rectified this, moving one half battalion into the fighting line, the other half being thrown back to guard against flank attacks.

The Royal Highlanders were somewhat out of hand. I would, however, beg to observe that the ground was a most difficult one to move over, and that the desperate tenacity with which the enemy held a house on the right of the Royal Highlanders caused the men to form in an irregular manner so as to pour a converging fire on it.

The other battalions, especially the York and Lancaster, which had several hand-to-hand encounters with the enemy, and the Royal Marines behaved with great steadiness and gallantry.

The 1st Gordon Highlanders, 3rd King's Royal Rifles, and 1st York and Lancaster also showed steadiness and good discipline under fire; the latter formed the left flank of the fighting line in the attack on the second position, when they advanced with great gallantry.

I append a list of killed and wounded, and deeply regret the numerous fatal casualties in the Cavalry Brigade of which I have already made mention.

The force of the enemy was difficult to estimate, and in my first telegram I put it at 10,000. Subsequent native testimony obtained makes me estimate it at 6,000 fighting men, and I am informed that they admit a loss of 1,500 killed.

In the immediate neighbourhood of Teb 825 dead bodies were counted, and I am informed that it is the custom of these people to carry off their dead when practicable. I am also informed that the women of the tribes were present with hatchets to despatch our wounded.

I must now beg to express my sense of the services of the officers holding responsible positions in the force I had the honour to command on this occasion, without whose loyal co-operation and self-devotion the Expedition could not have been carried out successfully.

Brigdr.-Gen. Sir Redvers Buller, V.C., K.C.M.G., C.B., who was specially appointed second-in-command, showed himself worthy of his high reputation as a thorough soldier and most valuable officer.

Major-Gen. Davis was most indefatigable in his exertions, and afforded me all possible assistance in preserving formation and discipline during the action, as he has done in expediting the disembarkation of troops since his arrival at Trinkitat.

Brigdr.-Gen. Stewart, C.B., showed himself, as he is known to be, a most able and daring leader of cavalry. My instructions to him were to avoid engaging the enemy until their formation was broken, and until they were in full retreat. The time of making the charge I left entirely to Brigdr.-Gen. Stewart, as I wished him to keep well away from my square, not knowing on which side it might be attacked.

We did not anticipate having to attack the enemy in an entrenched position, but thought he would come out and attack my square in large numbers, be repulsed, and then be cut up by the cavalry.

The charges actually made were upon masses of the enemy not yet engaged with my infantry, and although most gallantly and skilfully executed, the loss of officers and men is deeply to be regretted. As I have already had the honour to observe, the scouting and reconnoitring duties of the Cavalry Brigade were admirably performed, and I cannot too highly praise the ready efficiency of the Mounted Infantry, under Capt. Humphreys.

Among the many valuable Staff officers attached to this force, I would especially bring to your notice Lieut.-Col. Clery, my Assist.-Adjt.-Gen., who is an invaluable Staff officer, ready in resource, indefatigable in work, combined with coolness, excellent in temper, and with a thorough knowledge of his duties. I beg also to observe that Lieut.-Col. Clery is mentioned by both the officers commanding Infantry Brigades for his distinguished gallantry in the action of Feb. 29, when I also observed his extreme coolness and presence of mind.

My thanks are also due to Deputy-Surg.-Gen. M'Dowell, who has conducted the duties of the Medical Department to my entire satisfaction, and has shown great judgment and forethought in providing for the wants of the wounded, who have been well and promptly attended to.

Assist.-Comy.-Gen. Nugent has been indefatigable in arranging for getting up supplies. Although water transport is a most difficult thing to arrange for a force of this size, including so many horses and transport animals, the supply has never failed, although sometimes unavoidably late.

The supply of ordnance stores, under Assist.-Comy.-Gen. Mills, was also satisfactorily conducted.

Lieut.-Col. Ardagh, commanding Royal Engineer, was chief of the Intelligence Department. In both of these important positions he has given me great satisfaction, and I beg to recommend this and the above-named officers' valuable services for your Lordship's favourable consideration.

I propose forwarding the names of other officers who have distinguished themselves in a supplementary despatch, and to recommend them for favourable consideration.

I cannot, however, close this despatch without recording my sense of the great services rendered to the Expeditionary Force by Rear-Admiral Sir William Hewett. I cannot sufficiently express my admiration of the high sense of duty displayed by this officer under most trying circumstances.

Had Admiral Hewett himself been in command of the Expedition for the relief of Tokar he could not have done more to further its success.

Suakim was threatened with attack by an overpowering force, and a portion of the garrison were in actual mutiny; notwithstanding which, Admiral Hewett insisted on almost denuding his ships of sailors in order to give me the magnificent Naval Brigade, whose services I have in a previous part of this despatch endeavoured to depict.

Not satisfied with this, Admiral Hewett also gave me nearly 400 of the Marines and Marine Artillery—troops of the first quality. He also gave me the 1st Battalion of the York and Lancaster from Aden, although empowered to employ them for the defence of Suakim. Considering all these important services, and his constant readiness to give every assistance in furthering disembarkations, water supply, &c., I think I am justified in stating that it is impossible to over-estimate the services rendered by Rear-Admiral Sir William Hewett towards the Tokar Expedition.—I have, &c., GERALD GRAHAM, Major-Gen., Commanding Tokar Expeditionary Force.

P.S.—My thanks are also due to Lieut.-Gen. Baker Pasha for the valuable information and assistance rendered by him throughout the operations. Gen. Baker was, I regret to say, severely wounded in the early part of the action, on Feb. 29. His wound was in the face, and must have been very painful, notwithstanding which, after getting it dressed, he returned to the field, and only at the end of the action could I persuade him to retire to the base.

Chili, says the Panama Herald, has given orders for the construction of another ironclad, to cost two millions of dollars. What the purpose of the Chilians may be in making such important additions to their already respectable navy is not very apparent. Their immediate enemies, Peru and Bolivia, are reduced to such abject extremities that they have not been able to lift their heads for several years, and can scarcely be counted upon in any conflict which may arise in the near future. With no other Powers have they any questions likely to provoke war, unless it be with the United States, on account of the so-called unwarrantable interference of the latter recently in South-American affairs. Such an idea is, however, too huge a burlesque even for Chilian national pride to consider. One would suppose that Chili had had enough of big ironclads and powerful armies and all that during the past few years, and might be satisfied to rest on her laurels, and return to the prosecution of the arts of peace, whose victories are more satisfactory than those of war. Big armaments mean debt and consequent burdens on national life, and Chili should not, in such a matter, follow the disastrous example of her prostrate neighbour, Peru.

NAVY AND ARMY NOTES.—EGYPT.

Capts. Hunter, Molyneux, Lloyd, Smith-Dorrien, Tapp, and Chapman, with the acting rank of Major, and Lieuts. Eagar, Hawtaigne, La Ferriere, Hickman, Bartellot, Lovatt, Lysons, Crawford, Ternan, Gibb, Gregorie, Borrow, Daubeney, McBean, Surtees, Bray, Coles, and Wilbraham, with the acting rank of Capt., have been taken on the strength of the Egyptian Army from the date of their landing in Egypt.

Lieut. McBean has been ordered to Alexandria; Major Trotter, Lieuts. Daubeny and Bray to Assouan, where Major Trotter assumed temporary command of the 3rd Batn. Egyptian Army.

Orders have been issued to guards and sentries to prevent natives from entering barracks occupied by British troops, unless supplied with a pass.

VICTORIA HOSPITAL.—SUEZ.

The hospital is fully equipped for the sick and wounded, and an efficient staff of medical officers and nurses are on the spot. Major St. Clair is commandant. Fifteen non-commissioned officers and men of the Army Hospital Corps from Alexandria, and 13 of the same corps from Cairo, left for duty as soon as the news of the recent actions was received. Superintending Sister Jerrard and Nursing Sisters M. C. Jerrard and Thomas were sent from Alexandria. Surgs.-Major C. H. Y. Godwin and J. H. Jeffcoat, Surgs. R. P. Bond, J. A. Gormley, and W. H. Briggs (additional) are doing duty. Deputy Assist.-Comy.-Gen. of Ordnance Appelbee was also directed to proceed to Suez on duty.

THE ARMY AND NAVY CO-OPERATIVE EMIGRATION SOCIETY.

Major-Gen. Bray asks us to insert this letter, to explain the delay in bringing out the prospectus of the proposed "Army and Navy Co-operative Emigration Society":—"It has lately been suggested to me by a very high authority that British Columbia and Vancouver's Island are more suited to the class of emigrants whom we propose to emigrate than the other parts of the Canadian Dominion. The climate of the south and west coast and along the Fraser River is like that of England, in many parts superior, and perfectly suited to English emigrants. British Columbia has other advantages over the provinces east of the Rocky Mountains, as Chinese and Indian labour is procurable, and, under the Provincial Rules, military and naval settlers may acquire free grants of land by virtue of the Military and Naval Settlers Act of 1863. British Columbia is very highly spoken of by the two last Governors-General, Lord Dufferin and the Marquis of Lorne, in their official speeches. The Canadian and American lines of railway have brought British Columbia within easy range of emigration. The opening of the Panama Ship Canal will still further affect the future of the province. The prospectus had to be revised, but will be published in the Naval and Military papers as soon as possible. A meeting will then be called at Willis's Rooms, London, when a proposal will be laid before the united services, in the hope of obtaining their support, in order that selected blocks of land may be purchased this summer, and the matter forwarded as rapidly as possible. The proposal is to form a co-operative society for the united services, to meet the cases of officers and their families, or members of such families, desiring to proceed to the Colonies. It is expected that such a system would minimise, if not altogether remove, most of the difficulties in the way of successful colonisation, and would produce most beneficial results for officers, their sons and daughters, with limited incomes, who are unable to place their children in a position to earn a living in the mother-country."

The Press Association has received a copy of a letter, dated March 4, written by Lieut. Walter B. Almack, late of the Briton, describing the battle of Teb, where he was present with the Naval Brigade. He relates that he only landed at Trinkitat on the day of the battle, and was placed in command of the left-half battery. They opened fire at the enemy's guns at 900 yards, and then advanced, the 65th Regt. forming the face of the square, backed by Marines. Lieut. Almack corroborates the war correspondents as to the deadly nature of the British fire at close quarters. He states that the rebels, directly they sprang up to charge, were simply mown down by our fire. The whole action occupied two hours, and the Naval Brigade had one officer and nine men killed and wounded in the left-half battery alone. "We had the good-fortune," remarks Lieut. Almack, "to be in the very thick of it the whole time. The right-half battery did not fire much until just at the end of the day, but it was more trying for them to stand quiet and be shot at." Lieut. Almack describes the march to Tokar, and says that at the village near where Baker Pasha's stores were recovered they found even the money chest with all the money in it. He concludes by stating that he was returning with troops to Suakim, where he thought there was not much likelihood of a fight. He was killed nine days afterwards at the battle of Tamai.

The Standard says:—"Gen. Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar has been appointed to command the Volunteers at Portsmouth on Easter Monday; Major-Gen. R. White (Eastern District), to the command of the Northern Force; Major-Gen. the Hon. R. Monck (Chatham District), to the command of the Western Force; and Col. R. A. Steward, R.A., to the command of the Royal Artillery."

"LOOK ON THIS PICTURE, AND ON THAT!"

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—At the close of the last Parliamentary Session, Aug. 18, 1883, in a discussion which took place in the House on "the Vote to complete the sum of £278,000 for the Army Reserve," the Marquis of Hartington is reported to have made a statement with regard to the efficiency of the Army and supply of recruits which apparently was irreconcilable with certain published facts. (I endeavoured at the time to bring the matter to public notice through the columns of some of your prominent contemporaries, but failed.) On Dec. 6 last, Mr. Childers, in a speech at Pontefract, is also reported to have made some statements on the same subject which are not fully borne out; and last week the Annual Report of the Inspector-General of Recruiting was presented to Parliament, and the Press, with few exceptions, have therefrom published the most assuring and flattering descriptions of the efficiency of our Army and Recruiting generally, the Times having gone so far as to say:—"We may at once say that the results are in every respect satisfactory, and in some respects even more than satisfactory." In the interests of the service, I hope you will allow me space in your columns to show how apparently misleading are the public utterances of responsible Ministers, founded on details furnished to them by subordinate officials, as well as conclusions arrived at on published reports, prepared by departments having no interest in their favorable compilation. I will quote as briefly as possible extracts from the statements referred to, and place my remarks, based on official facts, opposite:—

(Marquis of Hartington, on Aug. 18, 1883.)	Remarks.
1. "In July, 1881, the Army was 13,000 below the establishment. Notwithstanding the raising of the age, 14,000 were enlisted up to January, 1882, and there was soon an excess of 2,250. It therefore became necessary to allow men to go into the Reserve before the expiration of their six years' service, and men after three years were allowed to do so. Up to July, 1882, some 3,500 went into the Reserve before their time had expired; the effect of these measures was that, in the middle of 1882, the numbers were brought down to the establishment, yet there was no deficiency."	1. By report of Comptroller and Auditor-General for 1881 and '82, as presented to Parliament, the net deficiency was 59 in July, 1881, By Table 12, General Annual Return of British Army for 1881, the 14,000 recruits enlisted only produced an increase of 714 men, from July 1, 1881, to Jan. 1, 1882 (virtually displacing the same number of trained men); and by similar Table in Annual Return for 1882, a net decrease is shown every month, from Jan. to June inclusive, amounting in the aggregate to 6,094 to the middle of 1882. The age for recruits was raised from 18 to 19 years by General Order 81, July 1, 1881. The General Order reducing from six to three years the transfer of men to the Reserve is No. 80, para. xx., 5, July 1, 1881, the very time the Army was stated above to be 13,000 below strength, not as implied, between Jan. and June, 1882.
2. "What was not foreseen at the time was that very large numbers of men who had enlisted in 1870 and 1871, under the old system, would obtain their discharge in 1882 and 1883. Whatever deficiency in the establishment existed was due to the additional restrictions imposed on recruiting when the Army was considered too full, and to the abnormal drain he had described, there was no reason to suppose that now when the abnormal drain had ceased, and the restrictions were removed, the establishment would fall below what was required for the service of the country."	2. Every one outside the War Office knew this abnormal drain would take place, but this department, whose special duty it was to provide for it, instead of doing so, selected the very time the Army was below its strength, viz, July, 1881, to raise the age from 18 to 19, and to discharge 3,500 trained men to the Reserve before their term with the colours had expired. It is shown above that the additional restrictions were imposed when the Army was admittedly below its strength, and what time within the period referred to could the Army have been considered too full? Moreover, these restrictions were not removed until April 27, 1883. By Annual Report of Recruiting for 1883, there is an admitted deficiency of 7,357 rank and file on Dec. 31 last.
3. "Gallant gentlemen said that the Army was in a critical state from a deficiency of recruits; he maintained that there was no deficiency of recruits at all. "In June (1883) they calculated the deficiency, including home and Indian establishments, to be about 13,000."	3. These extracts from a statement made in the House on Aug. 18, 1883, apparently contradict each other, assuming it to be correct that in June, 1883, there was a deficit of 13,000, as the Recruiting Report above alluded to shows a net decrease from June 1 to Aug. 1 of 898, there would appear to have been a total deficiency of 13,898 men at the time the House was told there was no deficiency of recruits at all.
4. "The short-service system had been shown to be capable of doing what the long-service system—so much regretted by honourable and gallant gentlemen—never did; it showed itself capable of keeping up the supply of recruits wanted for the service of the Army during the year."	4. I am not aware that any deficiency approaching the above 13,898 ever existed under the long-service system. Take, for example, 1861: the number wanting to complete strength was 1,025, out of an establishment of 202,040 rank and file, as against only 168,863 in 1883, 33,177 less. If these establishments were reversed, the number wanting to complete in 1883 would be 46,177. It would almost appear that the practice frequently prevails when sufficient men cannot be raised one year to pull down the establishment for the next year. See also remarks on Recruiting Return below.
(Mr. Childers on December 5, 1883):—
5. "I told you, as I told the House of Commons, that in a short time the Army would be much more prepared than it had been, even for a considerable military expedition......No one has questioned that the Army, when it was called upon for service in Egypt, was ready both as to men and material; within six weeks after the troops began to leave our shores, the great battle of Tel-el-Kebir was fought and won."	5. Mr. Childers did not inform his hearers that to provide this small expeditionary force of 15,000 or 20,000 men, we had to depart from all the principles which govern a Reserve force, and send our Reserves out with the first army corps, and so denuded our home force that we had not a battery or regiment left behind, I believe, fit to take the field.
6. "Long service had, of course, failed twelve years ago, and it would be a terrible misfortune if short service were found no better, but I am happy to tell you that as to the Army, this is an entire delusion."	6. (See Remarks on Extract 4 and on Report of Recruiting below):—If long service had been given the advantages conferred on short service, viz., much earlier attainment of good-conduct pay, deferred pay, free rations, and an establishment some 15,000 or 30,000 less, can any one suppose that it would have failed, as short service did during last year and in 1882, to obtain sufficient recruits; moreover, our Army would be composed of veterans instead of boys.
7. "When we took office in May, 1880, and until June, 1881, the Line was a little below its voted strength; then the new system, slightly increasing the length of service, came into effect, and with it we raised the minimum of age for recruits from 18 to 19 years, and we gave all soldiers, especially non-commissioned officers, considerable advantages. Recruiting in a few weeks rapidly increased, and during the first six months of the new system reached 14,000 men, in fact, the numbers considerably exceeded the votes of Parliament, and it became necessary to take effective measures to keep them down. We required our medical officers to be more strict, looked up the antecedents of recruits, abolished Sergeant Kite and the old bounty plan, but we did more, we allowed 3,500 men to go into the Reserve before their service was completed......These measures brought down recruiting, and in the middle of 1882, the Army was about its voted strength."	7. This statement differs with the Marquis of Hartington's as regards the numbers deficient in the middle of 1881 (vide Extract No. 1), but admits that the restrictions were applied when the Army was below its voted strength, a very unusual method of increasing numbers, but we are told it had the desired effect. A similar statement to that made by the War Minister on Aug, 18, 1883 (vide Extract No. 1 and Remark).

I now come to the Annual Report of the Inspector-General of Recruiting, which appears to be the very reverse of satisfactory. It represents an increasing waste in the Army beyond all anticipation; and after having resorted to every expedient to obtain recruits, by advertisement, police aid, &c., descending to a standard unknown under the long-service system, between 5 ft. 3 in. and 5 ft. 4 in. in height, and 18 and 19 years of age, "if likely to make effective soldiers," about 10,000 of this class having been enlisted; after taking 12,450 men from the Militia, 1,392 enrolled Volunteers, a partial return to long service and bounty, 7,409 men having been allowed to extend their service with the colours between July 1 and December 31, 1883, instead of being transferred to the Reserves, the report shows a net decrease of 11,989 men for the year, and an admitted deficiency of 7,357 men to Dec. 31 last. I may here ask what would have resulted had the Army been subjected, in 1883, to the drain of a European war. At page 8, under the head of "Waste of the Army in 1883," it is suggested that if some 12,543 demobilised Reserves and transfers be "looked upon as men who ought to have been transferred in 1882," a gain of 568 men will appear for 1883. This seems a strange expedient to produce a gain. When such a point is raised, the fairest plan is to take the years 1882 and 1883 together, viz.:—

Net increase for 1882 .... 3,776 }

At page 2, under head of Infantry, we are told that "Notwithstanding the abnormally large decrease by transfers to the Reserves, since July 1, 1883, the effective strength has been raised 2,905 rank and file." On reference to Appendix C, page 18, giving increase and decrease during each month of the year, the transfers to Reserves for the last six months of the year from July 1 is only 4,879, as against 10,188 for the first six months from Jan., 1883; and it is due to the fact that the numbers transferred to Reserves and discharged during the last half period of the year was less by 7,927 men than for the first half-year, that there was a net increase from July 1 to Dec. 31, 1883, of 3,702 men. In the month of December a falling-off in recruits and increase in discharges shows a decrease of 832 men during the last month of the year. There is one point of very serious importance I would desire to direct special attention to, viz., that with our present short-service system, we require to raise nearly four times the number of recruits to meet the annual waste than was requisite under the long-service system; consequently, we have four times the number of inefficient men in the ranks, that is, recruits under instruction, and combined with this weakening element, we have an establishment some 15,000 or 30,000 less than during long service. In addition to this, I expect it will be found that as regards soldiers between five and eleven years' service, the period of greatest efficiency, we have at present some 60,000 less than we had under the old system; whereas, in the case of men under three years, we probably have some 30,000 or 40,000 more than formerly, without the qualifying element of the old long-service soldiers. Considering these facts, it does seem incredible how an officer like Gen. Wolseley can assert that the soldiers of the present day compare more than favourably with the Army of the past, for this simply implies that experience and long course of training are detrimental to a soldier, and that youths are superior to men. Whatever may be the motives which prompt the War Minister to persitently refuse to furnish Parliament with the particulars repeatedly asked for as to the effective strength and ages of the men composing different regiments, nothing is so calculated as this reticence to convey the impression to other nations and all thinking persons that the British Army is in a most unsatisfactory condition. Notwithstanding this refusal, the Marquis of Hartington, in his remarks in Committee of Supply on Army Estimates on the 17th inst., admitted that the Army at home was composed of young soldiers. The barrack rooms being filled with youths is one of the reasons why the old soldiers are leaving as soon as they can get away, their rooms being no longer bearable. I am quite certain that I express the conviction of officers of the Army generally, when I assert that the state of the Army is such that if we unhappily became involved in a European war, the consequences would be most disastrous. So long as we continue to place a civilian, an ever-changing political minister, at the head of the Army, which virtually allows all its vital interests to be controlled by some four or five War-Office clerks, we shall never have as effective an army as we ought for the money provided, and the bone and sinew of the service will continue to be sacrificed to other considerations. The cost of administration of the Army in all its departments is something fabulous, and augmented by needless complications, while prudent and desirable expenditure is ignored by the powers that be,—space and time will not admit of details, but I may point out one example. We have now an army filled with young soldiers, being perpetually recruited, supplied with arms of the most perfect precision, and requiring most careful manipulation. Under such circumstances, it might reasonably be supposed on the ground of economy, as well as maintaining efficiency, that the most perfect system of instruction would be adopted, and carried out under a well-trained staff of instructors; but the very reverse is the case, for while we adhere to the same false system of drill as of old, which, as carried out, is, I believe, most irritating to the recruit as well as detrimental to his health,—vide a pamphlet entitled "The Breakdown of Young Soldiers under Training; explained by Surg.-Major F. Arthur Davy, M.D., Woolwich, 1883,"—we have not the old experienced, long-service, non-commissioned officers and soldiers to instruct and drill the recruit, and this duty is now relegated to a class of young men that formerly would not have been considered fit for the duty. It stands to reason that if the Army was provided with a thoroughly efficient staff of uniformly-trained instructors, and in a climate like ours, if every military station where recruits were placed under instruction was provided with a proper drill-shed, where recruits could be instructed, independent of the weather, not only would it tend greatly to the comfort and advantage of all under training, but the recruit would much sooner become an effective soldier, instead of a useless cost to the country; but this would entail an extra item on the expenditure side of the Estimate, and so long as the War Office have a certain number of paper soldiers to enable them to manipulate their complex returns, and can employ them in any manner apart from their duties in the ranks, to avoid an apparent expenditure, and can play on the effective strength as a convenient item on which to create a saving in a time of need, they are not concerned about the efficiency of the soldier, the unfortunate commanding officer must make bricks as best he can without straw.—I am, &c., E. R. LETHERED, Lieut.-Col.

Reviews.

A Cursory History of Swearing. By Julian Sharman. (Nimmo and Bain.)—Soldiers swear sometimes, they do not swear perhaps as they did in Flanders, for those were swearing days. Swearing is now-a-days tabooed in all decent society, yet in the Army and Navy the tendency to the use of forcible language still exists. There is much in the history of swearing that is entertaining, for the author is evidently a student. The subject he treats upon is one that required careful handling. Mr. Sharman may, however, congratulate himself upon having steered clear of the offensive. He writes in a good-humoured strain, and is always careful to keep within the bounds of decorum. To some, it may seem, the subject is one that would have been better let alone. But there is absolutely nothing in Mr. Sharman's book which the most prudish could object to. On the contrary, we can recommend it as a most carefully compiled volume; one that a father need have no compunction in placing in the hands of his son,—or his daughter, for the matter of that.

An excellent manual has just been published, the authorship of which rests with Lieut.-Col. C. Hayter, Assist.-Comy.-Gen. for Transport, Madras, and Capt. Harvey Kelly, Deputy-Assist.-Comy.-Gen. for Transport. Leaving the broad lines of general principles and organisation, which have already been so ably treated by Col. Furse in his recently-published work on Army Transport, the authors, or as they prefer to call themselves, the compilers, have devoted their attention almost entirely to detail. The principle they have had before them, as they state in their unassuming preface, has been "to demonstrate in the simplest manner possible how the maximum amount of carrying-power may be obtained with the minimum amount of distress to the animal," and with this object in view, they have given the first place in their book to the consideration of the proper and most advantageous methods of loading the various kinds of "impedimenta" that must accompany an army in the field, or the different kinds of transport animals that are in general use in India. Each species of load is considered separately with reference to the different animals which may have to carry it, and the instructions are contained in clear language, concisely put, and illustrated by photographs and sketches. But while the greatest pains may be taken to avoid casualties, accidents will happen, and though prevention is better than cure, still, when the evil has made its presence apparent in spite of all precaution, it is necessary to know what remedies are likely to prove effective for its removal. This the authors have not overlooked, as they have devoted a lengthy chapter to veterinary treatment in the field, a chapter which is all the more practically useful, as it gives not only the recipes for the remedies, but also the native names of the most important ingredients in those recipes. The "useful axioms regarding pack mules" with which the volume concludes are clear, concise, and worth remembering, and based as they are on experience, cannot fail to be of great practical utility to any officer placed in charge of transport animals. The Manual should commend itself, as well to regimental officers as to officers in the Transport Department, as a thoroughly practical and useful addition to modern Military literature.—Madras Mail.

The Panama Herald learns that "Henry Nichols, a New York Irish revolutionist, has built a ram that is going to destroy the entire British Navy, if not the greater part of the British Empire itself, in one time and two motions. The ram crawls along on the bottom of the ocean, living on clams, and when it gets under the doomed navy it stands up on end and fires 32-pounders and one rifled 100-pounder, and then fires itself after them. It will cost other people about $1,500,000, if they subscribe for it. It is not quite completed yet. In fact, it is only partially finished. To be precise, Mr. Nichols has only got as far as the name. He has named it 'Attila the Destroyer.' We feel disposed to censure Mr. Nichols very mildly for naming his ram before it is built. The proper time for a christening is subsequent to the birth. Suppose, after Mr. Nichols' ram is completed, it should prove to be not an Attila kind of a ram, but rather of the Nancy denomination, how mortifying it would be for Mr. Nichols to feel compelled to change the name of it from Attila the Destroyer, to Britomarte, the Manhater, or Victoria Woodhull, or something of that sort. We urge Mr. Nichols to be careful also, and keep the ram in the paddock after it is built. These Irish revolutionary rams are wandering in their habits. O'Donovan Rossa had one not long ago, a very tame one, too, which used to eat greenbacks out of its master's hand; and ate a hundred thousand and more of them. Well, now, that ram got loose somehow, and has never been heard of since. Not once. Neither has any of the money."

London Amusements.

◆

The farewell performances of Salvini at Covent Garden Theatre will close in London next week. Othello and the Gladiator have been his most attractive embodiments. The last morning performance of "The Gladiator" takes place this (Saturday) afternoon.

Her Majesty's Theatre, in the Haymarket, which has been the scene of many curious enterprises during the last few years, will be opened at Easter by Mr. J. R. Taylor, for the production of romantic dramas, at popular prices. A large pit at eighteenpence, with only four rows of stalls at a five-shilling admission, will be offered as an inducement to the playgoing public.

The forthcoming revival of the comedy of "The Rivals," at the Haymarket, will present Mrs. Stirling as Mrs. Malaprop, Miss Calhoun as Lydia Languish, Mrs. Bernard-Beere as Julia, and Miss Julia Gwynne as Lucy. Mr. Pinero is Sir Anthony Absolute, Mr. Alfred Bishop Sir Lucius, Mr. Forbes Robertson Captain Absolute, Mr. Bancroft Faulkland, and Mr. Lionel Brough Bob Acres. The acts will be rearranged so as to render changes of scene unnecessary.

The revival at the Gaiety of Mr. H. J. Byron's operatic extravaganza, called "Little Don Cæsar de Bazan," originally produced here in May, 1876, has afforded audiences the welcome opportunity of congratulating Mr. E. W. Royce on his return to the stage, after his very long and serious illness. Resuming his grotesque impersonation of the ambitious minister, Don José, Mr. Royce gave pleasant assurance of his convalescence by acting with all his old humour and dancing with much of his former activity. With Miss Constance Gilchrist as Maritana, Miss E. Farren as Don Cæsar, and Mr. Edward Terry as the amorous monarch Charles II., King of Spain, the lively production goes off once more in the merriest fashion.

A marvellous illusion has been this week exhibited to a privileged few at the Crystal Palace, called, appropriately enough, "The Mystery," and intended to be among the prominent attractions of that establishment at Easter. The spectators of Dr. Lynn's latest wonder behold the upper half of a comely young damsel swinging in space, while the lower portion of her body is perfectly invisible. The bisected beauty laughs, talks, and shakes hands with the astonished beholders to prove her absolute vitality; but how a living figure appears to be completely cut in twain is not clearly comprehensible, even to those most familiar with the secret of modern optical illusions.

On this evening (Saturday) at the Prince's Theatre, will be played, for the first time in London, a four-act farcical comedy, called "The Private Secretary," adapted by Mr. C. H. Hawtrey from the German play of "Der Bibliothekar," written by Herr von Moser. The adaptation was brought out at the Theatre Royal, Cambridge, last November, when it was encouragingly received.

Mr. Wilson Barrett has decided to postpone his visit to America till next year, and in the meantime he is preparing a careful revival of "Hamlet," which he will probably reserve for the autumn, as "Claudian," now past its hundredth night, bids fair to run through the present season.

Miss Mary Anderson's performances at the Lyceum terminate at the end of next week. On Saturday, April 12, Mr. Lawrence Barrett, the American actor, will appear in a three-act drama, called "Yorick's Love," adapted from the Spanish of Estabancz by Mr. W. D. Howells, and illustrated with new scenery by Mr. Hawes Craven.

With this week has closed the brilliant career of the Drury Lane pantomime of "Cinderella," which has been represented more than 130 times consecutively.

The morning performances of the week have included Mr. Palgrave Simpson's play of "Lady Dedlock's Secret," given on Wednesday at the Opera Comique for the benefit of the School of Dramatic Art. On the same day, Miss Rose Osborne made her first appearance in England at the Gaiety in a drama called "Her Own Enemy." On Thursday, Miss Adelaide Moore, a pupil of Mr. John Ryder, appeared at the same theatre as Julia in "The Hunchback;" and Miss Lydia Cowell, at the Adelphi, gave her clever performance of Fanchon, in Mr. James Mortimer's drama of "Little Cricket," founded on Madame George Sand's pastoral romance of "La Petite Fadette."

VERY few of the writers who have been clamouring so loudly, and, we may add, vainly, if not foolishly, for the dispatch of English troops to the assistance of General Gordon at Khartoum, can be aware of the difficulties which present themselves to the march of even a small column of Europeans at this time of the year through the deserts of Nubia and the Soudan. We have read with amazement some of the lucubrations in the Press as to what ought or could be done, and have sometimes been led to think that there was a confusion in the minds of the writers which led them to imagine that Berber was another name for Khartoum. The heat, perhaps, is the least trying and formidable of the various obstacles to an expeditionary column, necessarily encumbered with baggage and trains of ammunition and provisions. Scarcity and badness of water, dust storms, the Khamseem wind, fever in the vicinity of the river, want of water and food away from it, the formidable distances from well to well, are among the inconveniences, to say the least of them, to which our troops would be exposed; and these, not formidable, perhaps, or insuperable in the short advance of an expeditionary flying-column, would be aggravated as the force proceeded southwards day after day in a lengthened march. We do not say that the difficulties would be insurmountable, nor do we pretend to assert that no attempt could or should be made to relieve General Gordon; but we do venture to point out the very many things that must be considered, ere the Government is hounded on, so to speak, to make one of those frantic plunges or spasmodic jumps in which it has been indulging lately on the coast of the Red Sea for the avenging of Sinkat, the relief of Tokar, or for the chastisement of Osman Digna for presuming to think he has a better right to be in Suakim than Colonel Cromer Ashburnham. The advance of a few squadrons to Berber from Suakim, so urgently demanded by the Times, has, of course, fallen flat before the experience of Herbert Stewart's little cavalry razzia, a few miles from the coast, not to speak of the dictates of common-sense and military experience. At the present moment the military position appears to be thus,—The British garrison of Cairo has been weakened by the dispatch of one regiment to Assiout, which is the terminus of the railway from the capital, running south along the left bank of the Nile. What is the object of sending the regiment there? It is quite beyond us to make out, unless the authorities have reason to believe that there is fear of an outbreak in the town, which is about the largest and most populous in the Saied. But, even in that case, we should have thought the Gendarmerie would have been quite strong enough to deal with any rising. Assiout is not half-way between Cairo and the First Cataract, being nearer to the capital than it is to Assouan, with no means of communication between the two places except by the river, which, at this time, is so low as to be almost impracticable for steamers, post boats not being always able to get up beyond Esneh. At Assouan there is, as far as we can make out, a Brigade not very strong, probably, of Wood's ill-used Egyptian Army, which Gordon, supposing he be rightly represented by the correspondent who attributed the words to him, has sneeringly described as "Wood's Invincibles." From Assouan to Khartoum there are only such miserable collections of mud and brick huts, and squalid bazaars as Derr, Korosko, Wady Halfa, Dongola, Hannek, Berber, and Shendy along the banks of the river. From Assouan to Wady Halfa, the general course of the stream trends in a westerly direction towards the south. The banks are thickly, but not continuously, populated, as there are places where the desert or the rock comes sheer down, now one side of the river and now on the other, to its waters. The current is strong, but boats might be towed or tracked along the banks without great difficulty as far as Wady Halfa, and provisions would be found in sufficient abundance in the bazaars and villages along its course. At Wady Halfa is a section of a railway running for about sixty miles to Deligo, farther south on the right bank of the Nile; and in face of our present difficulties, it seems much to be regretted that General Gordon, when he was Governor of the Soudan, strongly opposed the continuation of that work. It was at the beginning of 1883, however, so far complete that trains ran irregularly between the two points, and at Wady Halfa there was a regular station, with some spare locomotives, machinery, and rails. Deligo is a little north of the Third Cataract at Hannek, below Bender. But the general route of caravans is from a point on the Nile south of Bender to a second Hannek below Old Dongola, where the Nile is crossed, to Shendy, avoiding the great detour of the Nile easterly to Abou Hamed and Berber. This route, however, we believe, would not be practicable for Cavalry, or for any Infantry, except such as were mounted on camels. It would, however, avoid the Fifth Cataract, on the Nile between Hannek and Berber. The Sixth Cataract, which lies between Shendy and Khartoum, presents but little difficulty. But roughly speaking, we may say that there are twelve degrees of latitude to be traversed between the advanced posts of the relieving army at Assouan and the beleaguered force under Gordon at Khartoum, and following the course of the river perhaps 200 miles more. The retirement of Graham's force from Suakim practically hands over the desert route from that port to Berber to the Arabs, in whose friendliness we need no longer put any trust, if, indeed, we had ever the smallest ground to believe that they would serve us except as doubtful mercenaries in the presence of superior force. The situation, therefore, is not hopeful, as far as the prospect of immediate relief by Anglo-Egyptian troops is concerned; and we cannot believe that General Gordon himself, with his knowledge of the country, can entertain any sanguine expectations that at this time of the year a British expedition could move from either Suakim to Berber or from Assouan to the same point. But he probably expected that Indian troops, who could be relied upon to stand the heat, and whose aptitudes for that sort of military work are far greater than those of our own men, might have been sent to make a counter-demonstration on the Nile, which would relieve him from the pressure of the insurgent tribes around Khartoum, and enable him to march out with his garrison, and to liberate the Egyptians and Europeans who are invested in the various stations held by the Egyptian Government in Darfour, Kordofan, and Sennaar. We do not receive much accurate information from these parts, always excepting Khartoum, whence Mr. Power has managed to transmit very interesting news from General Gordon's side. Whether Slaten Bey has driven away the investing force or not, and whether Lupton Bey has cleared away the insurgents or not, it is impossible to say. But if the reports from El Obeid of the dissensions prevailing among the Mahdi's followers be true, we must credit his Eminence the Arch Impostor with a considerable amount of cool arrogance and masterly duplicity in that he ventured to send in his ambassadors to Khartoum, to request Gordon to become a Mahometan, and to announce his contemptuous refusal of the title of Sultan, with which the English General had generously invested him. Reports brought by friendly Arabs, or spies, should be taken with so much salt as to be unpalatable and insoluble. We do not wish to apply the word "failure" to General Gordon, because we do not exactly know what he himself expected to do, or to succeed in doing; but it is very evident that he has not succeeded in abating the pretensions of the Mahdi, in breaking-up the confederation of the tribes, or in liberating the garrisons. And now it is a question of his own safety which occupies the whole country. The position is, in some respects, like that at Lucknow, after Havelock and Outram had forced their way to the Residency to relieve Inglis, and found themselves shut in by the enemy, so that a second relieving force had to be organised by Sir Colin Campbell to relieve the relievers. That, indeed, was effected, and we marched triumphantly out of the place, handing it over to the enemy—the rebels—from whom we were obliged to wrest it some months afterwards. At the present moment, the utterances attributed to Gordon are so contradictory, that we hesitate to accept them as perfectly established; but his acts are somewhat puzzling, if it be true that, having sent out a portion of the Egyptians from Khartoum, who had made their way to the commencement of the Desert route to cross to the point where they would be conveyed down the Nile to Assouan, he sent peremptory orders to the troops who were escorting them to return,—unless he feared they would be destroyed on the way. Our readers will not be surprised to find that the estimate of the force possessed by Gordon over the tribes was erroneous, not on account of any failure on his part, but simply because he was in such a situation so different from that in which he had been placed when he was Governor of the Soudan and Lieutenant of Ismail Pasha, the most vigorous and despotic of Khedives, with an ample treasury, with great force at his back, and prestige unaffected either by successful rebellion or foreign alliances; that it would be preposterous to expect him, alone with his walking-stick and Colonel Stewart, to possess the influence and authority which, it must be said, were not altogether derived from his magnetic power and peculiar characteristics in command of men.

VISCOUNT LEWISHAM has done good service in bringing forward the grievances of the Royal Marines. At the same time, it is a pity that his speech in the House of Commons was so unguarded as to enable the opponents of reform to denounce it as exaggerated. That the Royal Marines have just cause for complaint at the manner in which they have been treated by the Admiralty cannot for a moment be denied. But it is ridiculous to assert that officers of the Royal Marines, when serving afloat, are ever placed under the command of mere boys, young middies of fourteen. Such assertions only lead the public to ridicule the idea that any real grievances exist, for even those people who know little or nothing of Naval matters have learnt from what they have read in books and in the Press that, except when acting as the aide-de-camp of a superior officer, a midshipman never is brought into contact with a Marine officer, and can never order that officer about. Marine officers have never made this one of their complaints, and we regret that Lord Lewisham should have done so for them. His lordship was probably thinking of youngsters in charge of boats, landing Marine officers on or off duty. Then is the only time that a midshipman has command. He is responsible for the safety and proper handling of his boat, so long as no Naval officer of a superior rank is not present. But even the most zealous advocate of Marine autonomy would not object to this custom and habit of regarding Marines as soldiers, even when in the ship's boats, taking passage to the shore. There are other points to which we could take exception in Lord Lewisham's speech, but we prefer instead placing on record a correct statement of the reasons why it is desired to obtain the opinion of an independent Committee of the House of Commons upon the existing position of the Corps of Royal Marines. The officers of the Royal Marines have ever laboured under many disadvantages, as compared with the officers of the Navy and of the Army. And yet, during the past two centuries, the services rendered by the Marines to the Crown have been second to no other branch of her Majesty's Forces. Indeed, we are strongly of opinion that, were the facts of the case known, and rightly understood by the public, the country would not sanction the official neglect and relegation to a third-rate position, at all times deemed good enough for the Marines. Only quite recently an official dinner was given by the Heir-Apparent to the Throne to distinguished Naval and Military officers. But not a single Marine officer was invited. No doubt, the Prince of Wales was not to blame in the matter, as his Royal Highness has too many duties to perform to be able to spare time to settle the dinner list. That was left to a member of the Prince of Wales's Household, and he forgot all about the Marines. No one, we feel sure, regretted the oversight more than did the Prince. Still, the Marines do not like to be thus forgotten, and it is really hard on the members of these distinguished Corps that the Press should have to advocate their claims to being remembered on such occasions. Still less, we feel convinced, will the country approve of the efficiency of so large and useful an arm of the defences of the country being impaired, as it undoubtedly will be, should its principal causes of complaint not be enquired into. These are, briefly, that there is no employment for officers above the grade of Colonel in the service of the State. All General Officers' appointments are practically closed against officers of the Marine Corps, and these officers are thus debarred from gaining the position and reaping the advantages which every profession, both Civil and Military, holds out as a reward for ability and long and faithful services to those who reach the top of the tree. In the Colonel's grade there is an insufficiency of appointments suitable to their rank. The commands of the four Divisions and the Depôt at Deal are alone open to them. The Lieutenant-Colonels have to perform duties which in the sister services would be considered beneath their rank and position. The position of Marine officers on board ship leaves much to be desired. The Admiralty Regulations allow the Captains of ships to delegate disciplinary powers to the next senior Naval officer on board, and some Captains grant leave to the officer commanding the Marine detachment, serving on board, to punish his own men when brought up as defaulters. But, in many cases, the Captain of the ship does not do this. He insists on the Commander or First Lieutenant awarding all punishments. The officer commanding the Marine detachment and his subalterns then become mere cyphers. The men soon begin to lose respect for officers they see thought so little of, and apparently of so little use, and discipline suffers. When active operations take the Marines away from their ships, as was recently the case in the Mediterranean, the almost universal custom of the Navy is to keep the Marine officers on board, and to send Naval officers on shore to conduct purely Military operations. This may be due to the fact that Naval actions have not been heard of for many years, and the opportunities afforded the Navy of distinguishing itself, and of gaining rewards and promotions, have only been found on shore, Alexandria being the sole exception. In Ashantee, the Marines were not allowed to share in the advance on Coomassie, whereas some 200 seamen were landed to form a Naval Brigade. In Abyssinia, in Zululand, and in the Transvaal the seamen monopolised the position which should at least have been shared by the Marines. Then, again, the Marines, when landed, have at all times been kept under the Naval Discipline Act, instead of being at once placed under the Army Act. This led to much friction in Egypt, and the public service must have suffered from such a state of things. In the Marines, the half and retired pay of a General Officer is at all times the same, viz., £702 per annum; but in the Army they rise to £1,000. Previous to the last Royal Warrant, it was admitted that General Officers of the Marines should receive a higher retirement than those of the Army, as a compensation and solatium for their never being employed in that rank. But even this has not been carried out. If we turn now to the non-commissioned officers and rank and file, we find that whereas in the Army every man receives daily a free ration of bread and meat, the Marines, when in barracks, have $4\frac{1}{2}$d. per diem stopped out of their pay for their rations. Thus the pay of the Marines, which is nominally greater than that of the Army, is reduced and made less by $1\frac{1}{2}$d. per diem. The Marines also get no deferred pay, which in the Army amounts to £3 per annum. It has been urged, by the special pleaders of the Admiralty, that, as the Marine is allowed free rations when afloat, he is really better off than the soldier, who does not spend half his service on board ship. But those who use this argument forget, or do not care to remember, that the nature of the work afloat, and the perils and dangers constantly faced by those who go down to the sea in ships, entitles them to higher remuneration than those who live at ease on shore. Hence the Marine should be paid a higher price for his services than the soldier. To equalise their pay is unfair to the Marine, who only asks, however, to be paid on the same scale as the soldier, when he is serving on shore, and as are seamen, according to their grade, when serving afloat. In the matter of pensions, the Army has far the best of it, non-commissioned officers of the latter service receiving one shilling a day more than do their comrades of the Marines, and privates threepence. This is not fair; and the argument that, because there is no difficulty in getting recruits for the Marines, it is unnecessary to offer such great inducements as are required to get men to join the Army, is one that does Lord Northbrook no credit. It is impossible to say how long the popularity of the Marines will last, and if allowed to wane, it will be very difficult, indeed, to turn the tide of public opinion, while still fewer recruits would be forthcoming for the Army. There should, however, be no rivalry between the different branches of the service, except in the presence of the enemy, and then only as to which shall do the best. Hence we incline to favour the German system of educating men of all branches of the service alike in the Profession of Arms. They are all taught to be Military men first, and then to regard themselves as belonging to different branches of the service. But in England this wise course has never obtained. The Seaman is offended if he is called a soldier, the Marine if called either a seaman or a soldier, and the Soldier if mistaken for a Marine. The cause of all this is that the Marine Corps is a Military service under the Navy, and the Army remember the day when Naval officers had not even a uniform, and when its officers were not too proud to dress themselves in second-hand military coats, and think they looked smart. All military patronage is vested in the Horse Guards and the War Office, and the military authorities, regarding the Marines as not belonging to them, though holding a place in the Army List, decline to allow Marine officers to share in the good things specially created for those who belong to the Army, except in a few instances, such as adjutancies of Auxiliary Forces and instructorships at Sandhurst; but even then only, as a rule, when a dearth of applicants from the Army renders such a course convenient. It is also impossible for a Board, composed entirely of Naval officers and civilians, to understand and sympathise with the military feelings of the officers and men of the Royal Marines, however well-disposed towards the Corps the members of the Board may be. The argument, so often used, that the Deputy-Adjutant-General of Marines represents the Corps fully at the Admiralty is scarcely worth answering. Decisions are constantly being arrived at by the First Sea Lord of the Admiralty without consulting him, as was recently the case when the Marines of the Mediterranean Fleet were ordered to Suakim, and their officers were left behind on board their ships. Between the unsympathetic indifference of the Admiralty and the jealousy of the Horse Guards, the Marines go to the wall. When honours and rewards are being distributed for services in the field, they are more often than otherwise left out in the cold. It is hopeless, therefore, to expect men of high attainments and ambition to join a corps where their position is ignored, because ill-defined, and who must feel that no chance of success is granted them. The question is one of want of representation, and needs full investigation and inquiry.

Vice-Admiral H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh left Canea on Tuesday for Salamis.

The Arab, Frolic, Fly, Griffon, Helicon, Kingfisher, Mallard, and Rifleman, having completed three years' foreign service, are waiting for their reliefs. The Foam has been nearly four years in commission. The Mutine will have completed her foreign service in May and the Sapphire in August. Their Lordships have therefore to find crews for eleven ships.

We understand that Sir W. Hewett is to be made a G.C.B. A good-service pension will also be conferred upon him, in recognition of his services in the Soudan.

Captain Tryon, having been advanced to flag-rank, gives up the appointment of Secretary to the Admiralty, which has been conferred upon Mr. Evan MacGregor. The announcement of this appointment has been received with much dissatisfaction throughout the Navy, and although there are no reasons for objecting to the gentleman who has been selected, it is felt that there are on principle objections to be urged against the choice of Mr. MacGregor, who has been taken from the Clerical Staff at Whitehall. The civilian element at the Admiralty is thereby increased, while a good billet, worth £2,000 a year, is taken away from the executive of the service.

The Admiralty have made it known that the perusal of the despatches received from Rear-Admiral Sir William Hewett, V.C., and Major-General Sir G. Graham has afforded their Lordships much satisfaction, and especially the testimony borne by General Graham to the admirable manner in which the Naval Brigade were handled by Commander Ernest Rolfe, and the Royal Marine Artillery and Royal Marine Light Infantry by Colonel Tuson, and to the steadiness and gallantry of the officers and men under fire at El Teb.

Sir W. Hewett has proceeded to Massowah on a mission to King Johannes of Abyssinia, who is making great preparations to give him a grand reception. It is believed that the Egyptian Government will be advised to restore the territory claimed by Abyssinia, in consideration of King Johannes at once commencing active military operations against the Mahdi, and relieving the beleaguered Egyptian garrisons, or such of them as shall not have already surrendered. King Johannes is an unmitigated savage, cruel and brutal to the last degree, and very well suited to the people he reigns over, of whom Gordon has recorded his opinion in very plain terms. It will be pitiable and discreditable if England is obliged to have recourse to such allies.

The Dévastation, the flagship of the French squadron, has been supplied with hydraulic machinery for her heavy guns, and probably is the most powerful ironclad afloat. She has a displacement of 9,639 tons, is 94·86 mètres (311·14 ft.) long, and 21·65 mètres (71 ft.) broad. Her engines develop 6,200 horse-power, and her armour has a maximum thickness of 38 centimètres, (14·82 in.) During a four hours' trial of her engines, a speed of 14·55 knots was attained, with a consumption of fuel of 980 grammes (2·156 lb.) of coal per hour and horse-power. The vessel is armed with four 34-centimètre (13·26 in.) steel guns in the casemate, and four 27-centimètre (10·53 in.) steel guns on deck, two in the centre, and two at the ship's sides behind armour shields. The Dévastation also carries six 13-centimètre (5-in.) guns, twelve Hotchkiss revolver guns, and is equipped with apparatus for Whitehead torpedoes.

The experiments carried out on the Island of Amager on March 20 and 21, in presence of his Majesty the King of Denmark, Admiral Ravn, the Minister of Marine, Admiral Krieger, Superintendent of the Dockyard, and the members of the Diplomatic Corps, were very interesting. The four plates were bent on an inside radius of 10 ft. 9 in., each formed a separate target, the English plates being fixed by means of 12 bolts to the backing, that of Marrel Frères by 11, the Schneider solid steel plate by 16 bolts. A 15-centimètre Krupp gun, 35 calibres long, and an 18-ton Armstrong muzzle-loading gun were used. The projectiles consisted of $5\frac{7}{8}$-in. and 10-in. steel shell of the latest pattern manufactured at Essen. Also $5\frac{7}{8}$-in. chilled-iron shell and solid 10-in. chilled shot of Swedish manufacture. The latter was only used against the Cammell compound plate. The range was 100 mètres. On March 20 the experiments commenced with a round of steel shell at each plate. All the four shells struck the plates full in the centre, penetrating the Marrel plate considerably, two large cracks starting from point of impact to the edges of the upper and right side of the plate. The Cammell plate was slightly penetrated, and showed a few surface hair-cracks. The Brown plate showed deep cracks running from the point of impact to the left side of the plate. The shell penetrated the Schneider plate to a considerable depth, and cracked it in half from top to bottom, through the point of impact. The next experiment was made on the left-hand lower corner of each plate, the 10-in. gun being fired with steel shell. The first shot knocked the whole left side of the Schneider plate off its target. The lower part of the Marrel plate was completely wrecked, the shell passing through the target, was picked up uninjured a long distance in rear. The English plates broke up the shell as they passed through. The Cammell plate showed a few additional surface cracks; the shell striking the Brown plate somewhat low down, broke off the corner. On the 21st, experiments were resumed, a solid 10-in. chilled-iron shot was fired, with a charge of 63 pounds of powder, at the Cammell plate. Although the shot did not penetrate the compound plate, the target was flung bodily to the rear. A $5\frac{7}{8}$-in. chilled-iron shell was next fired at the Brown plate. This opened up a horizontal crack in the plate through its entire thickness, breaking it into three pieces, a similar shell completely destroying all that remained of the Marrel plate. In these trials, 467 pounds weight of metal were fired at the Schneider plate, 569 pounds at the Brown and Marrel plates, and 832 pounds weight at the Cammell plate. The trials were under the direction of Captains Nielsen and Jessen, of the Danish Navy.

Surgeons Hamilton, at Plymouth, on April 29; Margrave, at Portsmouth, on June 26; and Trevan, at Chatham, on September 22, will complete their time during the current year. The limited period of two years for which these officers are now appointed causes a continuous change at the Divisions, three surgeons having already been replaced within the past few months.

If it is not intended to abandon what has been done and won towards suppressing the slave trade on the Swahili coast of Africa, then it is necessary to replace the London, whose withdrawal has been caused by the notoriously unhealthy state that nearly all vessels fall into when long stationary in the tropics. In the Thalia or Juno, we possess a vessel that could be easily adapted for such service, viz., to be capable of carrying about 250 men, in addition to her own complement, as, besides Blue-jackets, a considerable number of artificers and stokers would be required; also interpreters and Seedies. Two light-draught gunboats, one for the islands of Pomba and Zanzibar, the other for the mainland, or most requisite. Each gunboat would act as depôt for a division of boats. The cruiser should fly a senior officer's pendant, and he should hold an independent command between certain limits, as, for instance, between Brava and Sindi; the command should be for a period of three years, as to render the blockade effective it is necessary to have local knowledge, which can only be acquired by time and experience. Many of the steamboats at present in use are suitable for the work, but two kinds of sailing boats should be supplied, one with drop keels of the Una class, the other of deeper draught, able to carry a large crew and a gun; a machine-gun only being necessary for the former or light-draught class. As the work is undeniably harder than the usual service, higher pay should be granted, tonnage-bounty done away with, and a more liberal rate of head-money given. Zanzibar must, by its position, be the head-quarters of the Squadron. Seychelles forms an admirable sanitarium, and should be visited when necessary, especially during the rainy season, by the cruiser or gunboats.

The Parliamentary Secretary has promised the introduction during the present Session of the revised Naval Discipline Act. We hope the power to junior Captains on foreign stations to order, and junior officers to constitute, courts-martial, which was strongly objected to by nearly every Naval Member in the House, and by a great consensus of Naval opinion outside it, will be omitted. The summary power at present possessed by Naval Captains is ample in nearly every case, and any cheapening or detracting from the dignity and importance which at present certainly attaches to Naval courts-martial is strongly to be deprecated.

Colonel Francis Lean, the enterprising editor of the Royal Navy List, has added a new feature to the Naval record he has so ably compiled for the use of all who take an interest in the Navy. Colonel Lean writes to us as follows:—

> "The Regiments of the Army are permitted for all time to wear on their colours and accoutrements, and have appended to their numbers in the Army List, the names of the victories in which they have taken part, but there is no such record of the famous Battle Ships of the Royal Navy. The names of ships have been handed down from the days of the Armada, as I find the Victory, Revenge, and Triumph were the three flagships in that memorable fight, and are still represented. It appears that the name of the ship should be as good as the name of the regiment; in either case, there is nothing in existence that fought in the battle of 100 years ago, except the namè. The Army rightly claim the name as a heritage, why not the Navy? and if so, why should it not in the case of the Navy be officially recognised, and those victories that may be deemed fitting emblazoned on the ship herself and entered in the Navy List? The names of the battles that I have placed in the Royal Navy List are those of acknowledged victories, and in which the opposing forces have been equal, or the preponderance in favour of the enemy. Boat and cutting-out expeditions are not entered; it is especially the war services of the ships. Many of the famous ships are not now represented, and many are condemned, as obsolete, to be used as hulks, but the names will probably be revived, as new ships are built to replace them."

We think the idea a remarkably good one, which might be improved upon by forming our seamen into naval battalions or divisions, similar to the Marines.

Can nothing be done to protect us from the infliction, which is becoming a nuisance and a disgrace, of the abominable placards which are supposed to attract multitudes to scenes of murder and violence in various forms,—struggling Guardsmen, and spasmodic assassins in scarlet, yellow, and blue, glaring from every hoarding in convulsive attitudes; bandits, police, ticket-of-leave men, drowning maidens, and gasping mariners fighting with the waves in the wild agitation of stage machinery? It was bad enough to be called upon to go and see Louie Jones or Kitty Brown, or to be addressed familiarly from the walls by the pleasant theatrical acquaintance with all the world who delight in introducing themselves to the public by their nicknames or familiar abbreviations, and we could tolerate the procession of sandwich men with doll babies in scarlet cloaks; but the frightful representation of a detachment of Guards, with shouldered arms, engaged, apparently in strangling a comrade, is a little too much for our nervous system, and we doubt very much whether it would be an inducement to any sane person to go and witness a representation of the effect on the boards.

The officers lately lent to the Egyptian Government for service with the "local" Army are about to be seconded in their regiments. This step will give a considerable impetus to promotion.

As Major-General H. R. Browne was returning home after an inspection of the 1st Battalion of the Royal Scots, on the garrison parade-ground, Barbadoes, his Aide-de-Camp's (Lieutenant Freeman) horse kicked the General, breaking his leg at some distance above the ankle. According to latest accounts, he was progressing favourably.

One of the natural consequences of the interest excited by any Naval or Military operation in which the country is engaged, is that the public for the time being lose all sight of matters, however important they may be, not in immediate connection with the scene of action, and with those who are engaged upon it. The Army and Navy, and the policy of the State in reference to the great Imperial interests which overshadow even the consequences of our intervention in Egypt, and the responsibilities which Mr. Gladstone menaced us with on Thursday night, for the moment are in oblivion. Gordon bestrides this narrow world like a Colossus, and Generals and Admirals peep under his huge legs, and seek about to find themselves small nobodies in vain. Nevertheless, there are very grave and very serious questions which might well occupy the attention of the country, for the efficiency of the Fleet in the first instance, and of the Army in the second place, is far more important to us than any possible issue that can arise out of the Egyptian or any other difficulty, inasmuch as the successful solution of the problem arising from it must depend upon the power of the Navy and of the Army to deal with it in the arbitrament of war, and therefore we hope that those Members of both Houses who have shown an interest in Naval and Military subjects, and that portion of the Press which has devoted itself to the topics which deal more immediately with the services in an intelligent and useful manner, will not be led away by the interest of the hour, but will continue to examine minutely and diligently the real state of our Naval and Military establishments in relation to any possible difficulty that may call for their active use at home and abroad.

The Marquis of Normanby has issued a memorandum thanking the old Volunteer force, which is being disbanded, for their past services. His lordship expresses a hope that under the new order of things there will be more active co-operation on the part of those who in the event of an attack would suffer the heaviest loss. Members of the disbanded corps had freely offered their services, and the Governor says he is warranted in anticipating that, in the course of a short time, the colony will possess a force of 3,000 picked men, who, under imperial officers, may be relied on in case of need.

We learn from India that Major-General T. Wright, C.B., Bengal Staff Corps, had arrived, and had proceeded to Umballa, to take over command of the Sirhind Division from Colonel A. C. Johnson, R.H.A., who, on being set at liberty, was to take up a Brigade command in Madras. As Major-General Wright must be promoted before the year is out, his tenure of a Divisional Command is not likely to exceed a few months.

A correspondent, who evidently knows what he is writing about, suggests that the name of the Berber chief should be spelt "Zubeyr" (after one of Mahomet's paternal uncles), and remarks that "Khartoum" should be "Khurtūm" (proboscis), "Suakim" should be "Sewākim," "Massowah" should be "Musauwa," and "Jeddah" should be "Jidda." Why not?

From all sides, thrones, principalities, and powers,—from all ranks and classes, and, we may say, from all nations,—come the assurances of the sympathy which is felt with the Queen, and the widowed Duchess, and the country, in the great loss sustained by the untimely death of the Duke of Albany. This day will be observed as a day of general mourning.

The number of men who had accepted the new terms of bounty and renewed their service in India up to March 1 was:—Engineers, 40; Artillery, 1,395; Cavalry, 431; and Infantry, 5,068, a total of 6,934. What would the Army in India be without them?

It is refreshing evidence of the elasticity, not to say playfulness, of our countrymen in Egypt at the present moment, that at Alexandria and Cairo they are able to organise athletic sports, and picnics, and dances, and races. The men-of-war at Alexandria and the officers on shore vie with each other in providing amusements for the European colonists. We do not know whether they would quite relish such sports if they were sent up to Khartoum; but we have every reliance on their readiness to do all that men could do to help General Gordon, and that they would deserve success, if they could not command it. It is said that the Indian Government is opposed to the dispatch of troops from Bombay or the Presidencies, and the reason assigned is that serving out of India is not popular; but all the evidence we have tends to show that if the troops be discreetly chosen the service would not be unpopular. There were no murmurs that we heard of among the Indian Contingent in Egypt. On the contrary. There was alacrity in moving from India; and if there was similar alacrity in returning, it is only natural. The duty that would be required would not be of the kind which would induce discontent. There must be something that the public are not aware of which strengthens the Government in resisting the obvious considerations which would point to the dispatch of an Indian Contingent—or certainly would have pointed to it—to the Red Sea. In the same way we must suppose that something has come to the knowledge of those who have been so exceedingly urgent in demanding the declaration of a Protectorate, for the strength of the cry has visibly abated. There is something more weighty even than the consideration which was suggested by the Times, that a Protectorate would be accompanied, necessarily, by a guarantee of the Egyptian liabilities in the face of Europe.

The Parcæ are really good-natured. Sometimes they play a man a scurvy trick, as it seems, which turns out to be for his good; but the result of Gordon Pasha's old feud with Zebehr Pasha, or, to write more accurately, of his indictment and accusations against him, has turned out strangely adverse to his present policy. By his denunciation, Gordon succeeded completely in establishing in the minds of people at home—editors, philanthropists, anti-slavery associators, Members of Parliament, and what not—so violent a prejudice against Zebehr, that when he himself proposed Zebehr as the only man who could save the situation at Khartoum, and get him out of a tremendous fiasco of his own blowing, the Government dared not sanction the appointment. In vain Gordon declared Zebehr to be no worse than his neighbours, taking a fling at his old employer, Ismail Pasha, by the way. The thing could not be done. And there is Zebehr quietly living with a friend at Alexandria, quite ready to undertake the liberation of the liberator Gordon and to pacify the Soudan, dispose of the Mahdi, and rescue all the garrisons, if the Government of Cairo will give him 1,000 of his faithful blacks and the necessary funds and powers. It is noble not to do evil that good may come. But what if we do good, and evil comes of it?

It is satisfactory to learn that the medals for the late Egyptian Campaign have been distributed to all the Native troops who served in Egypt. The 20th Bengal N.I. being one of the last regiments to get theirs, received them early last month. This regiment is one of the most decorated corps in the service, each man in it possessing from three to five medals, some of which date as far back as the Mutiny. After patiently waiting for nearly four years, the Native officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of the 30th Madras N.I. have, we notice, at last been presented with medals, in recognition of their services in the late Afghan war. The ceremony of distributing the medals took place at Trichinopoly, where the regiment is now stationed. "Better late than never!"

Major H. M'L. Hutchison, 2nd Battalion, 14th West Yorkshire Regiment, succeeds Major W. C. Mackinnon, half-pay, late 3rd Buffs, as Assistant Adjutant-General for Musketry in India.

It is interesting at the present moment to peruse a page which we take from the "Reminiscences of Lord Holland." His lordship, referring to Napoleon's Egyptian Campaign, says that he had the following particulars from General Bertrand:—"In the first actions, the detachments of Mamelukes charged the infantry with the greatest confidence. They were utterly astonished at finding themselves repulsed by a compact body of men whom taken separately they despised, not less for their diminutive stature than for the wretched state of their accoutrements. Murad Bey thought that nothing but cowardice could have led to the discomfiture of the first troops he sent against the invaders. He was near strangling the officers who commanded them for flying before such 'Christian dogs.' As for myself, he said, I will ride through them and sever their heads from their bodies, like water-melons. He did engage them, and at the head of a considerable force, but with no better success. He was thereupon yet more amazed and indignant. So enraged was he, that it was thought he would kill himself. When he afterwards heard that the French commanders, and especially General Bonaparte and General Dessaix, were little men, he imagined the French soldiers were fixed together in a machine, and turned by some mechanical contrivance in the centre of each column. He could in no other way account for the steadiness of the phalanx and the regularity of their movements. An interview with General Kleber somewhat consoled him, for General Kleber was tall and handsome." It will be remembered that Murad Bey could never be caught by Bonaparte, who even placed a price on his head, but that he afterwards concluded a treaty with Kleber, preferring the French to the Turks. His defeats merely made him change his method of warfare.

The Progrès Militaire, referring to an interview between M. Ballue, the Deputy charged to draw up a report upon the recruiting law and General Campenon, makes the following statement:—"The Minister has long been a partisan of three years' service (instead of five years, which is the present period). He, therefore, adhered to the project of the Committee which advocates that period. He equally admits that the whole of the contingent should be incorporated every year, and that no one should be dispensed from serving, with the exception of lads whose presence is required at home for the support of their families. He consequently consents to the suppression of the privilege hitherto accorded to youths in liberal professions and those studying for the Church. The one-year volunteer system will also be suppressed. The only favour which it is proposed to accord to law and medical students, &c., is to allow them to join at 17 or at 25, instead of at 20 years of age. General Campenon strongly insists upon the suppression of all privileges." Should the Bill prepared by the Committee, and approved of by the War Minister, pass through both Houses of Parliament, its effects will be severely felt in art, learning, and industry. A great many youths adopt the clerical profession because they prefer the seminary to the barrack; but if clerical students are obliged to serve for three years like any one else, the supply of priests will decline in a notable manner, and that supply is already very limited in France. The Progrès says nothing about the difficulty of the three years' service as regards cavalry and artillery.

In a special Army Circular published by the Government of India, it is notified that in future the pay of Warrant and non-commissioned officers and men of the British Army serving in India, as well as all their allowances fixed in sterling money, will be converted into Indian money at the rate of exchange fixed annually by her Majesty's Government for the payment of troops serving in the Colonies. It might have been supposed that, as soon as the depreciation of the rupee rendered it necessary to fix yearly an official rate of exchange, the sterling pay and allowances of the British troops serving in India would have been converted at such rates. As a matter of fact, until October 1, 1873, the soldier received his pay and allowances at the rate of 2s 0½d. the rupee, and from that date until January 1, 1884, his pay proper has been converted at 1s. 10½d., while his good-conduct pay, re-engaged pay, and other allowances fixed in sterling, continued to be paid at the rate of 2s. 0½d. the rupee. On the other hand, family, savings' bank, and other remittances of Indian money to England have been made at this latter rate. The Circular referred to, however, rules that, from April 1, 1884, this privilege will cease, and such remittances will be made at the rate according to which the pay is converted. It appears, then, that the Indian authorities who, with questionable justice, have thrown the whole loss by exchange upon those of their employés whose pay was originally fixed in rupees, have for several years past enjoyed the benefit of a more favourable rate in the reverse case; and, contemplating unmoved the heavy burden borne by their immediate servants, have not scrupled to make money out of the British soldier. With reference to the Circular referred to, the Civil and Military Gazette says:—"With tardy reluctance the indisputable claim of the soldier to receive the equivalent of his sterling pay is at length grudgingly admitted; but even now, the colonial instead of the actual Indian rate of exchange is adopted, at a loss to the soldier of 2½ per cent., while his former privilege of remitting his savings to England at 2s. 0½d. ceases from April 1, 1884. This, we venture to think, is an unwise stroke of economy, since its effect will assuredly be to discourage men of steady and saving habits. Bearing in mind the strength of the British force in India, the saving effected to Government during the last ten years, under the system now abolished, must have been very considerable, and should render it feasible to continue this incentive to steady conduct, and yet give the soldier the full value of his sterling pay and allowances. The rules brought into force by the Circular above mentioned seem likely to act in the opposite direction, viz., to reduce savings and promote thoughtless extravagance in this country."

The French Chamber has been taking into consideration the rations of the soldier, who appears to be fed in a manner which is hardly creditable to the Republic, and which must be very prejudicial to the health of growing lads. According to M. de Roys, who takes a great interest in the welfare of the soldier, the bread served out to the troops is made with damaged meal and crushed biscuits. It is clear that men who are compelled to serve, and who have no pay worth mentioning, are entitled to better treatment. The French say that science has fixed 12 grammes of azote and 250 gr. of carbon as the necessary amount of nourishment required by an adult leading a sedentary life; for an adult leading an active life, 20 gr. of azote and 280 gr. of carbon; and for an adult leading a very active life, 28 gr. of azote and 450 gr. of carbon. Now, the ration of the French soldier at present represents a little over 20 gr. of azote and 346 gr. of carbon. A French military writer indulges in the following reflections upon this subject. He says that the French ration would be sufficient, but for the amount of work now required from the French soldier which is very different to what it was before the Franco-German War. A great many regiments, we are assured, now do six hours a day in the open country in heavy-marching order, while long "training" marches are everywhere accomplished once or twice a week. Therefore, the French ration, which was hardly sufficient in 1870, is quite insufficient at present. And yet it is admitted that the French ration is superior to the ration of all but the British soldier. Next to the French comes the Dutch ration, 19 gr. of azote and 320 of carbon. Then the Italian, Spanish, Austrian, and Russian rations, and, last of all, the Prussian ration, set down at a little over 13 gr. of azote and 300 of carbon. The ration of the French soldier is thus described:—1,000 gr. of bread, containing 12 gr. of azote and 300 of carbon. Meat, 300 gr., containing 7·20. gr. of azote and 26·20 gr. of carbon. Fresh vegetables, 100 gr., containing 0·31 gr. of azote and 5·50 gr. of carbon. Dried vegetables 80 gr., containing 1·30 gr. of azote and 14·30 gr. of carbon. Total, 20·81 gr. of azote and 346 gr. of carbon. This is the paper ration calculated in the laboratory with prime meat, and as far as meat is concerned the ration must be reduced by two-thirds, in consequence of the bones, skin, grease, &c. The writer of the article before us makes an attack upon that great national institution known as the pot au feu. He sets forth that in the opinion of medical men the soup made out of beef boiled for five or six hours is not nutritious, and that the beef itself is indigestible. He says:—"Certain doctors pretend that the soup renders men heavy and sleepy, and they accuse the use of it through centuries of having engendered in our populations that passiveness of mind and indifference to progress which Sterne, Taine, and other moralists have pointed out. In support of this idea they show how the Americans and the English, who are distinguished for their great qualities of initiative, energy, and will nourish themselves rather with roast meat than with soup." It is also complained that the French meat, such as it is, is generally spoiled in the cooking, because, according to the regulations, no soldier can remain a cook for more than three months. How different is the case in England, ejaculates the writer; there the Field Marshal Commanding-in-Chief has established schools for military cooks, so that the soldiers destined to prepare the repasts of their comrades may first of all receive some notions of the culinary art. The writer also raises his voice against the uniformity of the unwholesome ration of meat, and the system of giving the soldier the pot-au-feu every day, or nearly every day. Three times a month he has a sort of Irish stew.

In the case of General Playfair, who vacated compulsorily his appointment as Deputy-Commissioner in the Central Provinces, while on furlough on attaining 55 years of age, the Secretary of State has ruled that any General Officer of the late Indian Artillery or Engineers who may have never volunteered for general service nor benefited by its rules, and who may have furlough at credit when losing his appointment, like General Playfair, shall be allowed the balance of furlough under the 1868 rules, with 50 per cent. of Indian pay and allowances.

"B. Y." writes:—"Bicycles and tricycles have now become so generally recognised as means of conveyance, that it seems possible they might be applied to purposes of a military nature. War is grim earnest, but the milkman with his cans is also in earnest, and it suggests itself that the transport of ammunition or light machine guns might be effected by the aid of these machines. On roads and solid ground they would work well, but willing hands would be wanted in sticky soil, and of course a differently constructed wheel, as speed is not the desideratum."

DIMNESS of SIGHT.—Dimness of Sight and Blindness are often caused by the use of unsuitable Spectacles. Mr. H. LAURANCE, F.S.S., Oculist Optician, 1A Old Bond Street, scientifically adapts his improved Spectacles to strengthen and assist the weakest sights. NOTES FROM ALDERSHOT.

[FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.]

Squadron-drill, driving-drill, sword-drill, range-finding, and digging gun-pits for gunners will be succeeded on Monday by regimental drills in the Cavalry Brigade, and by battery drills under the Majors. The Infantry "setting-up" drills will continue for another week. Fatigue parties, except those of the most urgent nature, are discontinued. Even the work of reclamation has ceased, and a fertile source of grumbling thereby removed. Thorn and Church Hills are now used as training-ground for the companies undergoing "military training." Entrenched positions have been thrown up under the direction of Colonel Sir H. Elphinstone. This field-work instruction is not the least valuable portion of the month's training.

The Rev. M. Cuffe, for many years senior Roman Catholic Chaplain at Aldershot, will be placed on the Retired List on the 9th inst. Father Cuffe's retirement is a loss to the camp and town, where his kind words are familiar and welcome. A truly Christian man, foremost in the work of charity and in the alleviation of distress, his enforced departure from Aldershot is regretted by all denominations. The reverend gentleman has accepted an honorary chaplaincy at the Brixton Military Prison, and will be succeeded here by the Rev. J. Bellord, from Woolwich.

The three new Brigadiers assumed command of and inspected their Brigades on Tuesday. On Easter Monday, the whole of the Division (every available man in the ranks), with the 1st Berkshire and 11th Middlesex R.V. (which latter battalion will be attached to a Brigade here during the Easter week), will be exercised as opposing forces in the vicinity of the Fox Hills. The action will be fought in accordance with special confidential ideas which will be communicated to the Commanders on either side on the morning of the fight.

Deputy-Surgeon-General Wolseley, M.D., A.M.D., arrived on Tuesday, and assumed the duties of 2nd Administrative Medical Officer of the Division.

The Times of India says:—"The news that the Government rate of exchange for the coming official year has been fixed at 1s. 7½d. per rupee will be received by military men, among others, with something like dismay. Not that anything very much better was expected, but last year it was 1s. 7¾d., and the present rate of 1s. 7½d. is the lowest it has ever reached. We have particularly mentioned military men in connection with the rate of exchange because their case is peculiar, and we will once more very briefly touch on the points connected with the question as it relates to them. It is an old story, but it reveals a state of things so unsatisfactory, and involving such gross injustice to a large body of Indian officers, that we can hardly imagine it can long go unredressed. In 1868 new furlough rules were introduced into the Indian Army, and his Grace the Duke of Argyll, being then Secretary of State for India, defined what was meant by Indian pay as follows:—'In all future orders and references, furlough pay will be understood as the half Indian salary converted at the exchange of 2s. for the rupee.' Nothing could be plainer than this, but unfortunately in 1871 the rupee began that downward course which it still maintains, and the Duke of Argyll at once altered his tone and wrote:—'On a careful consideration of the matter, it appears to me that there is no reason why the pay of officers in this country (England) should be issued at a different rate from that at which those in India are allowed to remit a portion of their salary to England. I have, therefore, to request that your lordship will at once issue an order cancelling so much of that of November 10, 1868, as fixed the uniform rate of two shillings, and announcing that all payments of furlough pay will be made at the current rate of exchange fixed for the official year.' The official language here used might be plainer, but what the Duke meant was this. Officers in India are allowed to remit a portion of their salaries to England at the Government rate of exchange, therefore officers on furlough in England ought to draw their pay at the same rate. But why? No one has ever yet been able to discover exactly what his Grace of Argyll meant by comparing the two classes of officers, but what he did was soon evident. He simply cut officers on furlough some fifteen to twenty per cent. of their pay. But while doing this he made a curious exception, which has considerably enhanced the unfairness of the whole proceeding. The Duke's solemn announcement that henceforward and for ever furlough pay meant pay at two shillings the rupee, only lasted three years."

The Allahabad paper says:—"When Sir Frederick Roberts was Quartermaster-General of the Indian Army, he tried hard to get the question of 'places of refuge' at all large stations taken up in earnest; but there were many difficulties in the way, and the measures proposed were never properly carried through. In Madras he has, as Commander-in-Chief, again turned his attention to the subject, and has ordered places to be selected in every cantonment—to be called 'entrenchments'—where eventually works will be erected to be held in cases of emergency. The term 'entrenchments' has been substituted for 'places of refuge,' as there were obvious objections to the latter. At Bangalore an entrenchment will be made, by military labour, on a convenient and commanding site, and plans are being prepared for all other cantonments under Sir Frederick's command. It would be well if similar steps were taken in Northern India; not one of the great railway bridges is, we believe, yet protected by a tête du pont, though every one admits that such works are very necessary. We must wait, we suppose, for another Russian scare before anything will be done in this direction."

The Army.

1st Life Guards. On Sunday morning, the church erected by the 1st Life Guards at Windsor, in commemoration of the losses sustained by the regiment during the Egyptian Campaign, was occupied by the officers for the first time at a full parade. The stone carving of the exterior is very rich, and Egyptian in character. The mural decorations of the interior have not been begun, and oak stalls have yet to be supplied. The building, as a chancel aisle, will, when finished, form a very striking annexe to the church of the Household Cavalry. The architect, Mr. Stephen Wyborn, of Windsor, has done himself great credit. As this was the last occasion on which the 1st Life Guards would attend before leaving for London, the congregation was very large. The sermon, which was preached by the rector, the Rev. A. Robins, Chaplain to the Queen, the Prince of Wales, and the Household Brigade, was, as usual, extempore. In the course of the sermon, he dwelt with great feeling upon the qualities of the late Duke of Albany, and spoke of the high conduct of the regiment in Windsor; "it took back to London an unblemished record." The whole of the music, including "The Soldiers' Hymn," which was written by Mr. Robins, was taken with great effect by the full band of the regiment, whose playing of the "Dead March" in Saul was very fine. The regiment moved on Wednesday from Windsor to Regent's Park Barracks. The death is announced of Major J. Limbert, late Adjt. of the Regt. On retirement, Major Limbert was appointed to the Adjutancy of the Royal East Kent Yeomanry.

2nd Life Guards left Regent's Park Barracks on Wednesday, and relieved the 1st Life Guards at Knightsbridge.

Royal Horse Guards (Blue) left Hyde Park Barracks on Wednesday for Windsor. Lieut.-Col. Burnaby, who returned to London on Monday from the Soudan, rode with his regiment in uniform, cuirass, &c. He carries his arm in a sling, but looks in good health and spirits. As the regiment passed through the Royal Borough shortly after one o'clock, Col. Burnaby, who was at its head, received quite an ovation.

1st Dragoon Guards will not leave Rawul Pindee next winter.

2nd Dragoon Guards. Capt. J. C. Knox, late of the regt., died in London on the 22nd ult., aged 64 years. He was the youngest son of the late Right Hon. George Knox, LL.D., a member of the Irish Bar, and entered the regt. Sept. 13, 1833, retiring in 1847.

3rd Dragoon Guards. Major and Brevet Col. Stewart, C.B., embarked at Suakim on Tuesday for Suez.

4th Dragoon Guards. Major Currey completes his period of service as Adjt. of the Pembroke Yeomanry on the 19th inst.

6th Dragoon Guards (Carabiniers) will remain for another 18 months at Sealkote.

8th Hussars will not leave Meerut for at least 18 months.

9th Lancers remain at Umballa until the relief season, 1885-86.

10th Hussars. The regiment embarked at Suakim on Saturday last in H.M.S. Jumna, en route to England, and on arrival will be stationed at Shorncliffe. The death of poor "Monty" Slade should give Capt. the Hon. J. P. Napier his majority, with 11½ years' service. Should the step be allowed to be filled up, the regiment at the end of the year will have two supernumerary majors, as both Majors Combe and Spottiswoode will rejoin from Staff employ, the former's time being up in August, and the latter's in October.

11th Hussars. Capt. Taylor has proceeded from the Curragh to Aldershot as A.D.C. to Major-Gen. Fraser, V.C., C.B.

12th Lancers. An accident recently occurred to Lieut. Hinde, in a paper-chase at Bangalore. His horse fell heavily with its rider, who was conveyed to the station hospital, but according to latest accounts had nearly recovered.

13th Hussars will not move from Muttra until the relief season, 1885-86.

17th Lancers will spend at least two years at Lucknow.

18th Hussars. Capt. Butler has applied to join the Yeomanry as adjutant.

19th Hussars. The regiment left Suakim on Tuesday for Suez, en route to Cairo. We are glad to receive good accounts of the state of Lieut.-Col. Barrow, who is making most satisfactory progress, the gallant son of a gallant and ill-used father.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

The following changes of stations will be carried out during the relief seasons 1884-85:—Royal Horse Artillery: —F-A, from Umballa to Meerut; E-A, from Meerut to Lucknow; N-B, from Lucknow to Umballa. Royal Artillery:—D-4, from Lucknow to Agra; D-3, from Agra to Lucknow; B-4, from Pindee to Meerut; G-4, from Meerut to Allahabad; J-2, from Allahabad to Rawul Pindee. Garrison Artillery:—No. 5, Southern Division, from Agra to Theyetmyo; No. 7, Eastern Division, from Theyetmyo to Agra; No. 6, Southern Division, from Allahabad to Rangoon; No. 5, Welsh Division, from St. Thomas's Mount to Allahabad; No. 7, from Campbellpore to Morar; No. 6, Western Division, from Morar to Aden; one battery from England to Campbellpore.

The following officers have been granted leave to England from India, viz.:—Lieut.-Col. E. H. Dyke, for 15 months; Major A. J. Shuttleworth, for 15 months; Lieut. T. Robertson, for six months; Lieut. E. A. P. Hobday, for 12 months; Lieut. N. D. Findlay, for 12 months; and Lieut. H. Gutes, for nine months.

The Lahore paper says:—"The authorities have not succeeded in obtaining any certain information in the case of Major Innes, R.A., who so mysteriously disappeared from Delhi, but he is believed to have sailed from Calcutta in the Combermere, which ship left that port for England, viâ the Cape, on Dec. 6, 1883."

Lieut.-Col. G. S. Talbot, R.H.A., has been selected to command the batteries stationed at Newbridge and the Curragh Camp, in succession to Col. W. Shakerley, retired.

M Baty. 1st Brig. embarked at Suakim on Saturday last in H.M.S. Jumna, en route to England.

Major-Gen. W. Henderson, col. on the Retired List, died on Saturday at his residence in Kensington Gardens Terrace, aged 69 years. He entered the Army in 1833, obtained a lieutenancy in 1836, and his captaincy in 1845. He served in New Zealand during the disturbances in 1847, and was present at the repulse of 400 natives in their attack at Wanganui. He was promoted lieut.-col. in 1855, col. in 1858, and major-gen. in 1865.

Lieuts. Pelly, Trench, and Hughes, R.A., who are candidates for admission to the Staff College, have been attached for a month to the Staff, in accordance with Queen's Regulations.

Major E. Bainbridge has been appointed Secretary to the Ordnance Committee at Woolwich, vice Major C. H. T. Ellis, R.A.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

Capt. Green, R.E., has resumed duties as Brigade-Major at Cairo.

Capt. E. R. Browne has been permitted to accept service in Egypt.

Orders have been issued at Aldershot for the pontoon troop of the Royal Engineers, consisting of about six officers, 175 non-commissioned officers and men, and 110 horses, under Lieut.-Col. Bond, to march on the 9th inst. from the Camp en route for Hilsea Barracks, for duty in connection with the forthcoming Volunteer Review.

Grenadier Guards. The Central News states that Lieut.-Col. Colville has met with a serious accident in the Soudan, caused by a kick in the face from a restive horse.

2nd Queen's Royal West Surrey Regiment. The 2nd Batn. was to have reached Subathu on the 1st inst. from Umballa. The 2nd Batn. proceeds next winter from Subathu and Jutogh to Cawnpore.

3rd Buffs (East Kent Regiment). Speaking of the retirement of Major Mackinnon from his Indian Staff appointment, the Lahore paper says:—"The service has been fortunate in having had such an exceptionally good man at the head of musketry instruction as the outgoing officer has proved himself to have been. Every one who knew anything about Major Mackinnon and musketry hoped that he would be granted an extension of his appointment."

5th Northumberland Fusiliers. The 2nd Batn. at Chakrata moves next relief season to Ferozepore.

6th Royal Warwickshire Regiment. Capt. Harward, 2nd Batn., has joined the Pay Department in India, on probation. The 2nd Batn., at Fort William, will proceed next winter to Jubbulpore and Saugor.

7th Royal Fusiliers. Major Winter, 2nd Batn., has leave from India to England for 15 months, on private affairs.

8th King's (Liverpool Regiment). The 2nd Batn. at Ranikhet proceeds next winter to Fort William.

9th Norfolk Regiment. The 2nd Batn. leaves Morar next winter for Benares and Seetapore.

10th Lincolnshire Regiment. The 2nd Batn. is under orders to move next winter from Benares to Seetapore and Morar. Major Little, 2nd Batn., is about to retire. Major the Hon. C. C. Chetwynd, late capt. of the regiment, while crossing the railway at Worthing on Monday morning, was run over by a train that was being shunted, and was seriously injured. He was conveyed to the infirmary, where every attention was paid to him. All, however, was in vain, and he expired about half-past 11 o'clock.

11th Devonshire Regiment. The 2nd Batn. leaves Jullundur next relief season for Jhansi and Gwalior.

12th Suffolk Regiment. Capt. and Pymr. Sawyer, 2nd Batn., has applied to proceed to Cyprus for duty with the 50th Regt.

14th West Yorkshire Regiment. Major Hutchinson, 2nd Batn., takes up his appointment as Assist.-Adjt.-Gen. for Musketry in India on July 20.

17th Leicestershire Regiment. The 2nd Batn. moves next winter from Jubbulpore and Saugor to Lucknow. A correspondent, writing from Belgaum, says:—"General regret is felt here at the approaching departure from our midst of Brigdr.-Gen. G. T. Brice, who shortly vacates this command on completion of his tenure of appointment. During the five years he held the command of this district, he has always evinced the keenest interest in the welfare of the troops, both European and native; and he has also identified himself with various improvements in the Cantonment—notably the public gardens and band stand, which are a great boon to residents in camp. In connection with these chiefly, Gen. Brice will long be remembered in the capital of the Southern Mahratta Country." Gen. Brice formerly commanded the 1st Batn. The Bombay Gazette says:—"Col. Grant, of the 2nd Batn., stationed at Jubbulpore, virtually vacates the command of that corps next month, as he is proceeding on six months' leave at the time indicated, and afterwards goes home. Col. McPherson, second-in-command, who is on the spot, takes over charge, and will eventually succeed to the permanent appointment." The head-quarters of the 1st Batn. are under orders to proceed from Portsmouth to Aldershot on Tuesday next.

18th Royal Irish Regiment. The 1st Batn. has been placed under orders of readiness to leave India next winter for England.

21st Royal Scots Fusiliers. An exchange of battalions has been sanctioned between Majors Whitten, 1st, and Hewat, 2nd Batn. Lieut. Chichester, 2nd Batn., has leave from India to England for 12 months. Lieut. Agnew, 1st Batn., has been appointed A.D.C. to the Right Hon. M. E. Grant Duff, Governor of Madras, vice Lieut. Bagot, 13th L.I.

24th South Wales Borderers. Lieut. Burnett, 2nd Batn., has leave from India to England for 12 months.

25th King's Own Borderers. The 1st Batn., at Dagshai, moves next winter to Meerut. We learn from Umballa, on March 6, that the 2nd Batn. has been doing very well in the polo field. They played the 60th Rifles. Several of the players made splendid runs. In the second ten minutes of play, Mr. Gordon made the first goal for the King's Own Borderers. In the fifth interval of time, Mr. Boultbee secured a goal for the Rifles. This was followed by Mr. Taylor making two for the Borderers. In the sixth part of the game, the Borderers made four more hits, —by Mr. Gordon one, Mr. Mayne one, Mr. Reid two. The Rifles' ponies were tired and unable to hold their own in the last quarter-hour of play. The game concluded in favour of the Borderers by seven goals to one.

27th Inniskilling Fusiliers. The hon. colonelcy has just fallen vacant by the transfer of Gen. Rumley to a col.-commandantship of the 60th Rifles, in succession to the late Gen. Sir A. Cunynghame. Gen. Rumley has held the colonelcy since August, 1870.

29th Worcestershire Regiment. Major Watson is to be allowed to retain the appointment of Commandant of the Colaba Depôt, Bombay, until Feb. 24 next. He thus obtains an extension of 12 months.

33rd West Riding Regiment, at Nowshera, proceeds next winter to Rawul Pindee.

35th Royal Sussex Regiment. The 1st Batn. is now encamped at Mangabet, about five miles distant from Assiout. Both officers and men find their present quarters rather dull after the capital, but they are gradually settling down to their new surroundings. The battalion was to march into Assiout, leaving Mangabet at a quarter to 5 o'clock in the morning and arriving at Assiout about 7 o'clock, when coffee would be served out and after a short rest the battalion would be marched through the town and then return to its encampment at Mangabet.

40th South Lancashire Regiment. The regiment is to move next winter from Peshawur to Jullundur.

42nd Black Watch (Royal Highlanders). The regiment has returned to Egypt from the Soudan.

44th Essex Regiment. A correspondent writes:—"The regiment arrived at Aden in H.M.S. Serapis on Feb. 23, having left Madras on the 9th. One company, Major Morrell's, was left at Nagpore to await arrival of the 104th Fusiliers. Much disappointment was felt at being landed here, instead of going straight on to the Soudan. Only two days hence, on the 13th ult., however, a telegram came from the Admiral at Suakim to the General here, asking for 300 men at once. Consequently 300 of the regiment were ordered to hold themselves in readiness to embark, and every one was in high spirits at the thought of at last seeing active service, after a tour of nearly 13 years abroad. Every preparation was made, and the following officers were detailed to go:—Lieut.-Col. Rennie (commanding), Majors Bald and Hill, Capts. Wood and Massy, Lieuts. Hockin, Copeman, Carleton, and Merewether; Capt. Orman (acting Adjt.), Capt. Tempest (Qrmr.) All, however, were doomed to bitter disappointment, for to-day a telegram came ordering the regiment to stand fast, presumably on account of the victory on the 12th. There is but little chance of the regiment going on now, unless fresh complications take place. Major Pigott, who has served nearly 30 years in the regiment, and was with it in the Crimea and China, is leaving, on promotion to the linked battalion, the 56th, now at Alexandria. He will be greatly missed in the 44th by all ranks, with whom he has always been so highly and deservedly popular."

ROYAL MARINES.

Lieut.-Col. G. F. Blake, R.M.L.I., barrister-at-law, proceeded to the Royal Marine Barracks, Plymouth, on Monday last, for the purpose of examining Lieuts. B. H. Lee and B. C. Couchman in military law. These officers are reported to have passed a satisfactory examination.

Major Andrew Donald, R.M.A., has assumed command of the recruiting station, Exeter, from the 1st inst., relieving Capt. A. St. L. Burrowes, R.M.L.I., who has proceeded on two months' leave of absence.

Major Henry Gritton, R.M.L.I., has embarked in H.M.S. Malabar for passage to Alexandria to take up appointment as Acting Pymr. to the force of Royal Marines at that place.

Capt. J. W. Walker, R.M.L.I., has embarked in H.M.S. Pembroke, vice Major Gritton, appointed Acting Pymr. to the force of Royal Marines at Alexandria.

Major G. M. Shewell, R.M.L.I., Pymr. R.M. Depôt, Walmer, has proceeded on one month's leave of absence.

The appointment of Assistant-Instructor of Musketry at Chatham becomes vacant by the promotion of Lieut. Stewart P. Falls, in the vacancy caused by the retirement of Brevet Major Webb, on March 26.

54th Dorsetshire Regiment. We understand that there is no truth in the statement of the Pioneer that there is a probability of Col. Hughes's retirement. Although Col. Hughes was attacked with paralysis on the march from Peshawur, he has so far recovered that he has only been granted six months' leave to England.

57th Middlesex Regiment. Capt. Bellingham has been permitted to exchange to the 2nd Batn. (the 77th) with Capt. Warden.

60th King's Royal Rifle Corps. Col. Sir Cromer Ashburnham, K.C.B., has assumed temporarily the Governorship of Suakim. Lieut.-Col. Charley, 4th Batn., has been appointed to command the Pachmaree Convalescent Depôt, vice Col. Stockwell, who assumes command of the Landour Depôt. The 4th Batn., at Ferozepore, is to move next winter to Peshawur. The Irish Times states that Brevet Lieut.-Col. Cramer, 1st Batn., has been selected for the appointment of Commandant of the Royal Military Asylum, Chelsea, vice Col. Mackenzie, who retires under the age regulations. A correspondent writes from Suakim on March 31 that "all the troops are embarking or preparing to embark, with the exception of the 60th, who will remain here in garrison until they are relieved by Egyptian troops from Cairo." A correspondent writes from Cairo in reference to a remark in a recent number that, at El Teb, "the only regiment that would have had even a sprinkling of young soldiers was the 3rd Batn. of the Rifles," that "excluding the battalions that came from India," the battalion, "although unfortunately it has lost recently a large number of its old soldiers," is the oldest in the country. We do not think our correspondent quite touches the question. A "sprinkling" is not much, and we do not suppose he denies that there is a sprinkling, and we doubt if any battalion at El Teb had so large a number as the 3rd Batn., pro rata, "excluding the battalions from India," means a good deal. We knew the facts, which our correspondent supposes we did not know, when we made the remark, which was in illustration of a particular argument. We cannot say we envy the gallant Sir Cromer Ashburnham and his officers and men their quarters at Suakim; but if all follow the example of the officer who commands, they will "take their punishment" like soldiers.

61st Gloucestershire Regiment. Major Dickin has leave from India to England for 15 months, on private affairs.

65th York and Lancaster Regiment. The head-quarters and service companies embarked at Suakim on Saturday last in the Jumna, for conveyance to England. On arrival, the regiment will be stationed at Devonport.

68th Durham Light Infantry will proceed next winter from Allahabad to Aden, in view of its return to England in 1885-86.

70th East Surrey Regiment has been placed under orders of readiness to proceed home from India with the 1884-85 reliefs.

75th Gordon Highlanders. The regiment embarked at Suakim on Monday, on return to Egypt.

77th Middlesex Regiment. Capt. Warden, lately promoted, has arranged an exchange to the 1st Batn. (the 57th) with Capt. Bellingham, and will therefore remain in England.

78th Seaforth Highlanders move next winter from Lucknow to Ranikhet.

79th Cameron Highlanders. Extension of leave has been granted, on the recommendation of a medical board, to Lieut. Blackburn to Aug. 19.

82nd South Lancashire Regiment. We hear from Devonport that the order for the removal of the regiment to Aldershot has been countermanded. The Western Daily Mercury says:—"Residents of Devonport, civil as well as military, will be pleased to hear that Col. F. D. Walters, who retired from the command of the 2nd Batn. of the South Lancashire Regt. in April last, is about to resume active work in the Army. Lord Hartington has selected Col. Walters for the position of Assist.-Adjt. and Qrmr.-Gen. for Recruiting at Liverpool, and he will take up his appointment on the 1st of next month. Col. Walters's experience in bringing forward the South Lancashire Regt. to such a pitch of efficiency while he was in command—the regiment being composed of Lord Wolseley's beau-ideal, the young soldier—must have led Lord Hartington to make the selection. The Liverpool district is only now created for recruiting, and the Secretary for War has chosen the late colonel commanding the South Lancashire Regt. because of his knowledge in the training of recruits."

88th Connaught Rangers. The regiment proceeds next winter from Ranikhet to Shahjehanpore.

89th Royal Irish Fusiliers. The head-quarters and service companies embarked at Suakim on Saturday last in the Jumna, for conveyance to England. On arrival, the regiment will be stationed at Portsmouth.

90th Cameronians (Scottish Rifles). The regiment moves next winter from Cawnpore to Shahjehanpore and Ranikhet.

96th Manchester Regiment. Major Barlow has been appointed to the Quartermaster-General's Office, Simla, as an unpaid Attaché, for six months.

99th Wiltshire Regiment will leave Rawul Pindee next winter for Nowshera.

Rifle Brigade. Col. J. Carr Glyn, 2nd Batn., has been granted leave of absence from the 1st to the 15th inst., pending his vacating his appointment in accordance with the Royal Warrant of March, 1882. Capt. Maude, 2nd Batn., has been selected for the adjutantcy of the Tower Hamlets Rifle Brigade. The 4th Batn. at Jhansi and Gwalior will leave those stations next winter for Calcutta. Capt. Verner has been attached to the Quartermaster-General's Department, Aldershot.

1st West India Regiment. A course of instruction in stretcher-bearer drill and first aid to sick and wounded, under Surg. H. E. B. Flanagan, A.M.D., at the Station Hospital, Demerara, terminated on March 3. The course extended over two months, and was attended by officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of the detachment 1st West India Regt., Local Police Force, and Volunteer Corps. At the conclusion of the course, an examination was held by Surg.-Major MacAdam, A.M.D., and certificates of proficiency granted to the greater number of the class.

Pay Department. Capts. G. W. Mansergh and W. C. J. F. Nott, according to the news by the last mail, arrived in Egypt, and were attached to the 2nd Batn. of the Essex Regt., and the 1st Batn. of the South Staffordshire Regt. respectively.

Medical Department. Surg.-Major R. H. Robinson and Surg. A. L. Browne have leave from India to England for six months. Surg. R. T. McGeagh has proceeded from Cairo to Alexandria. Lieut.-Gen. Herbert is President of the Committee for the revising of Field Hospital Equipment Regulations.

The Auxiliary Forces.

YEOMANRY CAVALRY.

Hampshire. The commanding officer of this corps, Lieut.-Col. the Hon. H. G. L. Crichton, has just issued the following address to the regiment:—"Having now assumed command of the Hampshire Yeomanry, I take an early opportunity of requesting you, one and all, to co-operate with me in my endeavours to restore the regiment to its original strength and efficiency, for which it was remarkable. This regiment is the oldest corps of Yeomanry in Great Britain, having been raised in 1793 by the father of the present full Colonel of the regiment, Viscount Eversley, A.D.C., who himself joined the regiment as a private in 1815, and had command of it for 40 years in its most prosperous days, and who still, I am happy to say, takes the most lively interest in its welfare; and yet the regiment had fallen to so low an ebb in point of numbers, that it was found necessary to order its disbandment. This catastrophe having been fortunately averted, I call upon you now to assist me in two ways. Firstly, in augmenting the strength of the regiment by seeking for eligible recruits, and you may depend upon it that there are lots to be had if you will only take the trouble of looking for them. Secondly, by increasing the efficiency of the regiment, which can only be done by paying attention to the rudiments of drill, and I trust that no member of this corps will ever consider that ground work of drill is not worth learning, as I can assure you that the regiment which is best grounded in drill is the one best able to perform manœuvres of a looser description. Our cavalry regiments of the Line are few and weak in comparison with other nations. Therefore it is highly essential that the Yeomanry should not be allowed to drop, but should be made an efficient support to our Cavalry of the Line, and possibly some day become more intimately connected with them. During the winter months, I understand, it is difficult to hold mounted drills, but the best preparation for mounted drills are foot drills, and I maintain that every troop should fix one day in every week for drill, when the permanent serjeant will attend and give instructions, either practically, if the numbers are sufficient, or, if not, with models, and where no drill shed is at present used, I trust arrangements will soon be made, so that each troop will have the benefit of one. I hope shortly to visit the head-quarters of each troop, and to have the opportunity of seeing its members on parade."

Lieut. F. E. Fitzherbert, Staffordshire Yeomanry Cavalry, joined the Cavalry School of Instruction at Aldershot on Tuesday last.

MILITIA.

Col. Sir H. B. Loch, commanding the 4th Batn. Cheshire Regiment, has been selected to succeed the Marquis of Normanby as Governor of the Colony of Victoria.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

The Secretary of State for War has approved of the attendance of about 36,000 volunteers at the camp of exercise to be formed in the Northern Military District between May and September next. This attendance will comprise 65 regiments in Lancashire, Cheshire, Yorkshire, Staffordshire, Warwickshire, Derbyshire, Durham, Northumberland, Nottinghamshire, Herefordshire, Flintshire, Shropshire, Denbighshire, Northamptonshire, and Leicestershire.

The General Officer commanding the South-Eastern District has issued an order to the effect that he will not allow any Volunteers of regiments detailed to take part in the manœuvres at Dover to go over to France in uniform. The following orders with reference to the manœuvres at Dover and Portsmouth have been issued from the Home District Office, Horse Guards:—"The following officers have been selected for duty at the undermentioned railway stations on Easter Monday during the entraining and detraining of Volunteer corps proceeding to and returning from the field days at Dover and Portsmouth. Waterloo—Major Clarke, Adjutant 4th Royal Fusiliers, and Lieut. Anderton, 1st Batn., Grenadier Guards; London Bridge (L. B. and S. C. R.)—Capt. Cholmondeley, Adjt. 5th Batn. Rifle Brigade; Victoria (L. B. and S. C. R.)—Capt. Smith, R.H.A.; Holborn Viaduct—Lieut. Reynolds, 2nd Batn. Grenadier Guards; Victoria (L. C. and D. R.)—Lieut. Drummond, 3rd Batn. Grenadier Guards; London Bridge (S. E. R.)—Lieut. Abercromby, 1st Batn. Scots Guards."

Indian Army.

10th Bengal Lancers. The Lahore paper says:—"It is believed that Lieut.-Col. Strong will succeed to the vacancy in the Quartermaster-General's Department, vice Col. H. A. Little, assist.-qrmr.-gen., appointed to the command of the 12th N.I."

12th Bengal Cavalry. The Pioneer says:—"Brigdr.-Gen. Hill, commanding the Eastern Frontier District, proceeds home shortly on furlough. Col. Sir Hugh Gough, 12th Bengal Cavalry, will officiate for him."

4th Bengal N.I. The death is announced at Alipore of Major A. B. Douglas.

12th Bengal N.I. Col. H. A. Little, A.Q.M.G., has been appointed commandant.

23rd Bengal N.I. (Pioneers). The Lahore paper says:—"The regiment will probably return to Meean Meer from the Bolan Pass, early in April."

26th Bengal N.I. Lieut. Dennys has been nominated for employment on the personal staff of the Lieut.-Governor of the Punjab.

3rd Bombay N.L.I. Lieut.-Col. C. W. Yonge, second in command, has retired, on a pension of £595 per annum.

The Institution of Naval Architects held their session for the year during the past week, but seldom have the doings of this society evoked less interest. Not a single naval officer took any part in the meetings, nor did any members of the newly fledged Royal Corps of Constructors contribute. Could this have been due to the fact that the first professor of Naval Architecture of the University of Glasgow, Mr. F. Elgar, was chosen from outside the magic circle? Whether or no, Mr. Elgar read a most interesting paper, on "The Use of Stability Calculations in regulating the Loading of Steamers."

GARRISON EMPLOY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—A word or two with reference to the military police and orderlies employed in the offices, &c., of large garrisons. It is quite possible for a battalion having the nominal establishment of 610 privates to show, after deducting band servants and other regimental employ, sick, prisoners, a company at instruction drill, and another at musketry, one party of recruits at musketry and another attending gymnasium, a balance of, say, 180, and of these probably 110 are unformed recruits at drill. This would leave for duty 70 men; but of these, again, some 25 are lost to the battalion, as garrison police and orderlies. It seems a small number to be deducted from the nominal strength; but when this is reduced, as shown above, it becomes a considerable item. Now, these men, who are mostly the steadiest and smartest soldiers, and as times go, of some service, possibly averaging three years all round, and, as such, useful to set example to recruits on guard and generally in regimental duties, and whose presence would lighten such duties as must now fall on the recruit, and give more time to form him, might, to all intents and purposes, not belong to the battalion at all. There are a certain number of men required for regimental police and other duties, and when the garrison employ have been told off, it is hard to find suitable men for the similar regimental duties. These men referred to, again, are not even permanently employed in respective posts, as, what with instruction-drill and musketry, there is a constant relief of them going on; so that they have barely settled into the duties, before they are replaced by others ignorant of them. For the Garrison Military Police especially it is difficult to find men sufficiently steady and experienced to perform the duties with the requisite tact and fairness so necessary with the boy soldiers of to-day. I would suggest, then, that these posts be filled by reserve men attached to one of the corps in garrison, and as regards discipline under the brigade-major, or officer performing such duties. I take it that there are plenty of men to whom such certain employment, after the expiration of their first period of service, would be more acceptable than possible employment in civil life, with the chance of having temporarily to rejoin the colours at any moment. If not, the offer of their reserve, in addition to the ordinary pay, would doubtless insure the retaining of suitable men. The obviously great advantage of men doing work to which they were accustomed, an undeniable comfort to those in whose immediate service they might be, would be secured, not to mention the saving of work to the regimental staff entailed, as noted above, by the constant change of these men. In the garrison police especially the advantage would be apparent of employing men who from age and service were fitted to perform with tact and lack of regimental bias the not altogether easy duties required of them.—I am, &c.,

HALF-PAY MAJORITIES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—It has been asserted by some eminent individual, though I cannot recollect by whom, that a coach-and-four could be driven through any Act of Parliament that ever was framed. Such being granted, I feel confident that an excursion train could be driven through any Royal Warrant that ever emanated from the authorities in Pall Mall. For clumsy compilation, exuberance of verbosity, and general confusion of premisses and conclusion, an Act of Parliament is, to borrow a sporting term, not in the same field with a Royal Warrant. Unfortunately, however, the persons by whom these State Bills are framed are those vested with the interpretation of their meaning and the enactment of their penal clauses, a duty which is not unfrequently performed in a manner totally inexplicable to even the most diligent student of our military regulations. I would, therefore, solicit the favour of laying before your readers a typical case, which contains a question of vital importance to many officers now serving. A is a captain with 20 years' service, promoted to the rank of major on half-pay by Art. 10 (d), Royal Warrant, 1881. He remains unemployed for three years. His total service now being 23 years, can he retire on the retired pay of £250 a year, by Art. 972? I confess that, so far as I am able to understand Art. 100 of the same Warrant, which runs thus,—"A major shall retire on the retired pay laid down in Art. 972, on attaining the age of 48, or after being unemployed for three years continuously," it would appear that A is clearly entitled to the rate of £250 a year; but, on the other hand, I am informed (though I fail to find any article in which it is laid down) that all service qualifying for retirement must be full-pay service. As I am, unfortunately, one of the victims of compulsory age retirement, I should esteem it a great favour if some of your numerous correspondents who, like myself, have endeavoured to "read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest" the conditions of retirement, as set forth in the Regulations, would inform me if my view of A's case be correct or not.—I am, &c.,

AN INDIAN GRIEVANCE.

"A Subaltern" has lighted on a new injustice. Writing from Rawul Pindee on Feb. 25, he says:—"I beg to submit to you a question that seems to involve a grievance to subalterns of over 10 years' service, who are serving in the East Indies. As you are aware, a subaltern having that service, who may be serving in England or the Colonies, receives pay at the rate of 7s. 6d. a day, his pay being increased every year after 10 years at the rate of 1s. a day. In this country, however, he only receives 6s. 6d. a day as pay. Surely this should be remedied, as it cannot be intended that an officer serving out in this grilling climate should be in worse case than his more fortunate confrère in England. There are very few subalterns now in the Army who have over 10 years' service, and when so many are daily getting promoted after six and even five years' service, it is surely not too much for the less fortunate to expect that they shall be treated out in India to the same advantages they would have had if they had been serving at home.

The Navy.

Albacore, Lieut. and Com. Smythies, arrived at Malta on Sunday last.

Alexandra, Capt. Harry Rawson, C.B., has been ordered to Malta by the Commander-in-Chief.

Avon, Lieut. and Com. S. H. Thompson, received a new gun, and was out firing with the Naval Reserves on Tuesday. She will proceed to Bognor on Monday.

Briton, Capt. Rodney M. Lloyd, who has just been appointed to the command, has been nearly five years on half-pay, and, taking into consideration the commands which are likely to fall vacant during the present year, and the ships to be commissioned, it seems probable that some officers junior to him will have even a longer spell on shore before hoisting the pendant.

Canada, Capt. Durrant, having on board Prince George of Wales, was at St. Vincent on Thursday, having arrived there from St. Kitt's. On leaving St. Vincent she would proceed to St. Lucia, where she was due on April 1.

Carysfort, Capt. Walter Stuart, arrived at Malta on April 2 from Suakim.

Condor, Com. Jeffreys, went to Port Said on April 1.

Euphrates, Capt. Garforth, arrived at Bombay on April 2.

Express, Lieut. and Com. Knox, arrived at Malta on Monday last.

Flirt, Com. R. W. Craigie, having refitted at Devonport, has made a satisfactory trial of her engines, and will shortly leave the Sound for her station.

Hecla, Capt. A. K. Wilson, left Suakim for Suez on April 2.

Inflexible, Capt. Seymour, with the Superb, Iris, Falcon, Woodlark, Cruiser, Cockatrice, and Himalaya, was at Malta on March 24.

Jumna, Capt. Singleton, embarked on Saturday, at Suakim, the 10th Hussars, M-I Royal Artillery, 1st Batn. York and Lancaster Regiment, and the 2nd Batn. Royal Irish Fusiliers. She may be expected at Devonport about the 17th inst., where the Royal Artillery and 1st Batn. York and Lancaster Regt. will be landed, and the remainder taken on and landed at Portsmouth. She arrived at Suez en route for England on April 2, and proceeded.

Minotaur, Capt. Britten, flagship of Vice-Admiral H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, with the Sultan and Neptune, arrived in Phalerum Bay on April 2.

Myrmidon, Com. Carpenter, arrived at Suakim on Sunday last.

Northampton, Capt. Digby, flagship of Sir J. Commerell, was at Black River, Jamaica, up to March 8; she would leave on the same day for Bermuda, visiting Havanna on passage. The Canada would part company with the flag on March 8, and be employed as senior officer's ship on the Barbadoes division until relieved by the Garnet; she would then proceed to Bermuda, arriving early in May. The Garnet would remain on the Jamaica division after the departure of the flag, and would relieve the Canada on the Barbadoes division in April. The Tenedos was at Bermuda, under repair. The Dido was on the Barbadoes division; she would proceed to Bermuda on the arrival of the Canada. The Griffon would remain at Jamaica. The Flamingo would proceed with the flag to Bermuda. The Fantôme and Mallard were at Jamaica; they were to proceed on March 8 to Bermuda to refit for service on the Coast of Newfoundland. The Foam would remain on the Jamaica division.

Osborne, Com. Holland, conveying home the remains of H.R.H. the late Prince Leopold, Duke of Albany, K.G., escorted by the Royal yachts Alberta and Enchantress, arrived at Portsmouth on April 3. The coffin was landed on April 4, and was conveyed to Windsor.

Swiftsure, Capt., Aitchison, flagship of Rear-Admiral Lyons, was to leave Valparaiso on Feb. 21, arrive at Coquimbo on March 3, and afterwards proceed to Callao. The Constance will accompany the flagship to Coquimbo, and will afterwards proceed to Pitcairn Island, Honolulu, and Vancouver Island. The Satellite will also accompany the flagship to Coquimbo, also the Mutine and the Sappho, and will afterwards go to Callao. The Kingfisher will accompany the flagship to Coquimbo, and remain on the coast of Chili. The Heroine was at Esquimault on Jan. 26, will continue to conduct the duties of senior officer on the Vancouver division till relieved by the Constance; will then proceed to Callao, calling at Honolulu en route. The Sylvia was at Sandy Point on surveying service.

Swinger, Lieut. and Com. Marx, arrived at Sydney on March 30.

Tyne, Com. Cochrane, arrived at Alexandria on April 3, from Suda Bay.

Woodlark, Com. Kingscote, left Malta on April 2 for Port Said.

THE CHANNEL SQUADRON.

Marmarice Harbour, Friday, March 21.

After a stay of two days at Syra, we left last Saturday morning, the 15th. We made sail to a fresh beam wind which we carried till we passed Rhodes next morning; we had intended to anchor at Rhodes, but as the anchorage is not a good one for large ships, with a strong north-easterly wind blowing as it was then, the Admiral decided to come on here. We arrived here about 11 o'clock on Sunday forenoon. It was a very pretty sight to see the Squadron coming in through the narrow entrance, and performing the evolutions necessary for coming-to inside the harbour. We came through the entrance in single column line-ahead; after passing through the narrows, the Admiral stood across the harbour towards the village of Marmar; then formed columns of sub-divisions line ahead, turning to starboard, and anchored close in in that order. Our usual routine of drills and 8 o'clock evolutions have been suspended for this week, and all the ships have been painting spars and having a light refit. The steam pinnaces have had two days at steam tactics, and the Sultan has had her torpedo defence nets out for exercise. The Achilles rejoined us from Suda Bay on Tuesday morning. The weather here is perfect just now, warm and bright; there have been several scening parties away from the different ships. yesterday there was a cricket match between the Minotaur and Northumberland, which the flagship won, and another is arranged for to-morrow, the two flagships against the rest of the Squadron. On Wednesday there were two officers' races, one in the forenoon, and the other in the afternoon, the latter for gun-room officers only; they were both won easily by the Neptune's crew, which is a very good one. Last night there was a very enjoyable dramatic entertainment given on board the Agincourt; it commenced with the farce, "A Dead Shot," played by the blue-jackets; it was very well done, and the representative of the lady's part received great applause. A selection from "The Merchant of Venice" was then given. Lieut. Price read an account of the general story of the drama, pointing out how the scenes to be enacted were connected with it, and three scenes were played, concluding with the trial. The cast was as follows:—The Duke, Mr. Woolward; Antonio, Mr. Norgate; Bassanio, Mr. Cook; Gratiano, Lieut. Poulter; Shylock, Lieut. Hocken; Portia, Mr. Prowse; and Nerissa, Mr. Bellairs. It was excellently played throughout; Lieut. Hockin, as Shylock, and Mr. Prowse, as Portia, were especially good. The fortunes of the Jew and the Merchant were followed with great interest by the blue-jackets, to the greater number of whom it appeared to be all new. Shakespeare sounds rather ambitious for a ship's dramatic company to attempt, but the great success of their efforts quite justified the experiment. The combined bands of the Squadron played during the evening. We are expecting the Forward in to-day from Syra with mails; though we have not had papers for some time, yet we are kept posted in the latest intelligence, as the Admiral gets numerous telegrams which he kindly makes public for general information. We leave on Monday, the 24th, for Suda Bay, and will probably call at Rhodes on the way. A signal has been made that after provisioning and coaling at Suda, the Squadron is to go to Salamis Bay for ten days.

The Secretary of the Admiralty was asked, on March 27, by Mr. Gabbett, "whether certain Assistant-Paymasters of the Royal Navy, now serving as such, are not some 20 years in the service, instead of 14, as set forth in the question asked by the hon. Member for the City (Mr. Alderman Cotton), on the 20th ult.; whether it is not also a fact that optional retirement of paymasters is not allowed until the age of 55 is reached, and, whether, even if every paymaster who arrives at that age, up to the end of 1889, avails himself of the option allowed, the promotion of the assistant-paymasters of the standing of 1871 can be reached before about 18 years have been served in that rank; whether such officers will not have been then some 22 years in the Navy, and of an age of about 39, and whether the retardation of promotion which now exists will not continue and tend to increase until the year 1890." Mr. Campbell-Bannerman replied as follows:—"I believe that, excluding the case of any officers who may have lost time or promotion owing to misconduct, there are two assistant-paymasters who have been 20 years in the service. Optional retirement of paymasters is not allowed, except for ill-health, before the age of 55, which is earlier than the age prescribed for the civil service. No conclusion can be drawn from an estimate of the effect on promotion which would be caused if every paymaster retired at 55, because promotion depends on vacancies arising from death, dismissal, and retirement for physical unfitness, as well as optional or compulsory retirement. Owing to over entries in past years, it is quite possible that the time for obtaining promotion may be slightly longer than at present up to 1889-90, after which year it should considerably decrease." We anticipated Mr. Campbell-Bannerman's reply in our issue of last week, by informing our readers that the purely temporary "stagnation," stated to Alderman Cotton to exist, was in reality of a nature which could hardly be described as "temporary." We understand that the matter has been taken up by a gallant and distinguished Member of the House, who is one of the few who understand Naval matters, and that he will be assisted by Lord Henry Lennox, ex-Secretary of the Admiralty, and the Members for the home ports, and we hope most cordially that their efforts may have the effect of making the present conditions of counting service as assistant-paymaster more beneficial to those concerned.

Samuel Rogers, coxswain, 2nd class, of the Cambridge; William A. Snook, sick-bay steward, of the Malabar; Alfred Legge, commissioned boatman, and William Reynolds, boatman, both of the Coastguard; John S. Cudlipp, chief boatswain's mate, of the Dædalus; John William Lester, engine-room artificer, of the Fantôme; and John Duffy, chief boatman-in-charge, of the Coastguard, have been awarded the medal for long service and good conduct.

Lately, an order was given by the German Admiralty to one of the leading engineering firms of Germany for the construction of a large number of torpedo boats. Within the last few days two representatives of this firm have been to the works of Messrs. Yarrow and Messrs. Thornicroft to engage the services of the leading men. They stated that the German Admiralty expressly stipulated that a sufficient number of leading men from the Chiswick and Poplar torpedo boat works should be engaged, to ensure the boats being a success.

It seems scarcely fair that those assistant-paymasters who have been fortunate enough to obtain appointments in the Admirals' offices at home and in the two Royal Yachts, should be allowed to hold them for indefinite periods.

HOW TO AVOID THE INJURIOUS EFFECTS OF STIMULANTS.—The present system of living—partaking of too rich foods, as pastry, saccharine and fatty substances, alcoholic drinks, and an insufficient amount of exercise—frequently deranges the liver. I would advise all bilious people, unless they are careful to keep the liver acting freely, to exercise great care in the use of alcoholic drinks, avoid sugar, and always dilute largely with water. Experience shows that porter, mild ales, port wine, dark sherries, sweet champagne, liqueurs, and brandies, are all very apt to disagree; while light white wines, and gin or old whisky largely diluted with soda water, will be found the least objectionable. Eno's Fruit Salt is peculiarly adapted for any constitutional weakness of the liver; it possesses the powers of reparation when digestion has been disturbed or lost, and places the invalid on the right track to health. A world of woes is avoided by those who keep and use Eno's Fruit Salt, therefore no family should ever be without it. CAUTION.—Legal Rights are protected in every Civilised Country. Examine each bottle, and see the Capsule is marked "Eno's Fruit Salt." Without it, you have been imposed on by worthless imitations. Sold by all Chemists. Directions, in Sixteen Languages, how to Prevent Disease. Prepared only at Eno's Fruit Salt Works, Hatcham, London, S.E., by J. C. Eno's Patent.

H.R.H. the DUKE of CAMBRIDGE, K.G.
CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEE.
General H.S.H. Prince EDWARD of SAXE-WEIMAR, K.C.B.
OFFICE—40 CHARING CROSS, S.W.

This Asylum was opened in February, 1854, to provide a home for the widows of non-commissioned officers and privates of the Army of not less than 50 years of age.

There are 65 widows in the Asylum.

Each widow has a furnished room, and receives seven shillings weekly, besides a monthly allowance of two shillings and sixpence for coals.

The House is capable of containing 70 widows, and the Committee appeal to the public for funds to enable them to admit the additional number, the present subscriptions being insufficient.

The funded income of the charity yields only £930, with an additional £50 from the Princess Mary's Fund for Nurses, to meet an estimated expenditure of £3,000 per annum.

An annual subscription of half-a-guinea, or a donation of five guineas, entitles to one vote at each election, with the right of nominating a candidate.

Army & Navy Gazette.

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 5, 1884.

FROM the detailed despatch of Sir Gerald Graham which appears in the Gazette we understand more clearly how it was that the partial rout of the Second Brigade occurred, and if we read between the lines of the despatch, it would seem that some censure of General Buller is implied in the words to which we draw attention. Having described the formation of the Second Brigade, with which we are pretty familiar, from the previous accounts of the correspondents, Sir Gerald says that it advanced from the place of formation at half-past eight a.m., and "owing to some delay in getting the first brigade forward, were somewhat further in advance than I had intended when they first came in contact with the enemy." The obvious inference from these words is that, owing to a delay, which is unaccounted for, the Second Brigade was thrust forward into a position which it was not intended to occupy in the general tactical formation, and that it was, in consequence, exposed to the destructive attack which cast it into disorder. We do not, however, quite understand why it was, or how, that General Graham, who must have observed the relative positions of his Brigades, did not arrest the forward movement of Davis, when he perceived that Buller was not ready to support him. The description of the formation of the Second Brigade enables us to hit the blot, as the Arabs did. On the front face there were three companies of the Royal Highlanders, and, "at an interval of thirty yards, three companies of the 1st York and Lancaster." Let us see what happened. In half an hour from the time the second brigade advanced they were close to the edge of a ravine, from which "a large number of the enemy suddenly appeared." "Large number" is very indefinite. At any rate, they were soon cleared off by the Royal Highlanders, who apparently not recollecting that they formed part of a square, charged up to the edge of the ravine, distinguishing themselves by the gallant manner in which they did so, cheering as they went. "But at this moment," says General Graham, "a more formidable attack came from another direction, and a large body of natives, coming in one continuous stream, charged with reckless determination, utterly regardless of all loss, on the right-hand corner of the square formed by the 1st York and Lancaster." The Brigade fell back in disorder, and the guns of the Naval Brigade, which were in the centre of the square, and the nine-pounder battery, were left unprotected by the infantry. The officers and men of the Naval Brigade stood by their guns till the last, and, fortunately, locked them before the enemy laid hold of them, so that the Arabs could not turn them against the retiring infantry and the other Brigade, had they been sufficiently skilled to do so, a contingency to which we adverted in an article on the early receipt of the account of the battle. It is not clearly explained how it was that the guns of the sailors fell into the hands of the Arabs, while Holley's four 9-pounders, which were left unprotected, "exposed to the assault of the enemy now coming on in crowds," do not appear to have been captured. Yet, says Graham, of the Royal Artillery, "officers and men stood firmly to their guns, raking the advancing enemy with case, which told with deadly effect." General Graham has seen a great deal of fighting in his time, most of it long ago, and there is no one who can read his candid admission "that he was to some extent personally responsible for the disorder in the formation of the brigade," owing to the gallant rush of the Royal Highlanders, which he saw and approved of, with any very strong disposition to blame him, but it is plain that he was not quite master of the situation, and it will be said that he handled the troops unskilfully on that, as on some other occasions. "The charge," he says, "took place under my eyes, and with my approval." We can scarcely think that these Arabs have so much experience of formations of disciplined infantry as to justify the General's remark that "it is their habit to attack the angles of squares." It is rather their habit, we should think, to make for the place where they see they have the most chance of coming to close quarters with their enemy; and how gallantly they did so on this occasion is best recorded in the simple words of the General's despatch:—"They gave no time for further arrangements, and throwing themselves with desperate determination upon the angle of the square, broke it, carrying all before them." There were many attempted rallies among the York and Lancaster. No finer troops than the Royal Marines, on whom Graham calculated as a reserve in the last emergency, could be found; but such was the impetuous rush of the sword and spear men that the Royal Marines "were for a few minutes swept back, and mixed up in the general confusion." "Yet I submit," says General Graham, "there was no panic among the men." With these few simple words we may rest satisfied. Under the circumstances, no higher praise was ever given by a General to his troops. We learn that Sir Gerald was exposed to personal danger and inconvenience out of the common, inasmuch as an Arab got "over his horse's quarter," and must have been greatly surprised when he found himself in that unusual position, in close proximity to the gigantic form of the General. What became of the Arab is not stated. Altogether, after the perusal of this narrative, we are more than ever convinced there was a great deal to be thankful for in the end.

Lieutenant-General Sir D. Probyn is fast recovering from his sharp illness, and may be expected back from Norfolk in a short time. He and Lady Probyn went on a brief visit to Lord and Lady Romney, as soon as the General was able to leave London, and went on to his residence at Sandringham, having derived great benefit from the change of air.

We regret to see the death of M. Randon, who was far and away the most admirable delineator of the soldier à la Française who ever lived, announced in the Paris papers. His sketches, "Nos Troupiers," and his "Vie Militaire," &c., in the Journal Amusant, were quite instinct with the spirit of the caserne and the camp; and Randon represented, in a way no English, and, as far as we know, no other foreign artist ever did, the lives, the loves, the habits and customs, the looks and ways, and the whole existence of the soldier, en ville et en campagne, and was as full of drollery as he was of good-humour and love of his subject.

"Max O'Rell" could scarcely pay our Volunteers a higher compliment, when he says that they are "pretty sure to end their existence in their beds." This is a clear admission that as long as England possesses such a splendid force, she is free from all chances of invasion. Long may they flourish!

Neither Admiral Hewett nor General Graham will be particularly obliged to Mr. Onslow for his question with regard to the rewards the Government may propose to confer upon them; and his allusion to the peerages to Lord Wolseley and Lord Alcester will scarcely commend itself to the good-taste and sentiment of the country, but as an irritating thrust at the Ministry it was effective enough. Although Admiral Hewett did not bombard anything, he contributed very much to the energetic deliverance of the expeditionary force at Suakim and Trinkatat; and as far as fighting is concerned, the actions of El Teb and Tamasi were much more severe and, pro rata, infinitely more risky and bloody than the battle of Tel-el-Kebir. But it is not according to such considerations that military expeditions and military successes are gauged. The capture of Ghuznee was rewarded by a peerage, many greater services have passed almost unrewarded altogether; while similar examples might be adduced, from comparatively recent history, of the inequality between the appreciation of the Government and of the country, of the achievements of those who have been rewarded, and the magnitude of the results.

Major-General Walker vacates his Brigade at Aldershot, to take up the Gibraltar Brigade,—not an Indian divisional command, as the Times stated.

We may as well, perhaps, recapitulate the new appointments that have been made, which are as follows. We take the officers as they appear in the Army List:—

Major-Gen. R. G. A. Luard, from Commandant, Canadian Militia, to 2nd Brigade, Aldershot.

Major-Gen. F. A. Willes, C.B., from command of a Brigade, Aldershot, to command Northern District.

Major-Gen. C. C. Fraser, V.C., C.B., from command of Cavalry, Ireland, to command of Cavalry Brigade, Aldershot.

Major-Gen. M. Walker, V.C., C.B., from command of a Brigade, Aldershot, to command of Brigade, Gibraltar.

Major-Gen. L. E. Knight, to command of Brigade, Belfast.

Major-Gen. G. S. Young, from command of Brigade, Belfast, to command Cork District.

Major-Gen. T. C. Lyons, C.B., to command 1st Brigade, Aldershot.

Major-Gen. A. J. H. Elliot, C.B., to command of Cavalry of Curragh Brigade and Cavalry in Ireland.

Lieutenant-Colonel Furse, lately Deputy-Assistant-Quartermaster-General, does duty at Devonport during the absence of Colonel Butler on special service in Canada. Colonel Butler will be absent about six months, to report upon the state of the defences of that country.

We have seen an extremely interesting letter from an officer of the 42nd, from which we venture to give the following extract, in the hope that the graphic account of the "rally" and of the repulse will be read with pleasure by the friends of the officers named, and by a wider circle than it was intended for:—

"All our officers fought like devils, and how we only lost one I can't tell. God is good, and must have put his shield round our brave, gallant officers. The Colonel is a splendid man. He shot two Arabs dead, and would have shot more, only the Government revolver ammunition missed fire. An Arab threw a spear, and just passed the Colonel. Another threw a stone at him, and hit and wounded him on the head and knocked his helmet off, and he was bare-headed under a burning sun, till gallant Norman MacLeod gave him his helmet, and wrapped a cloth round his own head. Dear little Brophy was hit in the leg, and only saved his brave life by hanging on to the Colonel's horse's tail. When we rallied and formed line, I imagined I must be the only officer alive; but to my joy, we all met. Old Charlie Eden, as cool as if he were partridge-shooting; little Brophy lame, but pretending to be sound; Sandy Kennedy, with his eyeglass in his eye, and his wife's watch round his neck; Bald, a gigantic subaltern, sweating, and with a Blue-jacket's hat on,—he lost his helmet. Sir John M'Leod's son, Duncan, wounded, swearing he was all right; old Bob Coveny smiling with confidence; and Norman MacLeod, with his firm lips, thirsting for more blood; Speid, looking as calm as a Judge; and young Macrae, an Argyleshire lad, who only joined us the day before the battle, in his trews, and armed with a spear-head, crying to be at the niggers again. He is a splendid boy, and fought like a devil. All our officers had hand-to-hand fights with the Arabs. They pulled the kilts off our men, and one of them pulled the green ribbons off my kilt, but I killed him. They are most awfully plucky. I saw one man nearly dead, and he was crawling towards us to kill a white man before he died. I took a splendid spear, and killed a great many wounded men with it; it went into their hearts like lightning, and their blood flowed out on the sand. I had a narrow escape from a half-dead Arab; he sent his spear close to my leg, and I stabbed him in the heart."

Major-General Rowlands will relieve Lieutenant-General W. Payn, in command of a division of the Madras Army on the 21st inst. Major F. W. Hemming, 5th Dragoon Guards, who was A.D.C. to the General, continues in the appointment.

The appointment of Major-General R. G. A. Luard to the command of the 2nd Brigade at Aldershot is pretty convincing proof that the military authorities fully recognise the difficulties which the General has had to contend against during his sojourn in Canada, and that they do not blame him for the unpleasantness that has arisen by reason of his desire to promote the interests of the service over which he has been called upon to exercise control. General Luard will remain at Aldershot until April, 1885, when he will vacate his appointment on promotion.

We hear that Lieutenant-General Sir Henry Ramsay is about to retire from Kumaon, and return to England; and that he will be succeeded by Mr. H. G. Ross, of the Indian Civil Service. The tigers will rejoice.

The mysterious paragraph in the telegraphic news from Cairo in the Times of Wednesday refers, we believe, to a statement or report that Lieutenant Barton, of the Egyptian Army, had ridden off with the horse of Mr. Scudamore, the Times' Correspondent, in the debâcle of Baker's Army, and had thereby nearly deprived us of the services of the gentleman whose accounts of the action, and of the subsequent battles of El Teb and Tamasi, vindicated the claims of our contemporary to the position it held formerly of being the "leading journal" in the field, as well as in the City, and we may say in the world. Nothing better than Mr. Scudamore's descriptions of the military operations in the Soudan has been seen in print for some time, and when we consider that Mr. Cameron, the first of War Correspondents now at the front, was pitted against Mr. Scudamore, that surely was a very tall feather in the cap of the tyro, who seems to have inherited the literary ability of his father, whose lamented death at Constantinople was recently recorded. Lieutenant Barton demanded an inquiry into the truth of certain rumours about the horse, and Colonel Sartorius has officially recorded the fact that there was no evidence to sustain the accusations against him.

Major W. T. Ellis, 48th Northamptonshire Regiment, will be Acting Brigade-Major at the Curragh Camp during the drill season. He will take up the duties on May 15, and continue there until the middle of October.

Lieutenant Olivero, of the Italian Army, lately walked from Modena to Villafranca, by way of Mantua, between one in the morning and nine at night,—102 kilomètres in 20 hours. Lieutenant Richard walked from Modena to Forli,—105 kilomètres the same day. Five weeks later the two Lieutenants walked from Modena to Turin—298 kilomètres—in four days, in full uniform, carrying their cloaks and a small kit. Napoleon's most rapid march was 36 kilomètres in a day. Cæsar never exceeded 25 kilomètres.

A Major of Militia, in a very cogent and well-written letter, makes some replies to certain strictures by a Line officer on the assumption by the Militia of Line uniform. As to the silver lace, he says it was, "as you doubtless know, worn by the Regular Army long before the more modern gold lace. We did not want to be mistaken for Line officers. Some of us had our medals to show that we once had been professionals; but we all, I think, liked the distinction and distinctiveness of the silver lace. We were not ashamed of being 'only Militia;' for those of us who had read history remembered that among the downtrodden cornfield on the slopes of Waterloo there lay, one summer's day, near 70 years ago, many a lad stiff and stark clothed in a Militia jacket!" Bravo major!
